Not every collector of books is a student. We have known persons who had full book shelves and empty heads.

Whatever may be our conception of the method by which it is to be obtained, there is no doubt that our people need to seek holiness with a greater degree of earnestness. The possibility of a higher spiritual life ought to be insistently held up before every congregation. The church is undoubtedly suffering from a too low ideal of piety. We need to catch a new vision of the standard which God has erected and to strive faithfully to reach it. And happy is the pastor who in this important quest can say to his flock, "Follow me, as I follow Christ."

The secular papers told a few days since of a young lady who committed suicide because no one remembered her with gifts during the Christmas season. To take her own life was, of course, lamentably weak and sinful; but may we not learn a lesson from this reported tragedy? Do we manifest as much interest and sympathy in the poor, the unfortunate, and the lonely about us as we ought? Are not our lives too selfish, and are we not too negligent of the condition of others? The psalmist said: "No man cared for my soul." Are there any in our communities to-day who have a similar feeling? Let us see that there are not. Jesus died for the lowliest and most abandoned of the race, and for his sake, as well as for their own possibilities under divine grace, we should cheer with words of kindness and stretch forth a helping hand to any of this class within our reach. Beggars and outcasts had no inconspicuous place in the brief earthly ministry of our Lord.

Stalker in his life of St. Paul, says: "He would have been a remarkable man even if he had never become a Christian. The other apostles would have lived and died in obscurity in Galilee if they had not been lifted into prominence by the Christian movement; but the name of Saul of Tarsus would have been remembered still in some character or other even if Christianity had never existed. Christianity got the opportunity in him of showing to the world the whole force that was in it. Paul was aware of this himself, though he expressed himself with perfect modesty when he said, 'For this cause I obtained mercy, that in me, as chief, might Jesus Christ show forth all his long-suffering, for an ensample of them who should hereafter believe on him to everlasting life.'" God uses every person whose life and powers are surrendered to him, but some more than others. Capacity, whether inherited or acquired, counts in Christian service as it does everywhere else. It, therefore, behooves every disciple to strive to make the utmost possible of himself that the Heavenly Father may accomplish more through him. To be an ever-enlarging vessel should be the passion of every follower of the Nazarene.

THE WIDENING INFLUENCE OF CHRIST AMONG THE NATIONS.

In a beautiful Christmas editorial the editor of The Outlook, who easily ranks with the first writers of America, describes as follows the mighty transformation which the coming of Christ and the forces which he set to work have wrought in human affairs:

"There were good men and tender-hearted women on the earth when the star led the Wise Men to Christ; but peoples were estranged and alien to one another; cities hid themselves behind massive walls, and great gates were bolted at night against enemies who might break over the city like a furious storm in the darkness, broad-winged with terror and death. There was a brief hush in the tumult of war, but no inward desire for peace; a short armistice, but no growing sense of the horrors of war. A man might travel far from the golden milestone in the Roman Forum, but his road was a narrow line of light through vast regions shrouded in darkness and full of hostile peoples. There was a pause in the ancient struggles long enough to carry the good news of the birth of Christ far and wide; but deep-rooted antagonisms held their way and every nation was enemy to its nearest neighbor.

"Wars and rumors of wars still fill the air with the ominous roar of cannon and bring dread and the bitterness of hope deferred to the hosts of those who long for the peace that rests on justice. But what a throwing open of closed gates makes music in the ears of those who pray for the coming of the day of the Lord of peace! And how wonderfully through all the confusion and conflict the hearts of the peoples go out to one another, and nation cheers on nation in the struggle for the liberation of humanity! Old barbarisms still linger, and greed of land and lust for prosperity still find too large a place in the councils of the nations; but the protest against national selfishness grows more and more authoritative as the world becomes more and more a neighborhood. When Christ came, the world was a vast fortress; to-day it is a neighborhood; to-morrow it will be a brotherhood.

"When the light shone on Bethlehem, a man's neighbor was in the next house and of the same religion; all other men were aliens to him. His chief duty was to care for his own, and if his prosperity outran his own needs, for those who stood near him. To-day all men are his kin, and they that suffer at the ends of the world are his neighbors. Then, if he were obedient to the rule of his religion, he gave a tithe; to-day, if he lives in the spirit of his religion, all that he has he holds in trust. The sorrows of the world are his sorrows, and the burdens of the world are his burdens. The old lines of separation between people are still on the maps, but they are fading in the thoughts and hearts of men; and the old limitations of sympathy and responsibility are fading with them. A deeper meaning has put new duties into the old words of relationship; the mother has other children than those of her own household, the father other obligations than those to his own family, the brother other ties than those that bind him to his own kin.

"The world has a long way to go before peace and good will are the laws of life, and all men are brothers in a society in which a man's rank is determined by his service and the honor paid him is the measure of his unselfish integrity; but the circle of life has widened from the manger in Bethlehem until it touches the farthest horizons, and in the Christ the world sees more and more clearly the goal to which it moves."

SHOULD ELECT GOOD MEN.

The Advocate is not in politics, and it is not our purpose to champion in its columns the cause of any man now seeking office in the State of Louisiana. But we confess to a desire to see clean and upright men elected, and we urge our readers to vote only for candidates who possess good characters and who are regarded as trustworthy. Platforms and fair speeches amount to little; the aspirant's antecedent life is the main thing to consider in determining whom to support. We need quite a good deal of reformatory legislation in the State, and we shall never be able to obtain it at the hands of bad officials. From the governorship down, let us strive to secure officers who have wholesome ideals and who have the conviction "that a public office is a public trust." And especially do we need to guard against vesting with power those who are under the domination of the liquor forces. That the whisky interests will seek to elect legislators whom they can control, we need not for one moment doubt; and the moral element of the commonwealth ought not to be less vigilant and aggressive. It is the duty of every good man to go to the polls and vote, and also to exert the full measure of his influence to promote the cause of civic righteousness.

HIS FAME WILL SURVIVE IT.

Mr. Charles Francis Adams is reported to have made a spirited assault upon the military reputation of General George Washington. This is not the first thing that Mr. Adams had seen in a queer light. Indeed, the gentleman is rather noted for the oddity of his views. But he had as well undertake to dim the luster of the sun in the heavens as to lessen the distinction of the renowned revolutionary leader as a soldier. There has scarcely been a more skillful commander of armies in the world's history than Frederick the Great of Prussia, and he sent Washington a sword, accompanied by a note in which was written: "From the greatest general in Europe to the greatest general in the world." This estimate, emanating from such a source, will hardly be discarded by any one for that of a fireside critic who is little known as a military man.

REMARKABLE EVANGELISTIC MOVEMENT
AMONG THE PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.

A movement of a strikingly original and spontaneous character is shaping itself among the Primitive Methodists. Evangelical fervor and eagerness for evangelistic results are normal features of denominational life, but the present manifestation is probably unprecedented within living memory. A new spirit is gradually pervading the church, and there is every sign of a persistence and growth that, in the not remote future, may greatly add to spiritual power and numerical strength.

The origin of the movement cannot possibly be fixed with precision. The evangelistic aspect given to the recent conference by the Bradford friends did much to awaken expectation. Even more vital was the spirit of the conference, and, in particular, the conversation on the work of God. That session seemed to bring to the surface of the denominational consciousness the fact that a spiritual revival had begun. Behind the conference were the May synods. The resolutions of these twenty-six synods on the spiritual condition of the churches showed that, without exception, the delegates had brought to their diagnosis unusual discernment. Much must be attributed to the influence of the centenary celebration. The church wanted a centenary revival more ardently even than it desired a successful Centenary Thanksgiving Fund. The preparatory meetings were seasons of refreshing, and the whole program was planned in the confident hope of an accession of spiritual power, a hope that the spontaneous and magnificent gathering on Mow Cop in 1907 did much to foster and confirm. And the revival never came. Instead, three of the conferences during the centenary period reported decreases. The yearning for souls gave place for a time to painful perplexity. Primitive Methodism knows little of membership decreases, and a decrease three years in succession is almost unprecedented in the history of the denomination. The facts that the accumulated loss is less than two thousand, and that the net gain for the decade is over sixteen thousand, give no consolation. The losses in members and scholars have stung this virile people into new enterprise and activity.

The antecedents of the new revival appear to be the centenary on the spiritual side, and the membership decreases on the material. In response to the call of the conference for the formation of leagues of increase, districts, circuits and local churches are girding themselves for a great work. In the main, the new organization is the outcome of a new life. Nothing is stereotyped. The conference simply gave the call, leaving local bodies to form their own programs. Every sort of effort is springing up in the strenuous endeavor of the churches to strengthen their own internal life, and reach unconverted people in the world around them. Members are visiting adjacent streets for non-churchgoers and children who do not attend Sunday school. Parents of scholars are being visited in order to ascertain whether they themselves are attached to any of the organizations. The outcome of the movement is the revival of services in the homes of the people. In the West, a special feature is being made of the duty of parents winning their own children for Christ and the church. Endeavorers are forming bands to visit the homes of the sick and aged. Nearly all the districts call for morning attendance at worship, the staying to the closing prayer meeting on Sunday evenings, and the renewal of lapsed fellowship in the class meeting. Officials and members are urged to rebuild the fallen altar of home worship. Behind all effort of service lies the conviction that success can only come from a richer personal religious experience of the individual member.

The sight of a denomination promptly falling into line for a great united advance is significant and promising. But the manifestation of the new revival spirit in varied forms, and often under unexpected conditions, is even more impressive. It has become almost a commonplace during the past few weeks for business meetings to fall to devotional exercises. The same experience has marked all kinds of business sessions—that of reaching a point where prayer has become irresistible. In one synodical business session a leading official thanked God that he had lived to see a district committee turned into a prayer meeting. Practically all the committees that have met since conference have arranged for special devotional exercises with reference to the increase campaign. Many of the quarterly meetings that have been held during the present month have eagerly responded to the call of the conference, and in doing so have shown that the heart of the church has been touched by this new movement. Few conversions can so far be recorded, but the outburst of prayer for spiritual renewal and power to save men has marked many of the public services.

One of the hopeful features is that the revival is most conspicuous among the ministers. Some testify to new spiritual experience; more show an awakened heart to the needs of the unsaved, and an evangelistic fervor beyond anything that has characterized their ministry in recent years. Some of the leading preachers and ablest platform speakers are concentrating their powers on persuading men to immediate surrender to Christ. From connectional officers and college professors down to the rank and file, a new evangelistic ring can be discerned in public utterance. There is a new joy in many a village congregation because the traveling preacher in the little week-night service has spoken with an unction that has warmed hearts. If the ministers as a body concentrate on evangelism, the success of the movement is assured. The local preachers are always intensely experimental and direct in their preaching.

The movement is new and not yet free from the perils that beset infant life, the greatest of which is strangulation from over-organization. But, undoubtedly, the Lord is breathing upon the church. A Pentecostal wind is blowing through the ministry and membership, cleansing and invigorating denominational life. So far the work is partial, both as regards churches and ministers. If, however, it be noted that during the past two months more than half of the synodical committees have formulated plans of campaign, and that a large number of the September quarterly meetings have taken similar steps, not a few of them anticipating the probable action of their district committees, it will be seen that the movement carries the possibility of a gracious denominational revival in the near future. The promise at present lies not so much in the extent as in the reality of the new work. Programs, organization, activity are flowing from a fresh experience, a new spiritual life, a rekindled passion for souls.

The thought of the church is crystallizing into a three-fold aim: (1) The promotion of spiritual life and character; (2) securing a fuller attendance at the regular services, especially the fellowship and prayer meetings; and (3) a large accession to the membership by linking up persons of religious experience who at present are "hearers," and by making new converts. Alongside the plan of membership increase runs the ardent hope of improving the condition of the schools. Lapsed scholars are to be traced, districts secured for children not under religious tuition, and larger facilities provided for gathering juveniles into church membership.—British Weekly.

THE POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

By Dr. J. H. Jowett, in the Christian Guardian.

When the apostles received the power of the Holy Spirit, what difference did it make to them? What kind of dynamic does the Holy Spirit bring to men? What change takes place in the lives of men to-day when they become companions of the Holy Spirit? What infirmities do they leave behind? What new equipment do they gain? I turn to the records of the apostles' life, and I put my inquiries there. What happened to these men? What kind of power did they receive when they had received the Holy Spirit? First of all, then, I find an extraordinary power of spiritual apprehension. I know not how to express what I see. The apostles have a certain powerful feeling for God. They have a keen spiritual sense which discerns the realities of the unseen. It is as though their souls have developed latent feelers for the Divine. If we compare their dullness in the earlier days, before the Holy Spirit was received, with their alertness afterwards, we shall see that the difference is most marked. The Master himself describes them as "slow of heart." Their perceptions are blunt. They are dull to catch the spiritual side of things. But now, when we turn to the record in the Acts of the Apostles, we find this powerful sense of the Divine presence. It is as though a man has been sitting in a room with another man, but was only dimly aware of his presence; and then there came to him a refinement of his senses, and he gained a perfect assurance and a vivid knowledge of the other's company. The spiritual senses of these men were awakened, and they became aware of the "all-aboutness" of God. They have an intimate power of correspondence with him which makes the unseen Lord a most real and intimate friend. And along with this sense of the divine presence there is a refined apprehension of the divine will. Everywhere in the apostolic life there is a tender and refined correspondence with the mind of God. Everywhere communications are being made between the divine and human, and the human is strongly apprehending the divine. Sentences like these abound everywhere: "The angel of the Lord said unto me;" "The Spirit said unto Peter." There is everywhere this suggestion of an intimate walk and an intimate knowledge of God's will. Is not this a power to be coveted, and a power to be desired? And it is a power given by the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

I look again at the lives of these apostles, and I find them distinguished by magnificent force of character. In the early days they were timid, pliable, unfaithful. In supreme crises they deserted their Master and fled. They were as reeds shaken by the wind. The wind that blew upon them from the haunts of desolation—the keen, perilous winds of persecution—made these disciples bend before their blast. The men were negative, hesitant, uncertain, altogether lacking in persistent force. But now the timid and fearful have become positive and affirmative. There is nothing lax about them, nothing wavering, nothing yielding. Their characters have become strong, and steady, and effective. I say they have the two elements that are always found in forceful character—they have light and they have heat. They have light in the sense of clarity of purpose. Their outlook is not confused. Their aim is perfectly clear. If we watch them in the service of their Lord, we find them never to be diverted from their track. "This one thing I do." They have this primary element in a forceful character, the clarity of an undivided aim. And the second element in a forceful character is heat—the fire of a quenchless enthusiasm. And they certainly had this fire in glorious strength and abundance. The Acts of the Apostles is a burning book. There is no cold or lukewarm patch from end to end. The disciples had been baptized with fire, with the holy, glowing enthusiasm caught from the altar of God. They had this central fire, from which every other purpose and faculty in the life gets its strength. This fire in the apostles' soul was like a furnace fire in a great liner, which drives her through the tempests and through the envious and engulfing deep. Nothing could stop these men! Nothing could hinder their going! "We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." "We must obey God rather than man." This strong imperative rings throughout all their doings and all their speech. They have heat, and they have light, because they were baptized by the power of the Holy Ghost.

And I look again into the lives of these men who had been redeemed by the power of the Holy Ghost, and I find the energies of a glorious optimism. There is no more buoyant and exhilarating book in literature than the book of the Acts. If we sit down and read it at a sitting we shall feel something of the swift and hopeful pace of its movement. I do not know that in their earlier days we should have described the disciples as "children of light." They easily lost heart, and the cloudy days filled them with dismay. But now, after they have received the Holy Spirit, we find them facing a hostile world. They are face to face with obstructions, with persecutions, with threats of imprisonment and death. But nowhere do we find a desponding or a despairing note. Ever and everywhere they are optimists in spirit. And what is an optimist? He is a man who can scent the coming harvest when the snow is on the ground. He can "feel the days before him." He can live in the distant June, in the dingy days of December. That is an optimist—a man who can believe in the best in the arrogant and aggressive presence of the worst. He can be imprisoned in the desolations of Patmos, and yet can see "the Holy City, the new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God." He can look at a poor, wayward, sinful Samaritan woman whose life is scorched like a blasted heat, and he can say, "The fields are ripe already unto harvest." And this power of optimism is always operative in the apostolic life. I find it in the springiness of their soul. You cannot break their spirit. You cannot hold them down in dull despair. "They laid their hands on apostles and put them in the common prison." And what happened after that? The morning after their release I read, "They entered into the temple early in the morning and taught." And here is another part of the record: "When they had called the apostles, and had beaten them, they commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus and let them go. And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer for his sake." These men could not be held down. The spirit of optimism was ever dominant.

And with their springiness there was a marvelous spirit of joy. Theirs was not a dull buoyancy, but a radiant and a singing one. "And they raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts; and the disciples were filled with joy and the Holy Ghost!" "And at midnight Paul and Silas sang praises unto God!" Is not this the very spirit of power? These men had spiritual springiness, spiritual delight, because they had the spirit of Christian optimism, and this power they received when the Holy Ghost came upon them.

Do we wonder, then, that men of this kind, so endowed, have the additional power of witnessing for the Lord Jesus Christ? They witness by the arresting magnetism of their own transfigured character. They witness by their clear and enlightened apprehension of the gospel by which they have been redeemed. And they witness by the grip of their words, words which were vitalized by the undwelling spirit of God. And we, too, shall receive a similar power when the Holy Spirit comes upon us. The same power is offered to us, to fit us for our condition, to equip us for our life. And what are the terms on which that power is received? They are these—that we are willing to offer our life for God; that the offer be made in all sincerity, made in simplicity, made in humble trust upon the Lord Jesus Christ. It means that we are willing to give up our sins, to lay down our pride. It means that we are willing to receive the Lord as our guest, and to allow him to rule and to dominate our lives.

METHODIST CONFERENCES.

Mr. Spurgeon said: "When John Wesley died he left behind him two silver spoons, a teapot and the great Methodist Church." Methodism is indeed a great church. In its beginning and growth it may be likened to the grain of mustard seed that became the great tree, large enough for the birds to settle in its branches. Methodism has literally fulfilled this prophecy, as it has extended its terrestrial progress from land to land, preaching the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, transforming the minds and hearts of men and renovating society.

But it is not my purpose in this article to dwell on the greatness of Methodism, nor to discuss its history, but merely to give vent to some thoughts that have crowded into my mind.

Of the five Conferences of the Methodist Church, only one, the Church Conference, is regarded as of little importance. In reality it is a very important part of the machinery of Methodism, and should be held as the Discipline requires, which is not done everywhere.

The Annual Conference is the one, however, upon which I shall dwell. It is the oasis in the desert to the Methodist preacher. There is a tie that binds together the hearts of Methodist ministers, a love akin to that of Jonathan and David. What preacher has not felt a swelling of the heart, as he joined in singing, "And are we yet alive and see each other's face?"

The first Methodist Annual Conference was held in Philadelphia, July 14, 1773, three years before the Declaration of Independence was issued. There was only the clergy present at this assembly. The first Methodist meeting in America was in New York, in the home of Philip Embury, an Irish carpenter and itinerant preacher, who had received his appointment from John Wesley, in England. Although he did the preaching the meeting was planned and called by Barbara Heck, and for this reason she has been rightly called the mother of Methodism. At this first meeting in America there was but five persons present besides the preacher—the two Hecks, Mrs. Embury, John Lawrence and a negro woman named Betty, a servant of the Hecks. The second Methodist meeting in our country was held in an old sail loft by John Webb, a British naval captain, who conducted the service clad in all of the crimson and gold of his rank. The first Methodist church dedicated in the United States was in John street in New York, in 1758.

A few years later they realized the need of a revival and as the people were widely scattered on farms and wide apart settlements, camp meetings were inaugurated, the first being held in August, 1799, at Muddy River, near Russellville, Kentucky. In 1800 the revival wave swept through Tennessee and Kentucky. Men were powerfully convicted and converted. Many of the churches in those days were only arbors and log cabins. The pioneer Methodist preacher was noted for his heroic courage; he traveled over mountain and plain through dismal swamps and trackless forests. The strenuousness of these times might be seen in a significant postscript, in asking for a minister in a remote part of Tennessee, which reads as follows: "Please send us one that can swim."

Every sermon preached in those days had an object as well as a subject. The purpose of them was to win souls for the Master. They sang "Am I a Soldier of the Cross," and they enlisted as such. They were not expecting flowery beds of ease. I remember hearing one of these heroic men tell a bit of his experience when I was a boy: he said his first work consisted of a large circuit; he realized his sermons were poor efforts, so he wept over them. On the second round some one had the kindness to tell him that he couldn't preach, and if he was in his place he would quit and go home. One Sunday morning he went to his appointment and felt that his sermon was a failure; he was very much discouraged, and decided that he would quit. As he walked out to his horse there were conflicting thoughts in his mind. The thought of quitting brought no comfort; he felt, "woe is me if I preach not the gospel;" but I am a failure. He rode to a quiet place, and got off his horse to read his Bible. The Bible opened at the 126th Psalm! tears were falling fast from his eyes; he read down to the fifth verse: "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." It seemed a direct word from Heaven to him. He read the next verse: "He that goeth forth weeping bearing precious seeds shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." He arose from his knees happy, and has continued on and is still in the work, and doubtless there will be thousands at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for him, as sheaves for his hire.

Christ says, "Lo, I am with you always." Let us praise Him for His presence and the victory in His name, and for the love that binds our hearts together as brethren.

"Blest be thee tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear,
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE.

"She hath gone in the spring time of life,
From the lovely who loved her too well;
Like a dream of the night her sweet spirit
Hath flown from this world of unrest
To repose on the bosom of God."

Flowers far more exquisite than were ever blown in my garden, and hands more deft than mine to weave them are needed for her memory, whom we here commemorate.

In the home of her devoted parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Galloway, on October 2, 1911, at 10:30 in the morning, the beautiful spirit of Lucie Mabel passed into the city of God.

To those of us who have known her during these six years of suffering, so patiently borne, any eulogy which I might write of her life would seem like holding a dim lantern to view more clearly the brilliant art of the sun.

The moving spirit of her life was heaven begun within, and we must wait until we see her in her heavenly home, through spiritual eyes and in an atmosphere that casts no shadows, before we can do justice to the inner life and character of this beautiful soul. Her faith in God, her devotion to her family and her friends and her faith in humanity were boundless. I have never known any one who saw more clearly than she the possibilities of good in everything. She lived in such harmony with her Christ that she looked upon the toil-worn, the discouraged and sinful about her from the standpoint of her Lord. Underneath the frayed and tattered garments of broken and sinful humanity, she ever saw the hidden possibilities of Christ.

Though physically as fragile as a flower, her whole nature was vitalized, and she seemed to utilize every ounce of her strength and power. Her vivacity, breadth of interest and capacity for work, were evidenced by her varied activities, but her endurance can only be explained by recalling her passion for human service. The last public work that she did was in the interest of the Sunday School. As she would go through the bleak winds on Sunday morning to teach the way of truth to the class of boys that had been given her, her mother would often say to her, "My child, you are taxing your strength too much." Her reply would invariably be, "Oh, mamma, let me work; if it is God's will to take me, I would rather go in the discharge of duty, than to rust out."

The past several months she was confined to her home, but even in her failing strength she did beautiful needlework, which her friends were eager to purchase of her, the proceeds of which she placed in a purse to pay her church dues, saying, "If I pay through my own efforts, the blessing to me will be greater."

When she was in school at Whitworth College, she then gave evidence of the remarkable qualities of mind and character which were afterwards so thoroughly exemplified in her useful life.

All during her long illness her solicitude for the comfort of her mother and sisters was most pathetic; though at times her suffering was intense, she would suppress it all, for fear she would add one more pang to the already broken and bleeding heart.

As twilight fell on her last Sabbath, hope died in our yearning hearts, for we saw that the full glory of another life was soon to break over our loved one's earthly horizon. Kneeling beside her bed, her pastor read from the Bible some sweet promises and prayed for her safe passage over the river. As he left her he took her hand in his and said, "Miss Mabel, when we cross over on the other side we will never more grow tired or weary." And her beautiful reply was, "How sweet to know that I have no fear of the crossing."

On Monday morning her saintly spirit passed out, but we are so glad she was permitted to realize her cherished wish—that she might fully know when the Master called for her. Thus calm and composed she entered into rest.

Into this brief life of twenty and nine years there has been crowded so much of pain and suffering, and how bravely she has borne it all! Her sweet influence is needed in the home, in the church and everywhere, but she has only gone away to rest a little while, free from the confining walls of the body, and in closer touch with all heaven, where she loves us still and from its beautiful portals is watching our lives to inspire, to whisper to our consciences thoughts of what we ought to do.

Father, mother, brother, sisters and friends, the same hand of love that led her is leading us, too. So let us make this sad but sweet day a time of consecration for us all. Then we will emulate that love, that sympathy, that charity that she so beautifully exhibited in all her life. And we shall be more loving, more faithful, more self-sacrificing and more devoted to our God, to our home and to our friends.

The funeral services were conducted Tuesday morning, October the third, by her pastor, Rev. R. F. Witt, assisted by Rev. M. L. Burton, Rev. W. T. Griffin and Rev. J. L. Sells. The casket, all covered with roses, lilies and ferns, was borne to its resting place by nine of her Sunday school pupils. A hushed and reverent company of grief-stricken relatives and friends laid the precious form to rest in Long Beach cemetery. After the gentle covering in the soft warm garments of mother earth, friends spread over it their gifts of flowers until the precious mound was one fragrant mantle of bloom.

"There is weeping on earth for thee, sweet Mabel;
There is bowing in grief to the ground!
But rejoicing and praise 'mid the sanctified host,
For a spirit in paradise found!
Though brightness hath passed from the earth,
Yet a star is new born in the sky,
And thy soul hath gone home to the land of its birth,
And a new harp is strung, and a new song is given,
To the breezes that float o'er the gardens of heaven."

ACKNOWLEDGING CLAIMS OF WOMEN.

Little by little Russian law is acknowledging the claims of women. Though the peasants are as obstinately against them as ever, the professional classes are getting things done. The Duma has under its consideration a private bill for the regulation of women's inheritance laws. Up till now, women who have brothers living can inherit only one-fourteenth part of their parents' real estate and one-eighth of their personal property. Half-sisters and girl-cousins have no rights at all, so long as their brothers are living. Two years ago, twenty-three members introduced a bill to give to women the same rights of inheritance as their brothers. Though they cannot do so in the case of a will being made, the testators will now be allowed to leave their daughters more than one-fourteenth, or one-eighth part, on condition that their shares do not exceed the brothers' or mothers—an impossibility at present. When the bill becomes a law, it will make things far better for Russian women; but its opponents fear it will cause family estates to be broken up in a couple of generations. The law of entail will also be altered, so that heirs can sell estates which hitherto have been unsalable.—American Woman's Review.

Don't waste life in doubts and fears; spend yourself on the work before you, well assured that the right performance of this hour's duties will be the best preparation for the hours or ages that follow it.—Ralph W. Emerson.

Missionary offerings in the United States are reported to have increased from $6,114,759 in 1900 to $13,358,000 in 1911.

Bishop J. W. Bashford has had at least one Pauline experience in China. He was shipwrecked some two months ago on the Yangtze river.

Winston-Salem, North Carolina, is to have a new Southern Methodist Church to cost $50,000. The corner stone was laid on December 10, by J. C. Kilgo.

The Christian Guardian says it is strange that British Methodism has no college either at Oxford or Cambridge. There is now talk of building one, and a subscription of $25,000 has been volunteered for this purpose.

President W. P. Few, of Trinity College delivered the principal address at the inauguration of Dr. C. M. Bishop, president of the Southwestern University, at Georgetown, Texas. The North Carolinian returned with the additional title of LL.D.

Dr. B. M. Tipple, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Rome, Italy, and the head of the Methodist College and Theological Seminary in that city, sailed for home from New York on Dec. 12. The main purpose of Dr. Tipple's visit to America was to attend the Ecumenical Conference in Toronto.

A second attempt to establish the Salvation Army in Russia has resulted in failure, the Council of Ministers having lately refused its permission. General Booth tried to extend the work to this Empire in 1909 and visited St. Petersburg to confer with the Government on the subject, but being opposed by the Holy Synod, his efforts were fruitless.

Bishop John H. Vincent recently gave his great series of lectures, entitled, "Seven Days' Study of Church Life," at Rochelle, Ill. While there he delivered, one afternoon, his "Story of a Southern Poet," which is a beautiful tribute to Sidney Lanier. It is said that this former prince of the platform still retains his power to bewitch and inspire an audience.

Dr. Campbell Morgan is having a notably successful pastorate in London, where he is beginning his eighth year at Westminster Chapel. Great crowds are attracted by his pulpit ministrations. The church services, as he conducts them, are simple, and his sermons are long, but earnest and spiritual. He is represented as having a distaste for sensationalism in any form.

The Madison Avenue Baptist Church, of New York City, is struggling to secure an endowment of $300,000. Of this amount, it has been announced that $200,000 has been provided for. The leaders of this congregation are said to hold the view that the church in New York which does not thus entrench itself and provide for future contingencies is liable to have an uncertain career in the future.

Dr. S. A. Steel has been elected president of the Memphis Conference Female Institute for a term of three years, and commissioned to raise $30,000 for that worthy institution, which is to be met by an equal amount, contributed by the citizens of Jackson, Tenn. The Doctor deserves to succeed in this undertaking, and if stirring eloquence will open the pocketbooks of the Methodists of the Volunteer State, he will do so.

More and more complete becomes the wreck of the Christian Catholic Church, founded by John Alexander Dowrie. The latest is that even his son, Gladstone Dowrie, has forsaken it, and is studying to become an Episcopal rector. This young man is a law graduate and practiced for a time in Michigan. He is reported to have pronounced his father insane for some time before his death.

Dr. J. H. Jowett, the imported pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, is proving to be a drawing preacher in New York City. The mid-week service is reported to have an attendance of five hundred, and on Sunday the people are said to be turned away for the want of room. The seating capacity of the house of worship is 1900, which strikes us as small for a famous church in a metropolis of several million population.

The Oskaloosa District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held at What Cheer, Ia., memorialized the approaching General Conference not to change the paragraph of the Discipline Dealing with amusements. It is stated in the paper adopted that any alteration would likely be interpreted as giving members the right to dance, play cards and attend theatres without violating their church vows. This same body petitioned for the restoration of the time-honored name "presiding elder," in face of the substitute "district superintendent."

The General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church held its annual session in New York City on December 14 and 15. It was stated at this time that every dollar of the appropriations to Southern schools for the past year had been paid, and "that the work in the mountain regions of the South is now more nearly systematized than in any other part of the church." From this it would seem that our "big sister" is disposed to discriminate in favor of her institutions down in Dixie. This Board assisted during the school year ending July 1, 1911, 981 students, distributed among twenty-six nationalities and races. Its receipts for the past quadrennium showed a net gain of $173,048.

Rev. J. S. Peters has severed his connection with the Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate and has been succeeded by Rev. C. H. Lambeth, who will be the managing editor of this historic publication. Owing to his engrossing duties in promoting the establishment of the Southern Assembly, near Waynesville, N. C., Dr. James Cannon will not participate in the active management of the paper, but will continue to be a regular contributor to its columns. Dr. R. H. Bennett will edit the Missionary Department, and the Rosebud page will be under the supervision of Mr. F. L. Kerns. The Advocate is also to have new quarters in Richmond, at the southwest corner of Ninth and Franklin Streets, who looking the Capitol Square. Mr. Lambeth, who will be in immediate control, has been editorial writer for the Richmond Virginian for several months, in which position he evinced uncommon journalistic gifts.

$102 Pays Board, Tuition, Laundry, Medical, Library and Lyceum Fees to close of session. Those who secure duties reduce this to $77. Port Gibson Female College, Port Gibson, Miss.

The Mississippi State Legislature convened last Tuesday morning.

The Royal College of Surgeons in London last week admitted Eleanor Collet to their fellowship. She has the distinction of being the first woman to gain this position.

The death of John Bigelow, journalist, author and diplomat, in New York city last week, took from America another of her most noted men. He was 94 years of age when he died.

General Fred Grant, of the United States Army, visited New Orleans officially last Tuesday. This is his first visit to the Crescent City since he came with his father, General U. S. Grant, in 1880.

During the eleven months ending Nov. 30, the United States purchased from foreign countries $139,500,000 worth of materials. Evidently we are not yet ready to live entirely on our home products.

An interesting item in the report of the bureau of statistics of the agricultural department of the United States for the period from 1900 to 1910 is the fact that farm lands have increased more than 100 per cent in valuation.

A thousand head of cattle were drowned in Cameron Parish, La., last week. This great loss to the farmers of that section is worth the notice of our government, and sufficient drainage should be provided to safeguard the property of the inhabitants.

New York City has been cleaning out the bakeries. Two thousand places were visited and 250 closed last week. The authorities rightly hold that a bakery in an unsanitary condition is a menace to public health, and is, therefore, a public nuisance.

Great Britain plans to girdle the world with wireless telegraph stations. This will free her from dependence on cable service in case of war. However, she will be handicapped by the fact that wireless messages sometimes fall into the hands of strange stations.

On December 26, Admiral George Dewey celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday. He is yet in active service and is in perfect health, accomplishing all the duties of his office with as much ease as any of his younger associates. "Congenial employment," says Mr. Dewey, "is the secret of health."

Witchcraft received official recognition at Fort Dodge, Iowa, recently, when the city council paid a water-witch $20 for locating an artesian well. The water-witch located the well on the first trial, and the council entered no protest to his bill, but some of the skeptics are a little uneasy about the precedent.

A convention of delegates has been called in China to be composed of men from all parts of the Empire. This convention is to decide the form of government for China in the future. The future of the sleeping kingdom promises better things and, doubtless, a limited republican form of government will be adopted.

It is estimated that England golf players spend annually $35,000,000, and an equal amount is spent in the United States. A nine-hole golf course requires forty to fifty acres of land, each golf ball costs 75 cents, and each club costs $2.50 to $3. No wonder golf is the game of the wealthy, while the masses of amusement hunters turn to baseball and the less expensive sports.

Mrs. Tom Thumb, the smallest woman in the world, visited President Taft, the largest physically of all the Presidents of the United States, last Thursday. Mrs. Thumb has visited every President since Lincoln, and freely expresses her opinion about each of them. She believes Cleveland and Taft are the most pleasant socially, of all the chief executives.

W. Morgan Shuster, the deposed American Treasurer-General of Persia has made one of the most remarkable records of any man now living. With but a high school training, he has risen from a soldier boy to a position where he claimed the attention of two nations and occupied the spot light center of the world's notice. He is but thirty-four years old.

December 26, marked the 100th anniversary of the burning of the Richmond, Va., Theater during which scores were burned to death, including the Governor of Virginia. As a monument to the dead an Episcopal Church was erected, and in this church a centennial memorial service was held, during which Bishop Gibson, Mayor Richardson and Governor Mann spoke.

Wood is rapidly becoming the raw material out of which our clothes are made. The silk worm learned that lesson long ago, and from it a Frenchman learned the secret. Trimmings for hats, braids for dresses, woven neckties, ribbons, thread and many other forms of cloth are made of wood. This is a wooden age, and one journal goes so far as to suggest that some men are blockheads.

Twenty-nine human lives were lost in New England and four in New Brunswick during the hunting season which recently closed, while 10,000 deer, 300 moose and hundreds of other beasts were killed. Of the human offering to the life of sport, five were mistaken for deer, twelve were killed by their own guns, thirteen fell by the accidents of others, two were drowned and one died of exposure.

George Bridges was arrested last week at Monnessen, Pa., carrying a suit case containing 72 sticks of dynamite and a roll of fuse. He declared that others were implicated in the proposed malicious use of the dynamite. It is presumed that the explosives were intended as "arguments" against the eight thousand non-union men employed at Monnessen. The unions are as much interested and concerned in ridding themselves of the criminal element as is the government in bringing the vicious to justice.

Andrew Carnegie recently gave a list of the twenty men who he considers has done the most to make the world what it is to-day. The following is the list: Shakespeare, Morton, Jenner, Neilson, Lincoln, Burns, Gutenberg, Edison, Siemens, Bessemer, Mushet, Columbus, Watt, Bell, Armstrong, Franklin, Murdock, Hargreaves, Stephenson, and Symington. A reporter who was present when the list was given mentioned that none of these men were money-makers. "Money!" exclaimed Mr. Carnegie, "anybody can make money. These men have done something for the world. Money is a bother. The great trouble about this world is not how to get money, but how to get rid of it wisely."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE EVANGELISM.

Applications for the services of Rev. A. W. Turner in revival meetings should be sent direct to Rev. W. H. Coleman, Ruston, La., who is chairman of the Evangelistic Committee appointed by the Louisiana Conference. Brother Turner has been appointed Conference evangelist in accordance with the plan suggested by the Home Department of the General Board of Missions, and also by the special committee on evangelism appointed by the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions, to suggest a plan for action. The Evangelistic Committee, who will make Brother Turner's dates, consists of W. H. Coleman, N. E. Joyner and myself.

In my judgment, it is an error to call him missionary evangelist, as this title belongs rather to the evangelist employed to hold meetings in mission territory. It is expected that Brother Turner's meetings will pay his salary, through collections taken by himself and turned in to the treasurer of the Board of Missions—not as missionary money, but as a special evangelistic fund.

The Conference adopted two other recommendations—one, that any pastor who thinks that the special need of his charge requires the service of an outside evangelist, is advised to contract for one of the general evangelists who are under the direction of the General Evangelistic Committee; that is, of course, if the plans of this committee have been completed. The other—that every pastor who is willing to give as much as ten days to assist in revival work, without compensation other than necessary expenses, is asked to send his name promptly to Brother Coleman. The collections taken in these meetings will go into the evangelistic fund.

I second Brother Coleman's call, that our evangelist be given an opportunity in the very first weeks of the year. R. H. WYNN, Secretary.

DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER APPOINTED.

In planning and praying for an advance movement in missions, it has become plain to us that such a movement must begin in prayer. "We must advance on our knees." Nothing else can set the whole Church in the right attitude or bring the needed power. Hence it has been decided in the Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Council and by the Secretaries of the General Board and by the unanimous vote of the large and representative body of men now in session in the Mid-winter Institute in this city, that a call should go forth for a day of fasting and prayer. Jan. 11 has been fixed upon as a suitable day. We earnestly request our pastors, congregations, missionary societies and missionary committees throughout the entire Church to observe that day as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

LETTER FROM ST. LOUIS.

The "Men and Religion Forward Movement" began in this city Oct. 30, under the direction of organizers. By the help of the pastors, committees were formed in each church to stress and pursue the work of missions, Bible study, evangelism, social service, and work among boys. The pastors were asked to furnish to the secretaries the names of five picked men for each of these branches of service in their respective churches. About four weeks were employed in organizing this force. Then came the eight days' campaign of normal instruction by so-called experts, in institutes and assemblies in all these branches of service. During the eight days, from Dec. 2 to 10, the lectures in institutes and conventions were by able men and were very earnest and of a high order. The congregations were picked men, representing, substantially, all of our Protestant churches. So it was assumed that the heart of the church was reached. The cost of the campaign was, I understand, about $15,000.

What is the significance of this movement, and what will come of it? The fundamental fact on which the movement is based is that a vast amount of power for advancing the cause of Christ is unused in our churches. The movement essays to organize and set to work this latent power—a work which the pastors should do; which they alone can do. It proposes to teach them how to perform. Whether these experts have accomplished in their own pastoral charges what they commend to us we know not. But the movement stresses a manifest need. It proposes to aid the pastor. It is really a reproof of the ordinary pastor's work. The real point at issue, I illustrate:

Some years since, in conversation with the pastor of a large city church, I insisted that a great evangelistic work could be done by organizing bands and sending them out, especially on Sunday afternoons and nights, to hold meetings in halls and other places where no church-goers could be reached. The pastor recognized the reserve force held inactive in his church, but objected to the plan because it would diminish his own audiences at the stated services. The example shows us where the difficulty lies. Fine houses of worship, large congregations and good salaries are made the criteria of successful pastorates, but they are by no means the measure of spiritual power, nor of the pastor's fidelity to the cause of the Master. Where is the spirit of Wesley? Should not we Methodists, at least, look unto the hole of the pit from whence we were digged?

A false ideal of success not only holds inactive thousands upon thousands of our laymen, filling the pew and the contribution basket as the measure of their duty, but it warps the preacher's message, suggesting not heart-searching appeals, but sensational themes and oratorical efforts, as best calculated to draw the crowds. The "Men and Religion Forward Movement," while assuming to aid the pastors, carries with it the implication of such unfaithfulness in their work. Only the pastors themselves can remove the conditions against which the movement is a protest.

But the pastors are not insensible to the appeal. Many of them realize their bondage and will aid the effort to deliver them from it. They desire the salvation of men. They have been very docile under this movement; have responded to the plans of the secretaries; have picked their choice men for normal training, and, if these men shall be inspired with new zeal and a vision of what they may do to save their fellow-men, the preachers will be glad. 'Tis true that the preachers have gotten but little new light, but they are all organizing for a forward movement after the holidays, for it is generally agreed that the movement is not strong enough to cope with the social customs of the holiday season. But we all mean to do something, and as our committees have the work laid out and the plan of campaign agreed upon, after the holidays we will "perform the doing of it." The Church has paid handsomely for its instructions and will now try to put them into practice.

It seems to this writer that one of the chief problems in our method is how to make a banquet a spiritual dynamo. Pentecost began with a prayer-meeting; Methodists reckon that the Aldergate prayer-meeting kindled in the soul of John Wesley a fire which set in revival flame the United Kingdom. The Hay-stack prayer-meeting perpetuates its influence with cumulative strength. But most of us are going to start our revival movement with a banquet.

"The old order changeth, giving place to new,
And God fulfills himself in many ways,
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world."

Of late the parlor, the kitchen and the banquet hall have become annexes to our city churches. They seem to have their use for social service. Nothing draws the members together like a banquet. We will rally our forces at a banquet, and from that point our revival will be projected. The banquet is the best scheme to get the crowd. But the Lord said of Gideon's army: "The people are too many." A prayer-meeting after the banquet, succeeded by three or four more, evening after evening, may develop our fighting force. The lack of the whole movement, as we see it, is prayer. But I am not criticizing my brethren. I am writing things which they see and confess. We are all in the same boat together.

A suggestion, which now comes to my mind, is that when we turn to prayer, the organization we have formed may go to pieces. When the individual members of the Church are constrained by the love of Christ to seek the salvation of souls they will not be conventional in their work, nor wait for appointments, nor confine themselves to special lines, nor limit their efforts to dated campaigns. But we are all going to test the machinery put into our hands. The need is great and we have heard a stirring call, and are marking time. After the holidays we will march. The transfer of Rev. C. C. Selecman to New Orleans takes from us one who is pre-eminently a missionary. Cultured, and a man of fine gifts, he has been to us an example of devotion to the interests of the poor. His charge here was Kingdom House, a settlement mission, under the care of the ladies of St. John's Church. Brother Selecman has qualified himself for this sort of work by studies at home and abroad. He is a man of deep convictions and a will to do as his convictions prompt. He is a strong preacher, the peer of the pastors of our leading churches. We believe that the Master has need of him and will direct his way.

CHRISTMAS IN THE OUTLOOK OFFICE.

The youngest office boy of the Outlook staff, the one who wears pink cheeks and a bow tie, and who looks like pictures of Little Lord Fauntleroy, except for the lace collar, was decidedly disappointed to-day. He knew when he got on the job early yesterday morning that there was to be a Christmas celebration in the afternoon, in which the contributing editor, Col. Roosevelt, was to take the leading part, but his ideas were vague as to just what the colonel would do. He had a notion that the colonel would appear as Santa Claus, with a flowing cotton beard and a red jacket edged with fluffy trimmings, and he wondered whether Col. Santa Claus would use a chimney or take the elevator.

He confided his ideas to the young women who sat at desks in the big reception room, and who were in a state of pleasurable excitement over the prospect of the celebration. They knew, of course, just what was going to happen, because they were present at the Christmas celebration last year. So they explained that the colonel, like all the rest of the staff from Dr. Lyman Abbott down, would receive a present from the Outlook, but that Mr. Roosevelt would not play Santa Claus in costume or not. And that is what happened.

When the contributing editor arrived at the Organization Society's Building, at Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, where the Outlook has offices, he sent for the employees of the building, the janitors and elevator men and other employees and handed each one of them a new $5 bill. He shook hands all around and wished them a merry Christmas.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A GREAT FORWARD MOVEMENT.

By S. A. Smith, Superintendent Louisiana Anti-Saloon League.

The recent Anti-Saloon meetings held in Washington, D. C., were by far the most important yet held for the cause they were intended to advance. There was perfect unanimity in action and almost unanimous agreement on the sort of bill that should be passed through Congress at the time. Every organization at work for the suppression of the liquor traffic was represented, and all of them will be behind the bill which has been already introduced in both branches of Congress and been referred to the proper committees. The general conference held on the subject appointed a committee of ten to draft a bill, half of the number being members of Congress. This bill will be known as the Sheppard-Kenyon Bill, and is in the House H. R. 16,214, and in the Senate S. 4043. It is now the supreme business of everybody interested to help pass this bill. The above designation should be used in writing to Congressmen and Senators about it. No organization or individual should fail to be heard from as time goes on and the measure progresses on its way to become a law. Calls will be made through the press and in other ways and no one should delay or neglect action. It will take work to pass it. We MUST NOT FAIL.

The complete bill follows:

A Bill to Prohibit Interstate Commerce in Intoxicating Liquors in Certain Cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Sec. 1. That the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, or wine, from one State, Territory, or district in the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received, possessed, or kept, or in any manner used, either in the original package, or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, enacted in the exercise of the police powers of such State, Territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited; and any and all contracts pertaining to such transactions are hereby declared to be null and void, and no suit or action shall be maintained in any court of the United States upon any such contract or contracts, or for the enforcement or protection of any alleged right based upon or growing out of such contract or contracts, or for the protection in any manner whatsoever of such prohibited transactions.

Sec. 2. There shall be no property right in or to any such liquor while in the possession of any railway company, express company, or other common carrier, in connection with any shipment or transportation thereof in violation of this Act.

WINTER QUARTERS.

Where's the crawling caterpillar?
Sound asleep in his cocoon.
Where's the bee, so bright and busy?
Dreaming in the hive of June.
Where's the snail and where's the turtle?
Safely buried in the ground.
Where's the woodchuck, where's the rabbit?
In their burrows they are found.
Where's the thrush and where's the robin?
Singing 'neath the Southern sky.
Where's the bear and where's the squirrel?
In their hollow tree they lie.
Where's the ant, that careful worker?
In her underground abode.
Where's the eight-eyed spinning spider?
In a crevice snugly stowed.
Where's the bat that ranged at midnight?
He is in his winter's sleep—
In his cave he hangs head downward
And he never makes a peep.
These and many other creatures
Hide or drowse the winter through;
But when spring has once awakened,
They are up and stirring, too.

THE GROWING GIRL.

"As soon as baby sleeps at night, things will be easier," says the mother at first. Later on it is, "As soon as she gets through whooping cough, then—." Presently it is, "When she gets a little older and more reasonable—." And so the little girl passes from babyhood to youth and always there are fresh difficulties to be met; her temper, or her friends, or her disposition, or her manners, keep her parents anxious about her.

At last comes the day when she gets well into her teens. She has been carefully trained all the way along; she now has learned to obey, to study her lessons, to do little things about the house; she has had ten years in Sabbath school and is undoubtedly a member of the church in good and regular standing. Now, surely, is time for her to show some results, and become a blessing to the family and repay her mother for all she has endured!

It sounds reasonable enough, but facts prevent one from too fondly believing in any such happy, foregone conclusion. The time for solid comfort has not yet arrived, for the teens are, perhaps, more than any other period of life, a time of storm and stress. Self-will suddenly assumes unwonted proportions; vanity springs up hydra-headed; to "have a good time" seems the end and aim of the girl's existence. Where now are the results of all her careful education? Impulses toward better things seem at times to hold sway, but none of those good principles so carefully instilled seems to dominate the life. How does it happen that the child of so many prayers and such conscientious nurture has become the distracting, selfish, too often rude and inconsiderate being?

To-day the scientists have found out some things which, if understood by fathers and mothers, would help them understand that perplexing being, the growing girl. If this knowledge were only well in mind all the time, how many sleepless nights they would be spared, and how many tears and reproaches they would omit! For the girl in her teens is by no means a finished product; she is only passing through one phase of development, physically, mentally, morally; she is never to be accepted as really what she appears on the surface to be. For years now she must be treated not as a child nor yet as a woman, but as something quite different from both.

Physically the girl suffers from not understanding herself and her own needs. She assumes, with her lengthened dresses and turn-up hair, the idea that now she is grown up. She thinks that her hours of sleep, her food, her recreations, should all be like those of adults. She is sure she knows exactly what to wear, and smiles superior to her mother's plea for warm clothing and rubbers. She can surely take care of herself now!

But unfortunately never, not even when she was a teething baby, did she need care and supervision more than now. Her whole future health depends on attention to her body, and, unless she is judiciously watched and certain hygienic principles insisted on, she cannot grow into a strong woman. Her mother knows this, in part, at least, but too often she weakly gives up the struggle and lets her daughter have her own way with herself.—Presbyterian Standard.

GRANDMA'S ALARM CLOCK.

Grandma looked at the clock. The short hand was at two, the long hand was at twelve.

"It is two o'clock, grandma," said little John, who could tell what time it was by that big clock in the hall, although watches were still a puzzle.

Just then the clock struck "one, two." Grandma smiled, John smiled.

"I was wondering," observed grandma, with another glance at the clock, "I was wondering if I had time to take a wee nap?"

Little John began to feel uncomfortable. He was afraid grandma really meant that he should take a nap. When mother went away that morning, with baby and two older children, she told John that, if he would be a good boy and stay home to take care of grandma, he needn't go to sleep after luncheon. John was sure grandma wouldn't make him take a nap after mother said that, but she might ask him if he would like to have a little rest with her. John was a polite child, and grandma was so much more beautiful than any other grandma he ever saw; it was easier for a boy to do what she wished than to do as he wished himself. John was sure he would have to lie down and close his eyes if grandma asked him, so he looked at the clock again and frowned.

"Why, I forgot to give my little bantam rooster his dinner!" declared little John. "When you said you would tell me stories so I wouldn't get lonesome, it made me forget my little rooster. Now don't worry about me, grandma. If you want to take a nap, you just take it. I'll have to feed the rooster and then I'll play with my new engine out on the back porch."

Grandma smiled and rubbed her glasses. "Very well," she answered. "And, John dear, you needn't keep too quiet, because I musn't take a long nap this afternoon."

Sometimes when grandma went to sleep after luncheon, she didn't wake up for two or three hours; so John was glad she didn't intend to take a long nap that day, because the house seemed lonely. He decided that, as grandma said she mustn't take a long nap, he would play that his engine was obliged to be noisy when it was about time for the clock to strike three.

If grandma had told John that she didn't intend to sleep more than fifteen minutes, how he would have stared. He didn't know a word about the beautiful surprise awaiting him.

When mother left home that morning, she told John that she was going to Aunt Mary's in the city; that she intended to leave the children before luncheon. John wished to go, too; but mother explained that some one must stay with grandma.

After her boy went to feed the little rooster, grandma looked at the clock again, and shook her head. "What if I should oversleep?" said she. Norah, the housemaid, was gone for the afternoon. The house was perfectly still.

"Let me see," grandma continued aloud. "If we meet my daughter and the children at the station in time for the three o'clock car for the beach, John and I must leave here at half-past two. We will need only fifteen minutes to get ready in, which leaves me fifteen minutes for a cat nap." Grandma usually called a short sleep a cat nap.

"I don't know," grandma said to herself, as she settled down among the cushions on the couch, "I don't feel sure that I ought to do this without an extra alarm clock on the chair beside me." Nevertheless, grandma closed her eyes and quickly fell asleep.

The big clock in the hall ticked, ticked, ticked away the minutes. Grandma was sound, sound asleep. Five minutes passed, ten minutes, eleven minutes, twelve minutes, then grandma dreamed that she awoke. Thirteen minutes—and she dreamed that she washed John's face and combed his hair. Thirteen minutes and seven seconds—grandma dreamed she was telling John about the beautiful surprise; how they were to meet mother, Aunt Mary, and the children at the city station, and go on the three o'clock car, the latest car for the seashore, where they were to have a picnic dinner and come home by moonlight.

Fourteen minutes—grandma dreamed that she and John were skimming along the country to the seashore—bumpety-bump, bumpety-bump—such a beautiful, peaceful ride—bumpety-bump, bumpety-bump—over the rails.

Fact is, grandma was so sound asleep she might have slept until five o'clock if something unusual hadn't happened.

Norah left the side screen door open. The little rooster, having eaten his dinner and straightened his feathers, went for a walk when little John began to play cars. He reached the side porch, hopped up the steps, and, if you will believe it, walked in the open door. To be sure he paused politely a moment, with head cocked on one side as if waiting for some one to say, "Come right in and take a chair."

At last, just as the big clock in the hall said fifteen minutes after two, the bantam rooster crowed, "Oo—oo—oo—oo, OOH—OOH—OOH—OOH!" in shrillest tones.

Grandma stirred uneasily. She dreamed that the car was whistling for the seaside station. She didn't like to get off the car. Again came the long, shrill whistle, and she prepared to leave the car. She really sat straight on the couch and opened her eyes in a dazed "Where-am-I?" fashion.

There stood the little rooster on the chair, arching his pretty neck ready to crow a third time, and crow he did.

"There, there!" remonstrated grandma, with a glance at the clock, "That's enough, I'm awake; thank you, sir, just in time. You come in the kitchen with me and I'll give you a piece of custard pie. You deserve it."

Grandma did give the little bantam rooster a piece of custard pie and she didn't make him eat the crust, either.

"We wouldn't be here if it wasn't for our little rooster," said John, when he and grandma met mother, Aunt Mary, and the children, in the city station at three o'clock.—Frances Margaret Fox, in Little Folks.

Editorial.

THE WORK OF THE NEW YEAR.

We are standing on the threshold of a new year. The record of the year past is made up and will meet us in the judgment. A new chapter in life's volume is opening, and the question is, "What shall we write upon its pages, white and fair?"

The Church needs to do many things during the year now beginning. Never were there so many open doors, and so many imperative calls for service as now. Everywhere the harvest fields are white, and there is a crying demand for busy sickles. In a most remarkable manner, God is opening the way and bidding his people to go forward. It is a day "big with destiny"—a time when on every side may be seen the beckoning hand of opportunity.

What are some of the tasks lying immediately out before us? We need an increased missionary activity, both at home and abroad. Our gifts to this cause are shamefully small. We are almost trifling with this great work of world evangelization.

We also need to lay our hand more vigorously to the task of Christian education. Our institutions of learning must be equipped if they are to stand in the fierce competition with rich State colleges and universities. Some of them are already well-nigh gasping for life.

The literature problem of the Church, furthermore, presses for solution. What a people read is a matter of the utmost importance, and, as a result of a wider diffusion of knowledge, more books and periodicals are being circulated now than ever before. In no field is the competition between the religious and secular world sharper than in this. Here, as elsewhere, in the matter of finance the advantage is wholly with the latter. Yet somehow the Church must continue to issue her publications—they are essential to her prosperity and growth.

And the Protestant denominations sorely need to multiply their charitable institutions and increase their benevolent work. They have neglected far too long this important arm of service, which has been such a source of strength to the Roman Church. It is high time they were learning the lesson that the organization that ministers to humanity will have its love and loyal support.

But we must not forget, in enumerating our tasks, to mention our highest and holiest work—that of leading immortal souls to Christ. It is to accomplish this that all of our Church machinery exists, and if this be not done, no matter what our other achievements may be, our work is a failure. It is what she does for men spiritually that constitutes Zion's distinctive and crowning glory. The State can build lecture halls, print, educate, provide benevolent institutions, and disburse charity. But it cannot bring men into touch with those mighty but invisible forces that impart new life and create a new nature. It may to some extent reform the outward man, but it cannot regenerate the inner man and give him mastery over evil impulses and passions. The Church, which was divinely established and through which God operates, alone can do this.

These are some of the duties that confront us as we face the new year. All of them are important, and we desire to see every interest mentioned strengthened and carried forward. But most of all, we pray for a sweeping revival that shall reach from the bottom to the top of society and extend to every part of the land. Such an awakening would help every phase of the work and strengthen the Church to grapple with the tremendous issues with which she is now face to face. It would make her membership spiritual, liberal, and aggressive, bring new recruits into our ranks, and send an additional force of laborers into the wide-reaching harvest fields. When God has wholly the hearts of a people, he has all else they have—their time, their talents, their substance, and their service. And, as has been said, "when he has perfect dominion over his Church, it will not be long until he has dominion over the whole wide world."

We have long been talking of such a revival. Let us pray and work to bring it during the year now beginning. How sorely it is needed! Look how slowly our Methodist forces are moving forward. At the great Ecumenical Conference, Dr. H. K. Carroll, the statistical secretary, sounded a note of warning. He showed that, though worldwide Methodism is still gaining in numbers, it is at a diminishing ratio. The British Wesleyan Church has had a decrease in membership for several years in succession. The Year Book of the Methodist Episcopal Church is just out, and it shows a net gain in that denomination last year of only 34,214, less than 1 per cent. Forty-eight Conferences reported fewer members than they had the year preceding. The situation in our own Church, though considerably better than this, is yet far from what it ought to be. It is estimated that our gain for the year past will probably reach 60,000 or 75,000; but, though above our average increase, this showing is nothing to boast of for a church with 1,800,000 members. Of the three Conferences constituting our patronizing territory, the North Mississippi reported a gain of 1282; the Louisiana, a gain of 1080, and the Mississippi, a loss of 50. Considering the strength and resources of these bodies, these figures are not creditable.

Let no one think we are sounding a pessimistic note. We are not discouraged. We think "the future is as bright as the promises of God." We believe that the best days of Methodism are yet to come. But there is no gainsaying the fact that we are not now accomplishing what we ought; that in some places we are doing little more than marking time. We need to get into closer touch with God, to tarry on our knees until we receive a new baptism of the Holy Spirit. He only can make us effective in the Lord's service. All other reliances, no matter by whom endorsed, will mislead and fail us. The walls of Jericho must still fall by faith. No modern devices, however much they may promise, can break them down. Let prayer go up from thousands of our homes and churches that the needed Pentecost may speedily come. Then shall we witness triumphs that are worthy of our twentieth century Christianity, and which will show that the Gospel, preached by Spirit-filled men, is still, as it has ever been, the power of God unto salvation.

HOW GLADSTONE SHOOK HANDS.

That the average politician is resourceful in devices to catch voters is well known, but we had scarcely thought of Mr. Gladstone as needing anything else than his towering ability to bear down all opposition and forge his way to success. In this view, however, it seems that we were mistaken, if the following incident contained in the Ohio State Journal be true:

The news that President Taft has ordered a special bat for political campaigning recalls the fact that Mr. Gladstone found the Inverness cape in which he made his Midlothian campaign of immense assistance, and not only in keeping off the cold.

Once at a railway depot he stood at the carriage door ostensibly shaking hands with his admirers. But his hands were snugly hidden beneath the cape, while an obliging porter knelt behind and thrust out his hand to the Gladstonian worshippers.

"A hard hand has Gladstone," said one of them as he walked away, and his companion replied: "Aye, and did ye notice his nails?"

PROHIBITION MEETING IN JACKSON.

A great State mass convention of Prohibitionists and, indeed, of all other law-abiding citizens of Mississippi has been called to meet in Jackson, Miss., on Tuesday, Jan. 9, 1912.

Some of the purposes of the convention are: To obtain the sentiment of the entire State as to the best laws for enforcing the prohibition statutes; to adopt the best method of defeating the present plan of the Antis to submit state-wide prohibition to a popular vote at once; to seek amendments which the courts find are much needed, and to foster a sentiment which will prevent Mississippi from backsliding to local option.

We trust that this meeting will be largely attended. It certainly deserves to be, since the cause in the interest of which it is called is one of vital importance. The program arranged for the occasion will include a number of addresses by distinguished speakers, and a debate between students of Millsaps and Mississippi Colleges, who will discuss the following question: "Resolved, That prohibition in Mississippi should be by statutory legislation, rather than by popular vote."

THE ADVOCATE AND THE NEW YEAR.

Many calls for lists of subscribers in the various charges are reaching us. We are much pleased with this manifestation of interest on the part of the brethren. It is our ambition to make this a memorable year in the history of the Advocate, and we earnestly request the hearty co-operation of all our pastors and people in our effort to do so. Especially do we ask the presiding elders to stress at the quarterly conferences the importance of circulating the Conference organ. We are particularly anxious to have it enter the home of every official member of the Church, and we hope soon to have a long list of charges in which it reaches the hand of every official. Our motto for 1912 is: "A Greater Advocate"—greater in both merit and circulation.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

"It is a great help to me," writes Mrs. Kate M. Clark, of DeKalb, Miss., concerning the Advocate.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., has begun well at Epworth Church. He has already won favor with his people.

Union New Year's services were held at Glosier, Miss., at which Rev. E. C. Gunn delivered the sermon.

A district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the New Orleans District will be held in First Church on Jan. 19.

Rev. C. W. Baley writes that he is well pleased with his new charge, the Kosciusko Circuit. They have a good man, and he has a splendid people to serve.

Rev. H. N. Harrison, the newly-appointed pastor of Lafayette, La., has been well received by the congregation. His beginning gives promise of a successful year.

Rev. J. A. McBride has recently transferred from Alabama to Florida and orders the Advocate to follow him. He sends a kind note of appreciation to the Advocate.

Rev. J. D. Simpson preached to two splendid audiences on last Sunday at Pickens, Miss. This was Brother Simpson's first Sunday in Pickens, and he made a fine impression.

Rev. W. A. Mangum, one of our Arkansas readers, has recently moved to Missouri, and is now stationed at Martin City. He has a pleasant work and reports that he has begun well.

A union service, in which all the pastors and congregations participated, was held at Magnolia, Miss., last Sunday night as a welcome service to Rev. J. W. Moore, the new pastor of our church at that place.

On a postal card written concerning other matters, Rev. O. W. Bradley says: "These are a fine folk here at Winona." He is correct in his estimate, and the longer he serves them, the more he will appreciate them.

Rev. John W. Chisolm, of Jackson, Miss., favored us with four new subscribers this week. Brother Chisolm has done a good part by both his people and the Advocate by placing these subscriptions.

Rev. C. C. Weir is beginning his fourth year at Franklin, La., most auspiciously. During his pastorate the congregations have increased and the membership has grown. He is appreciated not only by our flock in this city, but also by the community at large.

Brother J. D. Sturdivant, of Como, Miss., writes, wishing the Advocate thousands of new subscribers. To start things along, he enclosed his own subscription. We join him in the same wish, and further wish him many hours of pleasant and profitable reading from its pages.

"We of the Ebenezer charge are perfectly delighted with having Brother E. C. Sullivan returned and also with the appointment of Brother N. G. Augustus to the Durant District." Thus writes Brother J. B. Dozier, of Brozville, Miss. We might add that he and his associates have every reason to be delighted.

Rev. Dr. C. M. Bishop, president of Southwestern University, of Georgetown, Tex., delivered an address before the Southwestern Student Conference of the Y. M. C. A. at Ruston on New Year's Eve. His theme was: "It is Finished." At night the Epworth League conducted a watch service.

D. C. Farmer, one of our veteran readers of Wesson, Miss., writes that age has enfeebled him and his eyesight is failing. Mr. Farmer is a stalwart Christian warrior, and we extend to him the best wishes of the Advocate, and trust that in some way his eyes may enable him to continue reading it as he has for so many years.

Resolutions were adopted by the several ministers of McComb City, Miss., commending the splendid work of Rev. W. M. Sullivan, who recently moved from McComb City to a new pastorate. The resolutions were signed by five of the resident ministers, and are highly complimentary to the fine work done by Brother Sullivan.

Mrs. C. C. Weir, of Franklin, La., was one of the victors in the European Tour Contest recently conducted by the New Orleans Picayune. We congratulate this accomplished mistress of the manse upon her success, and we hope her journeyings abroad will prove both pleasurable and profitable.

From Shubuta, Miss., Dr. B. F. Jones writes: "Everything indicates that my return to this charge for another year meets the hearty approval of these good people. This is gratifying to me." This statement occasions us no surprise. It is Brother Jones' habit to command the confidence and love of the flock to which he ministers.

The people of Lafayette have pleasant memories of the splendid year's work done by Rev. C. A. Battle, and gave him up with reluctance, but the policy of our Church is to serve the whole field, and it appears that no man is better fitted for the work at Felicity Street Church, to which place Brother Battle was sent at the last Conference.

Rev. W. S. Lagrone reports a cordial reception at Greenville, Miss., to which place he has been sent for the third time, and expresses a purpose to try to make this the greatest year in the history of this congregation. His work in this important field has been signally fruitful and successful, and he has the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

Rev. R. J. S. Worley has entered hopefully upon his work on the Columbus Circuit, to which he was assigned at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference. He writes: "I am going to put the Advocate in every home in my charge this year, if possible." This is a good New Year's resolution, which we trust that many other of our pastors will likewise form.

Referring to last week's issue of the Advocate, Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss., in a note to our office, says: "This issue of the Conference organ contains some specially good reading. The article by Dr. J. W. Lee deserves to be seriously pondered by every citizen of this country. The editorial, 'The Doctrine of Sin,' to my mind, is timely and to the point."

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Sdon, Miss., writes: "We reached our new work on time and a committee took charge of us at the train, and escorted us to the parsonage, where a delightful reception was given us by the ladies. We have a fine and generous people, many of whom know and love God. We have a well-filled pantry, and the outlook from every standpoint is encouraging."

Rev. F. N. Sweeney, who was returned to Wilson, La., for his second year, was well received by his people. He reports having received three members by profession of faith at his first service.

Rev. A. S. Brisco is located in the improved parsonage at Strong, Miss., on the Prairie charge. He served the Ratliff work acceptably last year, and has already made a good start on his new charge.

Dr. S. S. Keener, who is one of the strong men of the Louisiana Conference, has entered upon his fourth year on the Monroe District in high favor, both with his ministerial co-laborers and the people in the various charges. He is an able preacher and administrator, and the Methodism of north Louisiana is prospering under his leadership.

The following announcement will be read with interest by many in Mississippi and Louisiana: "Married—On December 28, 1911, the father of the bride officiating, Mr. Ebert Sullivan, of Wilson County, Tennessee, to Miss Ruth Byers Boswell, daughter of Dr. J. W. and Mrs. Lenora Boswell." The Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes.

The Louisiana Avenue Church had a watch-night service last Sunday evening, conducted by Rev. J. L. Sutton, the pastor, and Rev. C. A. Battle, of the Felicity Street Church. Refreshments were served and the devotional exercises commenced at 10:45 o'clock, and continued until the "Old Year" had passed away. The occasion was one of interest and profit.

From the Lincoln County Times of December 28 (Brookhaven, Miss.), we clip the following: "On Sunday morning Rev. R. Selby preached his first sermon to his congregation, taking for his text, 'Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will to men.' His able discourse was heard with the closest attention by an appreciative audience. The beautiful Christmas music aided in the spiritual uplift of the service."

Rev. James King, of Clarence, Miss., requests us to state that the people of the Mentor charge, Seashore Dist., will observe the first Sunday in January as a fast day, when special prayers will be offered that God may move upon the hearts of our rulers and lawmakers to enact such legislation as will rid the country of the curse of the rum traffic. Other congregations are requested to join in the observance of this day of fasting and prayer.

After three years of faithful service as superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, in this city, Rev. N. E. Joyner has been made Secretary of Education for the Louisiana Conference, and will give his whole time to this work. Methodism in Louisiana needs to go forward in the task of strengthening and equipping its educational institutions, and Brother Joyner is well qualified to lead in this important movement. He should have the hearty co-operation of all our preachers and people.

At the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference the churches at Coahoma, Lyon and Bobo were grouped into a charge, and placed under the pastoral care of Rev. H. M. Young. He served Coahoma last year, but was not the preacher at the other two places. Brother Young has written for our lists of subscribers at these points, and states that he will make a thorough canvass in the interest of the Advocate. We assure him of our appreciation of his kind words and expressed purpose to try to extend our circulation in his new field.

Rev. J. W. Raper has made a most auspicious beginning at Ruleville, Miss., in which charge there are many choice people. He was given an enthusiastic welcome, quite a number of his parishioners meeting him and his family at the train, in spite of the downpour of rain. They were conducted to the parsonage, where brightly burning fires, a hot supper, and a well-filled pantry awaited them. Brother Raper spent the third Sunday in December at Drew, where he was most kindly received, and preached to large and appreciative audiences at both the morning and evening hours.

From last week's issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate, we take the following: "Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Carter, of Nashville, were sorely bereaved in the death of their little daughter, Dorothy, aged 16 months. After a brief illness, the little one was taken from them Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 20. Many friends in this city and in other sections sorrow with the parents in this time of bereavement." This announcement will touch with sadness many hearts in Louisiana. We extend sincere sympathy to the stricken father and mother, and pray that the heavenly Father may comfort and sustain them.

Bishop Candler has been for some days, with several assistants, very busy down in the library of the Wesley Memorial Church, unpacking and arranging that rare collection of Wesleyana he recently purchased. When our people learn what a treasure Georgia Methodism has secured through his alertness and leadership they will not have sufficient words with which to thank him. How rich in historic value is the fireproof vault in Wesley Memorial Church becoming! Our people from all sections of our Church will want to come here for facts concerning Methodist history, and here they will find them.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Rev. J. H. Foreman writes as follows concerning his reception in his new charge: "We arrived at Bogue Chitto, Miss., at 9 o'clock p.m. on Dec. 21, and were most royally received. Brother H. E. Brister, one of the stewards, met us at the depot and went with us to the parsonage, where a number of the ladies had preceded us and prepared an elegant supper. After the meal was over and the crowd had left we found ourselves in the possession of a nice five-room cottage, and, thanks to my predecessor and the good people of the town, everything was clean and in first-class condition. I think that the indications point to a good year."

On account of the state of his wife's health and his inability to serve a charge requiring him to be frequently absent from home, Rev. A. J. Gearheard has been changed from Bienville, the appointment given him at the session of the Louisiana Conference, to the McDonoghville Church, of this city. He has already entered upon his work in his new field, where he has been accorded an enthusiastic reception. Brother Gearheard has also been engaged as one of the Advocate force, and will give a part of his time every week to work in our office. He has had some experience as a newspaper man, and will, we trust, prove a valuable assistant in issuing the Conference organ during the year now beginning.

The North Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board is losing no time in getting busy this year. Already a circular letter has been issued to the pastors and superintendents, seeking information and urging increased activity in the work. It is announced that some generous laymen have provided the means for placing a copy of the recently issued Sunday School Manual in the hands of every superintendent who will notify the field secretary, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, that he desires the volume. Not one of them should fail to send in his name, as this Manual is a gem. The president of this energetic Sunday School Board is the Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Houston, Miss., who is widely known as a capable and up-to-date leader in this department of our church work.

The Woman's Board of City Missions held its annual meeting last week in St. Mark's Hall. Mrs. W. W. Carre, who has been president continuously for the past eighteen years, was succeeded in that office by Mrs. S. A. Montgomery. Mrs. W. W. Carre was then elected honorary president for life. Other officers elected were: Mrs. D. C. Worrell, first vice president; Mrs. Walter Willis, second vice president; Mrs. Elmer E. Wood, treasurer; Mrs. A. A. Bartels, recording secretary, and Mrs. J. B. Parker, corresponding secretary. Many reports were read, all showing good work having been done during the year, and the speeches indicated a hopeful outlook for the coming year. A note of appreciation was sent to Rev. N. E. Joyner, who has been the head of St. Mark's Hall for the past three years, commending his work and wishing him success in his new field. Dr. J. W. Moore, Rev. C. C. Seelman and Rev. A. G. Shankle delivered the addresses.

CHURCH PAPERS AS ASSISTANT PASTORS.

I would rather have a church paper than an assistant pastor, who would be in my way. But a pastor's assistant, the silent, unanswerable assistant, who works at night, in the morning and in the hours of leisure, is the religious journal. The circulation of our church papers is primarily the pastor's job. It is not enough for him to stand up and say: "Brethren, the time is come for you to renew your subscription to the official paper, and Brother Richard Rowe will be glad to receive your subscriptions at the close of service, or at the office, No. 17 Sleepy street." That will never get you anywhere. The pastor who does his duty in this matter is the one who sees enthusiasm, and will see advance in the missionary cause, and also the prayer meeting, so that he will not have to say: "Brothers, let us improve the time," because the people will be on fire with enthusiasm from reading about the things that are doing in all the fields. We can set our churches ablaze if we give them the religious newspapers in every home.—Dr. H. C. Stuntz, in an address at the Methodist Ecumenical Conference.

Melancholy is God's visitation upon an idle mind; his mode rather of scourging such an one back again to his duty; for the way of escape from any trouble in life is duty coupled with trust in God.—Dwight.

Sister NANCY DRIVER, daughter of H. B. and Sarah Smith, was born in Richmond County, N. C., on Dec. 11, 1806, and died at her home in Kemper County, Miss., April 11, 1911. She was baptized in infancy; came with her parents to this state in childhood. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life and lived a consistent Christian till the Lord called her home. Being thoughtful and kindhearted, of a cheerful and happy disposition, always having a pleasant word for everyone, she was loved and appreciated by all who knew her. Her husband, J. C. Driver, who was several years her senior, was very infirm from age and affliction at the time of her death, has since passed away, too. Sister Nancy had no children of her own, but was indeed a mother to the motherless, for whom she faithfully cared, her husband having been left with four children from a former marriage. She loved her church, and was a regular attendant on its service. The preachers were always welcome visitors in her home. We miss her sweet companionship and loving counsel, but while she is not here, while she has gone to join father and mother, brothers and sisters in that blessed home above, yet her Christian example will live on here, for in her daily life she was a faithful light-bearer for the blessed Savior.

"We love to think of the loved ones over there,
Who before us the journey have trod;
Of the songs that they breathe on the air
In their home in the palace of God."

SISTER.

Mrs. SELINA RUTLEDGE (nee Hamilton), the mother of Rev. R. E. Rutledge, of the Mississippi Conference, died December 19, 1911, at 1 o'clock p.m., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Rhody Jones, of Prentiss, Miss. The funeral was conducted by Rev. J. C. Ellis and myself and her body laid to rest in the Bethesda Church graveyard on the Gallman Circuit. No better woman ever lived. No one ever died more triumphant. She was 74 years old and leaves a husband, five sons and four daughters, she being the first of the family to die.

REPORT OF EPWORTH LEAGUE BOARD, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Bishop and Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference:—

Your Epworth League Board would call attention to the great unused force that yet remains in the young life of the Church that is neither actively engaged in the Sunday school nor Epworth League. The Laymen's Movement is largely attributed to the Epworth League, and many of those at work in our mission fields heard the call when Leaguers. If such results have come from the utilization of only one-third of the young people in the active work of the League, what great results could we expect, were our entire young manhood and womanhood enlisted in its various departments? We urge each pastor to organize Epworth Leagues wherever possible. We commend to the Leagues as a specialty for their Charity and Help Departments the hospital that our Church has undertaken to erect in Memphis. If the Leagues will co-operate in carrying this much needed project forward, not only will they bring financial strength to the cause, but our young people will be brought into closer touch with the great plans of the church.

We also call the attention of pastors to the possibilities of an active League in those sections of the country suffering from financial depression. The Leaguers, actively employed, would aid largely in overcoming the adverse conditions, and thus trained, they would so strengthen the future church that it would be more apt to stand unshaken in the face of disaster. We call attention to the Seashore Assembly as worthy of attendance, and, where possible, would urge the Leaguers to take advantage of the rare opportunities offered by it.

BOGALUSA, LA.

I am to-day leaving Bogalusa, where I have fought the battle for three years. I wish to say we are leaving many strong friends who regret to part with us. We are made happy by the presentation of a valuable chest of silverware, just as we are leaving. May the Lord bless them for this and the many other kindnesses and courtesies shown us during our stay among them. We have been "pounded" several times, and Bro. McCain, my successor, will fall into the hands of a kind people. I will be glad to see you at Rayville any time during the year. Will send you a report when I get there. I hear good things of the work to which I have been sent.

J. M. ALFORD.

December 22, 1911.

The Inward Effects of humors are worse than the outward. They endanger the whole system. Hood's Sarsaparilla eradicates all humors, cures all their inward and outward effects. It is the great alterative and tonic, whose merit has been everywhere established.

I find the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand, as in what direction we are moving; to reach the port of haven, we must sail sometimes with the wind and sometimes against it—but we must sail, and not drift, nor lie at anchor.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

REPORT OF THE HOSPITAL COMMITTEE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Mississippi Conference at its recent session appointed a special committee of five to consider the report submitted to it by the Commissioners of the Tri-State Methodist Hospital, recommend suitable action for the Conference and nominate its Commissioners for the ensuing year. After due consideration this committee brought in the following paper, which was adopted by the Conference as the expression of its will and pleasure;

"To the Bishop and Members of the Mississippi Conference:
"Dear Brethren:—

"We rejoice that our Church is awakening to her obligation and privilege along this line of Christian service. Too long have we allowed our preachers and members to receive hospital treatment through the charity of other churches. Being the third largest Protestant denomination in America, and as prosperous as we are, there is no excuse for this. Our loyalty to our church should have us to make adequate provision for fully taking care of our preachers and members, while our benevolent spirit and love for Christ should cause us to make provision for the unfortunate ones who are not of our fold.

"When we reflect on how powerful an agency for the kingdom the work of our medical missionaries and hospitals has been in foreign lands, and see how other churches have by this means obtained a stronghold on some sections of our own country, we can readily see the importance of this work and catch a glimpse of its possible influence on the future of our Church. Herein is a great opportunity for winning thousands of souls for Christ, an opportunity that Methodism should eagerly grasp and thus follow in the steps of our Saviour, who reached the soul by healing the diseased body. Let none take this crown from us.

"We believe that through our loyal support of the Hospital enterprise at Memphis, success will attend the work and that this will insure the erection and maintenance of hospitals in other of our Southern cities by our Church.

"We approve of the selection of Rev. H. M. Ellis, of this Conference, as Field Secretary and pledge him and the members of the Commission our hearty co-operation. Let every pastor welcome him to his pulpit and be ready to assist him in every possible way.

"We approve the appointment of January 28, 1912, as Hospital Rally Day, and urge every pastor and presiding elder to properly present this worthy cause at that time. On that day, or as near as possible, let all our Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, Home Mission Societies, and our congregations hold appropriate services and make liberal offerings for the hospital. Bring the matter before all the people, encouraging the poor to give what they can and reminding those blessed with larger means of the rare opportunity of investing their thousands in a cause that will be of such practical and permanent benefit to humanity and means so much for the glory of God.

"We are pleased with the present administration of the Board of Commissioners and recommend the re-election of the men who already have this cause at heart. We therefore nominate for Hospital Commissioners for the ensuing year Rev. J. R. Jones, Rev. J. T. Leggett, Messrs L. N. Dantzer and D. W. Heidelberg. We note that one more layman is needed on this Board of Commissioners and therefore nominate W. E. Lampton." Signed by Thomas B. Clifford, Chairman; O. S. Lewis, Secretary.

THE FATE OF AN OLD-TIME HIGHER CRITIC.

And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama, the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama, the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

Now the king sat in the winter house in the ninth month; and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

And it came to pass that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the pen-knife and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth. Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king nor any of his servants that heard all these words.—Jer. 36:20-24.

Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah, king of Judah. They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah Lord; or, Ah his glory!

He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.—Jeremiah 22:18, 19.

In this day of the irreverent and reckless cutting out of the Word of God, it is well occasionally to read carefully this striking piece of history. The Word will live while many of its critics will share the fate of Jehoiakim.—C. L. D., in the Baltimore Southern Methodist.

THE JANUARY CENTURY.

The never-failing interest in "New Records of Napoleon" will be furthered in the January Century by unpublished English diaries in relation to Napoleon's funeral at St. Helena and the exhumation of his remains for transport to France, written by the officers in charge, respectively; while the extraordinary and picturesque ceremonies attending the voyage and the journey up the Seine, with the ever memorable obsequies in Paris, will be pictured in copies of ten of the colored lithographs made at the time as a record of one of the most remarkable pageants in history.

Timothy Cole's incomparable wood engravings in The Century will be continued in the January number with the famous and beautiful portrait of "Lady Peel," by Sir Thomas Lawrence, now owned by Mr. Henry C. Frick.

TOPIC FOR JAN. 7.

"THE WILDERNESS SHEPHERD: SOLITUDE AND SPIRITUAL VISIONS."

Amos 1, 1, 2; vii, 14; Gal. 1, 15-17.

Amos was one of the twelve Minor Prophets, and a native of Tekoah, a town about six miles south of Bethlehem. He belonged to the shepherds there, and was not trained in any "school of the prophets;" that is to say, he was not a college graduate, nor had he even gone through the common school course, but was an uneducated farmer boy. And yet God called him to be a prophet. Colleges are all right, and education is all right, but when God wants a special messenger to proclaim his truth he does not always go to the colleges to find him, but often calls him from some busy but humble occupation of life to go forth and proclaim the truth. Our attention has been called to the fact that God has often selected the chief messengers of his truth from men in the humble walks of life. It was when toiling at a shoemaker's bench that William Carey's soul was filled with zeal for missionary labor. Morrison was once a maker of shoelasts. John Williams was called from the blacksmith's shop. David Livingstone from working in a cotton mill. David was called from the shepherd's life. Elisha was called while plowing in the field. Our Lord himself came from an humble carpenter shop in Nazareth. In all these cases it will be observed that their occupations were conducive to much meditation, which has been characterized by a recent writer as a lost art. If we would be God's special messengers, we should spend a portion of each day in reading, prayer and meditation.

Paul's Conversion and Retirement.

Paul, in writing to the Galatians, whom he accuses of faithlessness, says in effect: "I am surprised that you should so soon have deserted the truth which I taught you, for a spurious gospel. This desertion is due to false teachers. But if we apostles, even—yes, if an angel from heaven—should proclaim any teaching contrary to the doctrine of salvation by grace and faith, I pronounce a curse upon him. I make this strong assertion—and I repeat it—in the knowledge that in my teaching I am not seeking man's favor, but obeying God's will in the service of Christ." In order to vindicate his own right to the claim of apostleship Paul deems it necessary to write to the Galatians out of his own personal experience. After referring to his wonderful conversion and call to the ministry, he writes: "But when God I did not resort to human authorities had chosen me to be his messenger, to learn what my message should be; I did not visit the primitive apostles to learn anything from them, but I went away into the seclusion of Arabia." There is very little known about this period of retirement in the wilderness, but it is certain that the object of his retirement was for meditation and prayer.

Value of Seclusion.

The time spent in seclusion is not wasted time, but, on the contrary, is often the most valuable time in a busy individual's life. "The value of such retirement," says Canon Liddon, "before entering on the decisive work of life, can hardly be exaggerated. Many a young man whose education is completed—as the phrase goes—and who knows, or thinks that he knows, what to do for himself or his fellow-creatures, is often painfully disappointed when his plans for immediate action suddenly break down, and he has to remain for a while in comparative obscurity and inaction. It seems to him to be a loss of time, with little or nothing to redeem the disadvantage. He is wasting, he thinks, his best years in idleness. He may, of course, so act as to make that phrase justifiable. It need not be so. A prudent no less than a religious man will thankfully, if he can, avail himself of such an opportunity for consolidating his acquirements, for reviewing the bearing of his governing convictions, for estimating more accurately the resources at his disposal for extending or contracting his plans, at least for reconsidering them. A religious man will, above all, seize such an opportunity for testing and strengthening his motives, and for cultivating an increased intimacy with those means and sources of effective strength which he will need so much hereafter." The same rule applies to our daily life. The time spent in the early Morning Watch will prepare us for more efficient work throughout the day, and is therefore the most profitable time any of us can spend.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Life touched by God cares not what serves or helps itself—but what will help mankind.—Kempis.

God has so arranged the chronometry of our spirits, that there shall be thousands of silent moments between the striking hours.—Martineau.

A man who lives right, and is right, has more power in his silence than another has by his words. Character is like bells which ring out sweet music, and which, when touched accidentally even, resound with sweet music.—Phillips Brooks.

A SPLENDID TONIC.

Cora, Ky.—Mrs. Iva Moore, of this place, says, "I was so weak I could hardly walk. I tried Cardui, and was greatly relieved. It is a splendid tonic. I have recommended Cardui to many friends, who tried it with good results." Testimony like this comes unsolicited from thousands of earnest women, who have been benefited by the timely use of that successful tonic medicine, Cardui. Purely vegetable, mild, but reliable, Cardui well merits its high place in the esteem of those who have tried it. It relieves women's pains, and strengthens weak women. It is certainly worth a trial. DANCING DEGENERATING.

The Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, editorially says:

"When grandma danced the minuet, dancing had not ceased to be the poetry of motion, even if the measures of those days were more stately and deliberate, and he or she who trod the light, fantastic toe was not expected to indulge in ungainly glides, hops and swoops or other startling maneuvers. No wonder that dancing masters, in congress assembled at Berlin, have voted for the suppression of the latest terpsichorean atrocity, styled the 'Apache' dance, the immediate cause of their protest being the fact that the spine of a girl while dancing was broken by the violent contortions through which she was pulled and hauled by her partner.

"There has been in recent times a decided tendency to supplant the older and less ungraceful dances by all manner of singular posturings, wild and whirling gyrations, and awkward attitudes wholly foreign to the purpose and theory of the dance as the translation into rhythmic movement of an inward and spiritual feeling of delight."

If the opponents of the dance had said this they would be "back numbers," "monks," "gradgrinds."

"Public dancing," a phrase meaning dancing "out of the circles of one's friends," is a dangerously fascinating amusement. Some years ago the soldiers in a certain part of Canada, not wishing to be deprived of dancing during Lent, asked the Catholic Bishop of the diocese for the privilege of dancing on certain days. "With pleasure," said he, "on one condition, that only the members of your regiment participate."—New York Advocate.

"TRY SINGING A BIT."

A writer tells of a boy who was sunny and brave. He met the ills of life, which too many people regard as almost tragedies, with courage. Nothing ever daunted him. Where most boys are afraid or break into tears, he was undismayed and untroubled. But one day something serious happened. He and a playmate climbed a tree. Just when our little philosopher had reached the top, his foot slipped, and he fell to the ground. He lay there, evidently hurt, but uttered no cry. It was the playmate that screamed. The doctor found the leg badly broken. The boy bore the setting patiently without a whimper. The mother slipped out of the room to hide her own tears—she couldn't stand it as well as her boy did. Outside the door she heard a faint sound and hurried back, almost hoping to find him crying. "My boy!" she said, "do you want something? I thought I heard you call." "Oh, no, mother," he said, "I didn't call. I just thought I'd try singing a bit." And he went on with the song.

When you have pain, or struggle, or a heavy load, or a great anguish, don't complain, don't cry out, don't sink down in despair, don't be afraid—try singing a bit. Trust God, and praise!—J. R. Miller, D.D.

Life is not so short, but that there is always time enough for courtesy.—Emerson.

SHE BROKE DOWN ENTIRELY.

Lantz, W. Va.—Mrs. Tebe Talbott, of this place, says, "I had been troubled with womanly ailments for some time, and at last I broke down entirely. I got so weak I could scarcely walk across the room. Thanks to Cardui, I improved right off. Now I do my housework, and am feeling well." During the past 50 years, more than a million women have been benefited by taking Cardui. You must believe that Cardui will help you too, since it helped all these others. Cardui is a safe, harmless, vegetable remedy, of positive, curative merit, for women. At drug stores. Try one bottle. It will surely help you.

THE CORNER-STONE OF NOEL MEMORIAL LAID.

A special dispatch to the New Orleans States, dated Shreveport, La., Jan. 1, says: With Dr. Felix R. Hill, Sr., officiating, assisted by his son, Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., who is the pastor, the corner-stone of the Noel Memorial Methodist Church was laid last Sunday afternoon. Presiding elder, Rev. Paul M. Brown, and Rev. R. J. Harpe participated. The church is to cost about $55,000 when completed.

TALENTS.

It is a pity that in common speech the word talents, taken, indeed, from our Lord's well-known parable, should have come to mean a different thing from that which the Lord means in that parable. We use the word to mean a man's natural capacity, his intellectual powers, the ability with which he is gifted. A talented man is one who has great natural ability.

But in the parable the talents are not intended to represent natural gifts of mind and body, but rather entrusted work, business given to do, portions of the Master's possessions that must be used for his advantage.

The story tells us that these servants received the talents, or sums of money, in accordance with their abilities. The men who were more capable were given larger portions of the Lord's goods to take care of and to do business with. So that our natural abilities are the measure of our responsibility to God—but the thing itself for which we are responsible is the work we are called to do—the portion of Christ's business that falls to our care, the part of the Lord's possessions that we must attend to for Him.

Therefore, the wonderful teaching of this parable of the talents is that the Lord, like the master in the story, finds it necessary to entrust His business to His servants—to those who are called to be His disciples. The rich man in the Parable was called away, and so he had to put all of his goods into the hands of these slaves of his; he was obliged to trust all of his fortune to their care; he could do nothing else than hope that they would be true and faithful to him—and so that his affairs should go on well in his absence and he not suffer any damage. There seems some necessity like this in the case of Christ and His disciples. He seems obliged by the condition of things to trust the affairs of His kingdom on earth to His people. He must submit to suffer loss and damage in His goods, unless His servants are loyal and true in their duty to Him.

Now, this truth is indeed very wonderful, and very mysterious. In this world Christ's cause depends upon the work and the loyalty of Christians. If Christ's disciples are untrue, unfaithful, disloyal, then Christ's Church and cause will surely suffer damage. Christ has put us Christians in trust with the work of His Church, and He has made the growth and power of His Church to depend upon our faithfulness to this trust.

This is a serious and very awful truth. Everywhere, the honor of Christ and the good name of His Church depend upon the devotion and fidelity of His people. "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."

We may leave results to God; our part is just to be faithful to the Lord in the use of the entrusted talent.—Rev. J. W. Morris, D.D., in Monumental Messenger.

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS.

To the brethren and friends of the two Conferences in Mississippi, and elsewhere, who have cheered me in the way and in anywise aided in the successful work of 1911, thanks and appreciation are hereby sincerely expressed. May 1912 be a year of gladness and comfort to every heart, and of abundant success in whatever laudable business you are employed! May our mutual relations continue through the new year, as heretofore, in Christian love and co-operative service in the name of our Lord and for the advancement of his kingdom on earth.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

PLEDGING THE TEACHERS.

By Henry F. Cope, Ph.D.

Recently at a conference of city superintendents the problem of securing and holding good teachers and the greater problem of getting teachers to take their work seriously was under discussion. The participants in that conference worked out a suggestion something like this: that each school should draw up a "Teachers' Roll," which all regular teachers should be required to sign before undertaking the permanent care of a class. This Roll would be something like this:

We, the undersigned teachers, becoming responsible for the classes set opposite our respective names, do sign the Teachers' Roll of this church, agreeing:—

1. To conform to all the rules and regulations of this school, and to hold myself subject to its discipline in the same manner as the pupils will be held.
2. To be with my class at least five minutes before the opening of the school period.
3. To learn the reasons for absence and to report on these to the superintendent.
4. To spend at least one hour weekly in the preparation of the lesson.
5. To continue the teacher-training reading and study required by the church.
6. To notify the superintendent of my intended absence from my class in time for him to secure a substitute. I will not send a substitute without his consent.
7. To visit each member of my class at least once a year in his home.
8. To confer with the pastor of the church regarding the spiritual welfare of my pupils and their relation to the church.

(The crying need for good, punctual, trained and above all consecrated teachers is so apparent that this recent suggestion of Dr. Cope, whose authority in such matters is unquestioned, may be helpful.)

Some Home Department and Other Class special rooms are on the sunny south side of the building with an open fire place, growing plants and rocking chairs, and always one wheel chair and an extra crutch with easy foot stools close by. So many can come to such a room for a morning hour of comfort, peace and consecration who could not bear the hard seats and noisy enthusiasm of the larger room. No school could fail to grow spiritually and numerically with such a sacred shrine within its portals.

"Lord, deepen and strengthen and sanctify our purpose—the World for Christ. Lead us in reverence and with increasing wisdom and understanding to more effectively use our means—the Word of God. Teach new conceptions of that world-embracing little motto—OTHERS. So may this triune slogan come to express the meaning of our lives and regulate our conduct during every one of the seven days of the week." Will not every teacher and superintendent pin this slogan in his class-book and hold it in his heart?

"The source of a Christian worker's strength, broadly speaking, is Christ; 'I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me.' Faith in Christ is a source of strength. Knowledge is a source of strength; many workers fail through ignorance. Perseverance is a source of strength. Prayer is a source of strength; it is not flavor but food." May we possess all these during 1912!

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

A Home Department has been organized at Vacherie with Miss Blanche Calhoun superintendent, and a Cradle Roll with Mrs. Dr. Bolton superintendent.

Mr. E. M. Frasier, of Many, recently gave his Young Peoples' Bible Class a treat in the nature of an old fashioned candy pulling and the occasion is reported as being a happy one.

One of the helpful methods of conducting lesson study, practiced by Mr. Linerman, of Mansfield, is to have a member occasionally give prepared papers on the historical characters around which the lesson centers. Mr. Pollock, a young lawyer of the class, recently had a splendid study of Daniel.

Rev. J. H. Montgomery, at the beginning of the year on the Marksville Mission, found Sunday schools at Marksville and Evergreen, and left at the end of the year in addition to these active organizations at Oak Grove, Sayes Chapel, Bay Hill, Cottonport and Bayou Chico, and one is planned for St. Landry and one in sight at Ville Platte.

The Y. M. C. A. Bible Class of the Vacherie Sunday School, of which Mr. J. F. Sims is President and Dr. W. M. Bolton teacher, is made up mostly of the young men from the saw mill of that place. The Sunday school is superintended by Mr. Moore, the Y. M. C. A. Secretary of the mill community. We understand that Mr. Moore is supported in his Y. M. C. A. work by one of the company's stockholders who is interested in the religious welfare of his employees.

Rev. A. W. Turner has given himself to assist the local Sunday school at Sadus, where he has chosen his residence, and has already been instrumental in having the two adult classes organized, elementary superintendent elected, and a Home Department organized. Brother Jordan is the faithful superintendent. Mrs. Hill is superintendent of the Home Department; Miss Armstrong is superintendent of the Elementary Department, and Mr. Harlie is Secretary.

Our Sunday School at Zwolle starts the Conference year with a forward move in specializing in the Elementary and Adult Departments. Miss Holladay, the principal of the school, has been chosen superintendent of the Elementary Department, and plans to curtain off the rear of the church and run her department on pedagogical principals. The two Bible classes are to be organized, and possibly the young people divided, making separate classes for men and women, and these pushed vigorously. The Home Department has been begun with Mrs. W. F. Hopkins superintendent. The superintendent is also working on a system of grading for creating class spirit and honor roll.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if anyone afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 701 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

Blood Humors

Commonly cause pimples, boils, hives, eczema or salt rheum, or some other form of eruption; but sometimes they exist in the system, indicated by feelings of weakness, languor, loss of appetite, or general debility, without causing any breaking out.

They are expelled and the whole system is renovated, strengthened and toned by Little faithfulnesses are not only the preparation for great ones, but little faithfulnesses are in themselves the great ones. The essential fidelity of the heart is the same whether it be exercised in the mites, or in a royal treasury; the genuine faithfulness of the life is equally beautiful whether it be displayed in governing an empire or in writing an exercise.—F. W. Farrar.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

VOL. 59—No. 2.

"Prove All Things; Hold Fast That Which Is Good."

WHOLE No. 2917.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1912

CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

Soft words are best; true kindness will lend
Even to rebuke a tender glow;
A bitter, cruel speech may cost a friend;
But gentle, loving words may win a foe.

—Earl William Gage.

In a brief but ringing editorial on extravagance, the Florida Christian Advocate suggests that it would be a good idea to ask yearly at the Annual Conference, before passing any preacher's character, the question, "Are you in debt so as to embarrass you?" However they may regard their outstanding obligations, if this were done, it is more than likely that there are some who would find this inquiry a bit "embarrassing."

It is stated that the Chinese students attending American institutions of learning are disturbed by the fear that, because of the condition existing in the home land, their remittances for expenses will not reach them. Some of these young orientals are supported by the interest accruing on the indemnity fund which was paid the United States at the time of the Boxer trouble, but which our Government generously returned. It is to be hoped that a plan will be set on foot to assist these students and prevent the interruption of their studies. This was done for the Japanese students in this country some years ago when they were similarly circumstanced, and it is said that this action perhaps impressed the people of Japan with our feeling of friendship for them more than any other occurrence in all our dealings with them.

The Christian workers of to-day need more virility. Never was there so tremendous a task to be performed as that of bringing the millions of mankind to Christ. Compared to this, the famous labors of Hercules pale into insignificance. Not only are Satan and the powers of darkness to be combated, but men must be saved from themselves—from their own evil inclinations. This cannot be done at a distance, nor by mere talk. We must go to the people, live among, identify ourselves with them, and win their confidence and love. Their surroundings may be unpleasant, or even repulsive, but we must brave and endure them. Wherever human souls are going down to ruin and death, we must hasten and throw out the life-line. We must proclaim to them the truth, lovingly but fearlessly, even though it should bring us unpopularity and abuse. And the faithful message must be spoken in the homes of the rich, as well as the hovels of the poor. Nowhere must there be any compromising. No weakling is fit for such service as this. It requires the spirit of a hero for the successful fulfillment of such a mission. Easy-going men, clothed in soft raiment, may play at it, but they will accomplish little. Paul knew whereof he was speaking when he exhorted Timothy to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

LET US WORK FOR A REVIVAL.

In our issue of last week we reprinted from the British Weekly what was to us a most interesting article, entitled, "A Remarkable Evangelistic Movement Among the Primitive Methodists." We are giving our readers in this number of the Advocate some additional matter bearing on the subject of revival work which we trust they will peruse attentively. We are far more concerned to see a deep spiritual awakening throughout the Church than we are in the success of any other movement which has been inaugurated in Southern Methodism. This unquestionably is our greatest need. If we could have a genuine and widespread quickening of the religious life of our people, every worthy undertaking that has been projected among us would be given a new forward impulse. It would strengthen the cause of missions, church extension, Christian education and our various charitable enterprises to an extent that nothing else can. It would also go further toward the solution of our much-discussed church problems than any other influence that can be brought to bear upon them. Indeed, it is the one thing that can infuse new life and confidence into the Church, give it a new grip upon the unshepherded masses, and empower it to meet triumphantly the mighty issues which confront it in these opening years of the twentieth century. Believing this to be true, it is our purpose during the year 1912 to do everything we can through the columns of the Advocate to awaken the revival spirit and promote the cause of a wholesome evangelism.

Shall we not fix our minds upon this supreme work of the Church in the very beginning of the year? It certainly deserves our first thought and attention. It is the work that we have been specifically commissioned to do and which lies nearest the heart of the Heavenly Father. In it the angels are interested, and we are told that they rejoice on high when success crowns the efforts of those who seek to accomplish it. Let our pastors begin at once to work for a revival in their charges. Let them strive to get into closer touch with God and enlist the sympathy and co-operations of the spiritually-minded persons in their congregations. There is tremendous power in united prayer. Let the evangelistic note be dominant in the church services. Let active personal work be done, seeking the guidance of the Holy Spirit in its performance. Lay the foundation for a series of services and have them when things seem to be in readiness. But do not make the mistake of expecting no results until the protracted meeting begins. There is no reason why a pastor and his people should not have conversions at the regular hours of worship, if they will try intelligently to do so. Indeed, something is radically wrong when they do not. When a church is deeply conscious of its need of a spiritual awakening, recognizes the futility of all other reliance, and turns to God with penitence and faith and goes energetically to work, it never fails to witness a manifestation of divine power and to experience a season of refreshing. They who sincerely seek an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in the right way are never disappointed. The Lord's set time to favor Zion is when Zion wants to be favored.

In conclusion, we quote the following from the account of the revival among the Primitive Methodists which we reproduced last week: "One of the hopeful features is that the revival is most conspicuous among the ministers. Some testify to a new spiritual experience; more show an awakened heart to the needs of the unsaved, and an evangelistic fervor beyond anything that has characterized their ministry in recent years. Some of the leading preachers and ablest platform speakers are concentrating their powers on persuading men to immediate surrender to Christ. From connectional officers and college professors down to the rank and file, a new evangelistic ring can be discerned in public utterances. There is new joy in many a village congregation because the traveling preacher in the little week-night service has spoken with an unction that has warmed hearts."

Shall we soon see such a condition of things in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South? Why not? May God speed the day!

THE COUNTRY'S GREATEST RESOURCE.

In an address at Tulane University recently, Prof. G. D. Harris of Cornell University said: "The greatest undeveloped resource of Louisiana today is the brain of the college student." Why did the gentleman restrict his remark to the young men of the State attending college? The best resources of the commonwealth are her own boys and girls wherever they may be—whether on the farm or in the city, whether in school or out of it. The State which succeeds best in developing her youth into intelligent and worthy men and women will have the brightest future. No money yields so rich and large a return as that which is applied to this purpose. Indeed, the wonder is that more of our philanthropists do not devote their means directly to the education of the children of the poor. Money transmuted into noble manhood and womanhood is the most praiseworthy and enduring monument that can be erected on earth. Sarah K. Knowlton forcibly brings out this truth in the following impressive lines:

"He built a house; time laid it in the dust.
He wrote a book; its title's now forgot.
He ruled a city, but his name is not
On any tablet graven, or where rust
Can gather from disuse, or marble bust.
He took a child from out a wretched cot,
Who on the State dishonor might have brought,
And reared him to the Christian's hope and trust.
The boy, to manhood grown, became a light
To many souls, and preached for human need
The wondrous love of the Omnipotent.
The work was multiplied like stars at night
When darkness deepens. Every noble deed Lasts longer than a granite monument."

Concerning Revivals

A WORK FOR PASTOR AND PEOPLE.

If our people are consecrated and earnest and willing to co-operate with the pastor and pray and work for a revival, there may be a revival on every charge. Prayer and dependence upon God are essential, but without work do not count for much in winning men to God.

Preacher and people depend too much on outside agencies. Too often the thought of a revival is synonymous with evangelist, and it is said: "Get an evangelist, and let us have a revival." There are circumstances in many communities when the presence of the evangelist is a great blessing, if not a necessity, but every preacher of the Gospel should be an evangelist. No man will succeed just like some other man, but every preacher should be a soul-winner, and in adapting himself to the church and community where he labors, should study the needs of the people and plan to lead men to God. The preacher must do personal work; there are people in every parish who would welcome a candid, heart-to-heart talk on the subject of personal religion, and the wise preacher who studies conditions and people finds abundant opportunity for such work. The people must do personal work; the layman depends on the preacher, and says that is the preacher's task; but the tactful man who himself has come in touch with God can get in touch with his neighbor, tell him what God has done for him, and lead him to his Saviour.—Rev. Robert T. Woicott, in Zions Herald.

A REVIVAL NOT A MIRACLE.

Revivals were formerly regarded as miracles. And it has been so by some even in our day. And others have ideas on the subject so loose and unsatisfactory, that if they would only think, they would see their absurdity. For a long time, it was supposed by the church, that a revival was a miracle, an interposition of Divine power which they had nothing to do with, and which they had no more agency in producing, than they had in producing thunder or a storm of hail, or an earthquake. It is only within a few years that ministers generally have supposed revivals were to be promoted, by the use of means designed and adapted specially to that object. Even in New England, it has been supposed that revivals came just as showers do, sometimes in one town, and sometimes in another, and that ministers and churches could do nothing more to produce them than they could to make showers of rain come on their own town, when they were falling on a neighboring town.

It used to be supposed that a revival would come about once in fifteen years, and all would be converted that God intended to save, and then they must wait until another crop came forward on the stage of life. Finally, the time got shortened down to five years, and they supposed there might be a revival as often as that.

I have heard a fact in relation to one of these pastors, who supposed revivals might come about once in five years. There had been a revival in his congregation. The next year, there was a revival in a neighboring town, and he went there to preach, and staid several hours, till he got his soul all engaged in the work. He returned home on Saturday, and went into his study to prepare for the Sabbath. And his soul was in an agony. He thought how many adult persons there were in his congregation at enmity with God—so many still unconverted—so many persons die yearly—such a portion of them unconverted—if a revival does not come under five years, so many adult heads of families will be in hell. He put down his calculations on paper, and embodied them in his sermon for the next day, with his heart bleeding at the dreadful picture. As I understood it, he did not do this with any expectation of a revival, but he felt deeply, and poured out his heart to his people. And that sermon awakened forty heads of families, and a powerful revival followed; and so his theory about a revival once in five years was all exploded.

Thus God has overthrown, generally, the theory that revivals are miracles.—Rev. Charles G. Flinn, in Revival Lectures.

SOME SUGGESTIONS BY DWIGHT L. MOODY.

(D. L. Moody was perhaps the greatest soul-winner the Church has had in a half century. The following conversation concerning evangelistic work (taken from his life by W. R. Moody), in which the answers are from the lips of the distinguished evangelist, are well worth careful consideration.)

Q. "How can we make our prayer-meetings more interesting?"

A. "Well, be more interesting yourself; that is one way. I have seen many meetings just murdered, the life taken out of them, by the leader. There is a way of going to meeting by which you may do this. Go in with your coat buttoned up, looking at no one; do not use your natural voice, and be as stiff as you can. Begin by saying you have nothing to say, and then talk for half an hour. If the meeting isn't dead then, I am no prophet. Then get up and scold the people for not taking part after you have thrown the meeting open. For my part, I don't know why we should go into church in that cold, formal way. When we go to church, why not take a man by the hand; throw off the stiffness, and make everybody feel at home?"

Q. "If the pastor of a church does not favor evangelistic work, what can a layman do, besides praying, to promote the spiritual work?"

A. "I should do a great deal more than pray. I believe the time has come for the laymen to move; and by 'laymen' I mean men and women. If you can't work in the church, don't leave it, but go out and hold cottage meetings. In the country get the schoolhouse; that is a magnificent place to work. If the school board prohibits the use of the schoolhouse, hold meetings on a hill-top. That is what Christ did. Pray God to fill you with the Holy Ghost. Nothing can stop a man who is red hot and full of the Spirit of God. If we cannot get the people to come to church, let us go into their homes.

"I believe that a man or woman who is filled with the Spirit of God can gain access to the hearts of the people, and can have conversions anywhere and everywhere. There is a class of people who don't believe in revivals and in what we call conversions. Don't quarrel with them, but go right to work and have conversions. A man who hides his talent under a napkin, and, because his pastor is opposed to evangelistic meetings, goes through life praying for his church once a week, or once a month, to ease his conscience, is on the wrong track."

Q. "Would you advise a pastor to hold evangelistic meeting every Sunday night?"

A. "I would hold an evangelistic service fifty-two Sundays in the year. Sunday night is better than any other time, because a great many never get out except Sunday night. Workingmen and mechanics don't have time any other time, and if you don't reach them Sunday night you won't reach them at all. Most of the church audiences on Sunday morning are made up of Christian people, and that is the time when ministers ought to feed the flock and build up the church. If they are fed properly all the members become preachers themselves, and instead of the minister having one meeting Sunday night there will be twenty. Within five miles of Round Top every Sunday night we have ten or twelve gospel meetings when we are in running order. I believe this can be done all through the United States.

"I heard of a minister who said to a judge in his congregation: 'I am going out to a schoolhouse to preach; you have horses, and I want you to drive me out.' The judge said that he would be very glad to do so. On the way the minister said: 'Judge, I am going to ask you to speak.'

"Oh," said the judge, 'I couldn't do that.'

"But," said the minister, 'I was in the court the other day, and I never heard anything better than the charge you gave to the jury.'

"The minister had some tact, and when he went on to the platform he said: 'Now, I am going to pray and read a portion of the Scripture, and then I am going to put the judge in the witness-box and examine him.' He asked the questions, and the judge preached the whole sermon. Our judges and our lawyers are spolling for work. It wouldn't take long to evangelize this country if we could only get the pews into the pulpit, but the ministers can never do it alone."

Q. "Would you have a stated after-meeting every Sunday night?"

A. "Yes; every time I preached the Gospel I would look for results. There are three or four kinds of meetings. When we come around the Lord's table, that is worship. When we expound the Bible, that is to feed the Church of God. But when we invite men to come to God, then we ought to expect that they will come right then and there."

Q. "How would you conduct an after-meeting?"

A. "I never could conduct it fifty-two Sundays alike. There are very few men who could do that successfully. If the sermon is over at half-past eight, when the audience expected to stay until nine, they are in good mood to stay a half hour longer. There are two ways of inviting people to stay to an after-meeting. One is, to send them all home. The benediction is a polite invitation for people to go. I wouldn't pronounce any benediction at the first meeting, and I wouldn't say, 'If any are concerned about their soul they are invited to stay.' You stick an 'If' four feet high before them, and it will take an earthquake to move them into an inquiry-room. When I was converted it took three months to screw up my courage to be examined by a committee to be taken into the church. You might as well try to get a man to go before a justice of the peace. I would say, 'Now, we are going to have a second meeting, and if any one must go, won't you just slip out while we are singing?' I would put it as though I expected no one to go."

CHRIST, A STUMBLING STONE.

The Jews would have gladly crowned Jesus as a king and they accepted him as a teacher of rank, but they stumbled at his claim to be the Son of God and the promised Christ. In this respect we of to-day are in danger of being, in spirit, as were the Jews. Christ to us is a King, and for him we live and for him we are willing to die. He is to us the great teacher, and with us "Thus sayeth the Lord" is proof positive in any controversy. We, some of us, even accept him as a priest and recognize that he accomplished a great work for humanity in a religious way and declare him to have been divine; but is he our Saviour? This is the important question, because it is eternal in consequence. It is not enough to acknowledge him as king, teacher and priest, but we must know him in a personal way as a Saviour.

When Jesus was crucified many of the Jews and Roman soldiers said; "Surely this was the Son of God". They were even willing to claim for him a divine prerogative, but when it was announced that he had risen from the dead, they again stumbled. To the Jews, Jesus was dead. Again we are like them. Many of us believe in him as a Saviour and know that he has saved us, but we think of him as dead. Our thoughts drift back to the Garden, to the Cross and to the Grave. We think of his sacrifice and forget that he was risen from the dead and is now alive. The effectiveness of a Christian's life depends on the presence of the living Christ dwelling in him. It is not enough to have had the experience of conversion. Life, vigorous strength, and confidence are necessary to be an effective Christian, and these one cannot possess unless one's saviour is a living Christ. "Behold I lay in Sion a stumblingstone and rock of offence; and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed."—A. J. Gearheard.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S CHAIR.

"Keep me, Lares of my fathers: for ye bred me to manhood—when a tender child I played at your feet."—Tibullus.

Botsford, the historian, says: "The simple but severe character of the Romans found expression in the family. Marriage was a religious act that made the home sacred, the house a holy place. Within lived Vesta, whose altar was the hearth; within were the spirits of the ancestors, who, in the form of Lares guarded the house from every harm; within too were the Penates, who blessed the family store." When Tibullus says he was bred to manhood by playing as a child at the feet of the Lares, he meant that they had family worship in his father's house. How many Methodist boys can say what this accomplished pagan said, and trace their manhood to the family altar in their home? Talk about a revival! There is where it must begin. You may go on converting people, and putting their names on the Church roll, and preaching to them, and boasting of your Sunday schools, and all else, but as long as you do not worship God in the home, that home is not up to the standard of an orthodox pagan home. The family altar was the first altar, and it is still the most sacred altar. There is something radically wrong with the piety that neglects it.

If history teaches us anything, Meek, it teaches us that religion is the foundation of the State. When men lose faith in God society goes to pieces. Infidelity dissolved France into a seething chaos of blood and terror. The first thing Napoleon did when he seized the fiery monster of the Revolution by the throat, was to re-open the churches and restore religion to its rights. He did it as a police measure. He did it because the intuition and common sense of a constructive statesman told him that society is based on morality, and religion alone gives adequate sanctions to morality. What the history of Rome, and the history of France teaches us on a vast scale, and with all the emphasis of tragic horror, our own observation confirms. The Church is our only bulwark against anarchy. Take the bulwark away, and all is gone. Unbelief has destroyed many nations, but has never upbuilted one. Religion has been the great creator of empires, and republics have flourished as they listened to her voice. Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Greece and Rome all teach us the same stupendous truth—when their gods were dead their glory turned to dust. Crime increases as religion decays. Judge O'Sullivan of the court of General Sessions in New York City, after investigation into the cause of the prevalence and increase of crime among the youth of that city, assigned the first place to "the lack of proper religious instruction in the school."

There is no institution in America of which our people are prouder than our public school system. The millions given to it have been cheerfully given, and it is being continually improved. To touch it is to many an act as sacrilegious as that of Uzza when he put his hands upon the Ark of Israel. But in the cold light of history, and the hot glare of such fierce facts as that to which Judge O'Sullivan calls attention, one cannot help thinking seriously on the subject. Will the public schools paganize us? The question is not fair to the pagans, for as Paul observed in Athens long ago, they were "very religious", and gave their gods the best they had. Suppose I put the question this way: Will the public school make us an irreligious nation? What is to prevent such a deplorable issue?

Religion is the foundation of the State, yet the State cannot teach religion. Dr. Schurman, President of Cornell University, says, "The Bible is the greatest document in the world. No man can be called an educated man who is ignorant of the Bible; and no man can be said to be a wholly uneducated man who knows his Bible." Yet with all its boasted democratic liberty, no State school can teach the Bible. Its course of study excludes "the greatest document" in the world. It may teach English literature, but cannot teach the book that made Milton's poetry sublime or Bacon's philosophy profound. The very best it can do is to keep Christian men and women in charge of these State schools, whose personal influence will impress religion on the pupils in an indirect, yet not wholly barren way. But wherever an objection is raised the Bible must go. The courts have uniformly so decided, and have decided right. It is the inevitable logic of that separation of Church and State, which is the fundamental doctrine of American civilization. The most recent utterance we have is the decision of the Supreme Court of Illinois. In an opinion, perfectly clear and sound, the Court decided that to read the Bible in the public school was contrary to the constitution. You see our dilemma, Meek? The State depends on morality: morality depends on religion; yet the State is forbidden to teach religion.

Dr. Elliot, ex-President of Harvard University and "the Nestor of our modern educational system," tries to help us out. He said recently in the Outlook: "Education is a great governmental function in the republic; and when we speak of the religious ideal in education, we mean the religious ideal in the schools and universities which are supported by public taxation. Does the complete separation of Church and State which obtains everywhere in the United States shut out from the public school and universities the religious ideal? Yes, if we mean by the religious ideal any dogma and prescribed rites and ceremonies, any fixed observances, or any catechisms or liturgies. No—if we mean by the religious ideal truth, purity and goodness personified and held up before the rising generation as standards of right feeling and right conduct. It must be admitted that this use of the word religious is comparatively new in the world; but so is religious toleration and so is democracy." You see, Meek, that Dr. Elliot realizes that we must have a religion, and that it ought to be taught as a part of our public school instruction.

But now see how illogical this man is, how his glittering ideal is shivered by the slightest contact with actual conditions. Two considerations on the first thought show that Dr. Elliot's idea is little short of absurd. First, he demands religion without any "dogmas"—that is, any definite statements of truth, without any rites and ceremonies, any fixed observances, any catechisms or liturgies. No such religion ever existed, and in the very nature of things, never will exist. It is contrary to the very genius of the human mind for a religion to exist simply on an ideal. It contradicts the whole psychology as well as history of religion to suppose it can live as a mere abstraction, like a principle of mathematics. Even a mathematical principle must express itself in symbols. Such a use of the word religious is not only new, it is irrational. Dr. Elliot himself is dimly conscious of this, for he speaks of it as "personified". Personified in whom? If you say in Christ, in whom alone truth and beauty and goodness are perfectly "personified", you are teaching Christianity, and this Dr. Elliot says is not allowed. We all know the supreme power of an ideal, but it never touches us until it is embodied. Truth to be constructive must become incarnate. "An ideal", as Dr. Forsythe says, "is not mighty to save." The world had plenty of truth to save it before Jesus came. One of the chief points Celsus, the first great intellectual antagonist of Christianity, made against the early Church, was that Christ taught nothing new. While Celsus was wrong, yet it was not by revealing new truths to the world that Jesus saved men; but by exemplifying that truth, both old and new, in Himself. "In Him was life". We are saved not by believing in Him, but by believing in Him. "He that hath the Son hath life". To quote Dr. Forsythe again: "It is not the ideal man we seek, who verifies and glorifies our noblest Humanity, convincing us of its inalienable place in God in spite of our sin; but it is the redeeming God who sets Humanity in heavenly places in Christ Jesus". An Arian Christ, my dear Meek, is too weak to lift fallen humanity out of the abyss of sin and sin in which it is weltering. A Unitarian Christ, "the superhuman chancellor and most private secretary of" the Eternal, in whose presence Dr. Elliot himself would stand uncovered, but whom he would not permit to enter an American school house, such a deputy deity is utterly helpless before the vast problem of human redemption. Week.

"Twas great to speak a world from naught;
Twas greater to redeem!"

If creation required a God, much more redemption. And if the Bible is true, redemption taxed the Godhead itself to the uttermost. He "emptied" Himself to achieve it. The process of its achievements in the re-filling of the Godhead.

But there is a second objection to Dr. Elliot's "religious ideal" for the public school: to the extent that it is "religious" it is, per se, excluded. The State cannot teach any form of religion. I have as much right to object to any child being taught the vague ethical ideal of a Socinian creed, such as Dr. Elliot holds, as he has to his child being taught my definite Trinitarian belief. He believes I am wrong in my positive religion, with its dogmas and liturgy, and I know he is wrong in his agnostic moonshine type of so-called religion. But no matter whether either of us is right or wrong, I object to my child being taught what he holds for religion, and according to the fundamental law of the republic, it cannot be taught in the school supported by taxation. Dr. Elliot utterly fails to solve the problem—a problem that goes to the very roots of our civilization.

Our only hope to save our country is in the home and the Church. If we will rekindle the dead fires on the domestic altar; if we will teach our children to serve the living God as the ancient Roman taught his children to serve the Lares and Penates of his father's faith; if we train our children in the home to be religious, teach them to pray, to read the Bible, to govern themselves by its precepts, and set them the example in our own lives—if we will do these things, we may supply the lack of definite religious instruction in the public school. And there is no excuse if we do not do these things. We deserve and will surely receive the judgment of Jehovah's wrath. I put the home before everything else. You can trace every evil in our social system to some neglect in the home: you can remedy every evil through the home.

And next to the home is the Church. My dear Meek, will you say through the Advocate, and ring the changes on it until the heart of every Methodist in your wide field is awake and throbbing with the vital truth, that the Church must educate as well as evangelize the nation? O for a trumpet voice to thunder forth the divine command: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations." Education is far more fundamental in the Church than in the State. Jesus was a teacher sent from God. Every Church ought to be a school and every school a church over which Christ presides. And in view of the grave perils that threaten the republic, perils that only a serious moral sense can avert—a public conscience turn aside—and the confessed inability of the State to develop that moral sense, what a tremendous responsibility rests upon the Church school! The pulpit must arouse the people; the press must stir them up, and the Church must agitate the question until the dullest feel the importance and respond to the demand of duty.

My new work here at the Memphis Conference Female Institution gives me a closer view of the subject, and I am appalled at the indifference to "Christian" education among the masses of the people. The education given by the State is ample to satisfy the average man, though it never touches the moral nature of his child. His whole conception of education is divorced from religion. God is not in his thoughts when he is planning where to educate his child. And yet a godless education is the greatest misfortune that could befall him. It is infinitely better for society to have the reverence of Tibullus for the Lares, fictitious guardians of his home, visible emblems of invisible divine power that rules the world, than the brilliant blasphemy of an Ingerson, sneering at all things holy. I once heard Dr. Leroy M. Lee, in his day a Nestor of Methodism in Virginia, say that when he became editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, he resolved to write Randolph-Macon College into an endowment, or write it into the dust. The endowment came. Meek, ring it out that we Methodists must put ten times more money into education. We must do it to help save our country from the rising tide of non-religious secular education. The city has destroyed the home; the State has usurped the school; and unless we awake, and rescue both, there is nothing ahead but the cataract. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Bishop T. D. Bratton laid the corner-stone of a new Episcopal Church at Hattiesburg on January 3.

It is stated that the members of the Canadian Cabinet are divided among the several denominations as follows: 7 Anglicans, 6 Methodists, 4 Roman Catholics, and 1 Baptist.

The Mission to the Lepers of India is maintained by the co-operation of thirty denominations. It reported that at present it is caring for more than 11,000 victims of this incurable disease.

An assessment of $2,400 has been placed on the Florida Conference for the maintenance of the Florida Christian Advocate. The Baltimore Conference also carries an assessment for its Conference organ.

The College Presidents' Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church met at Allegheny College, Meadville, Penn., January 2 and 3. The occasion was one of much interest. Such a conference of Christian editors ought to be productive of far-reaching good.

The Presbyterian Men's Union of New Orleans has resolved to raise $10,000 a year for church extension work in this city. The plan proposed is to find fifty men who will give $100 each, and let the other half of the sum be raised by smaller subscriptions.

Union Theological Seminary is having a record-breaking attendance. It has been suggested that the institution draws because of the practicability of its courses of study, which are aimed to develop men who really know how to do the work of the pastorate.

Bishop W. F. McDowell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who recently made a tour of India, states that while Christianity has 1,000,000 adherents in that country, Mohammedanism has 5,000,000. The Crescent seems to be outstripping the Cross in that land. Is not this a call for more active and aggressive work in that great field?

The Christian Guardian, of Toronto, Canada, declares that our Methodist Review Quarterly is "not surpassed by any publication of its kind in the world." It also says: "Under the former management it was good, but Dr. Alexander seems to have brought to his task in editing it especial gifts and qualifications that have given it an altogether new and distinctive quality."

The first number of the International Review of Missions (a quarterly), which is to be published by the Continuation Committee of the World's Missionary Conference, is forthcoming. It will be edited by Mr. J. H. Oldham, assisted by an advisory editorial board of experts from all parts of the world. The first number will contain a contribution from Ambassador James Bryce on "The Immediate Duty of Christianity to the Non-Christian World."

When the sixteen battleships that comprise the Atlantic fleet sailed from Guantanamo Bay a few days ago, they carried with them three Y. M. C. A. men who will do Association work while the fleet is in Cuban waters. The Government has set apart a building at Guantanamo for the use of the Association and immense quantities of magazines, books, games and writing material were taken along for the use of the men of the fleet during their leisure moments.

A plan has been formed to remove the bodies of four pioneer Baptist preachers in Kentucky from their present resting places to the cemetery at Frankfort, the State capital, and erect a suitable monument to them. The men referred to are General John Gano, who was appointed a chaplain in the Revolutionary War by George Washington; William Hickman, John Taylor, and Lewis Craig. Mr. Craig is credited with having moved his whole church (every member and official) from Virginia to the commonwealth "of the dark and bloody ground."

Two of the wealthiest Baptist congregations in New York city—the Calvary church in West Fifty-seventh street and the Fifth Avenue Church—are to be merged, and the Fifth Avenue's million dollar edifice, which John D. Rockefeller attends regularly, will be sold to provide an endowment for the new church corporation. Both churches are at present without a pastor. The Calvary congregation has 2300 members and a plant worth $1,000,000, while that of Fifth Avenue has 700 members. The merged churches will probably keep the name of Calvary Church.

According to the Missionary Review of the World (New York) the gifts to foreign missions throughout the world were $175,000 less in the year 1911 than in the year preceding. The total amount contributed was $25,300,000. Of this sum, North America gave $12,300,000 and Great Britain $9,000,000. The following are the five missionary societies having an income of more than a million dollars: "Methodist Episcopal, New York, $2,200,000; Church of England, London, $1,900,000; Presbyterian, New York, $1,700,000; Baptist, Boston, $1,000,000; Congregational, Boston, $1,000,000.

The second part of the campaign of the Men and Religion Movement started on January 8, with four teams in the field. Just prior to launching out again, the workers had a conference among themselves with a view to discovering any antecedent mistakes made and adding, if possible, larger efficiency to their methods. The four fields next to be entered are Portland, Providence, Springfield, and Worcester; following these, work will be done in Boston, Hartford, and Rochester. It is expected that during the months of January and February four hundred secondary meetings will be held in the smaller towns of the West and Southwest.

TWO BOOKS.

I have just completed the careful reading and study of the "Life of Joshua Soule," by our Dr. DuBose. It would be well if every member, and especially every minister, in our church would give this book a careful reading. It not only gives the history of one of the Church's greatest men in a most pleasing and attractive style; but it furnishes history of the separation of 1844 that I have not found in any other book. That Bishop Soule should have remained quiet under the ever-increasing cloud of an ever-increasing aspersion, while he possessed documentary evidence for his own vindication, and, at the same time for the complete discomfiture of those who were arrayed against him, shows the mastery of a spirit not human. Why should not such a book be placed in the course of study for our young preachers? Surely no one can read the book and not desire to become great in life and pure in heart.

The other book is "The Highest Critics vs. the Higher Critics," by Dr. Munhall. In this age when the Word of God and the Church are confronted with its most implacable foes in its schools and its pulpits, this book is strong and timely. To those not otherwise advised there is in this book a revelation of the fact that these so-called and would make-believe latter-day scholars, are nothing more than parrots, talking after their masters of centuries ago; and that there is but a shade of difference between what they have to say against the Bible and what Voltaire, Tom Paine and others had said in the long ago. That the shade makes a difference we admit; yet whether the effect produced on the life of the Church shall be materially different is a debatable question. The one seeks to destroy the hope of the church, while the other seeks to destroy its spirituality. The end is the same and the two are one. Let all our people secure and read this book, and they will not only be fortified against the ravings of professed greatness in small men, but they will love the Word of God more than ever before.

TWO NOTABLE CAREERS ENDED.

Two distinguished citizens of Louisiana passed off the earthly stage of action last Thursday, January 4—Mr. Isaac Delgado, and ex-Governor Francis T. Nicholls. The former died at his residence in this city, and the latter at his old plantation home at Thibodaux, La. Both had been ill for several days, and the death of neither was unexpected.

Mr. Delgado was born in Jamaica, November 23, 1839. He came to New Orleans at 14 years of age, and engaged in business as a clerk. Later he became connected with his uncle, Samuel Delgado, in the sugar and molasses business, and shared in the great prosperity of that firm, amassing a large fortune. He never married, but lived with his uncle and aunt. The family was fond of travel, and gathered in its attractive home in New Orleans, from various parts of the world, one of the finest art collections in the Southern States. Mr. Delgado was a man of philanthropic impulses and gave liberally to benevolent causes. When Mrs. Samuel Delgado, his aunt, died, she left $20,000 to the New Orleans Charity Hospital; to this, Mr. Delgado added $180,000 and erected as a memorial to her and his deceased uncle the magnificent Delgado annex to this world-famed institution. He was also much interested in the Eye, Ear, Nose, and Throat Hospital, and gave $5,000 toward the construction of its new building. His latest benefaction was the gift of $150,000 for the erection of the Isaac Delgado Art Museum in the City Park, which has been completed recently. It was his desire that his superb collection of art treasures should be transferred to this institution, where a special room has been set apart for them, and no doubt this will be done at an early day. By his public spiritedness and generous philanthropy, Mr. Delgado reared for himself a lasting monument in the Crescent City. The generations to come will be profited by his wise disposition of his fortune, and doubtless will pronounce his name with grateful appreciation.

Francis Tillou Nicholls, the other noted Louisianian who last week responded to the final summons, was born at Donaldsonville, August 20, 1834. Early in youth he entered the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., from which he was graduated with honors. While in the United States Army service, he was stationed in Florida, where he took part in the campaign against the Seminole Indians. Later, he took a law course at the Louisiana State University, and engaged in the practice of that profession at Napoleonville, and subsequently in New Orleans. He was a gallant Confederate soldier, starting as a captain and attaining to the rank of a brigadier general under Stonewall Jackson. He commanded the famous Stonewall Brigade, and lost an arm at Winchester and a leg at Chancellorsville. He was twice elected Governor of the State and enjoyed to an unusual degree the confidence of the people. The last office that he filled was that of Supreme Judge, which he held for many years and from which he retired, under the pension service clause, about twelve months ago. Mr. Nicholls leaves behind a noble record—one which will shine resplendent in the history of the State for many decades to come. He belonged to that extraordinary group of men which the Old South bequeathed to the commonwealths of this section in the period immediately following the Civil War, such as Harris of Tennessee, Brown and Hill of Georgia, Lamar and Stone, of Mississippi, Houston of Texas, Letcher of Virginia, and Vance and Butler of the Carolinas—men whose names will never be forgotten, and whose careers will forever reflect credit to the social order that produced them. Though possessed of many worthy traits of character, Judge Nicholl's crowning quality was his integrity, which towered like a mountain peak, and which nothing could shake. It was he who, when he was Governor refused to sign the bill re-chartering the notorious Louisiana Lottery, making the famous utterance which has been so often quoted: "I would permit my remaining arm to be severed from my body and buried beside the other on the battlefield before I would sign this measure." The memory of such a man is a priceless heritage, which we honor ourselves in cherishing.

With the beginning of 1912 Arizona becomes a full-fledged State. This makes the United States a nation of forty-eight states.

It is announced that Southwest Pass at the mouth of the Mississippi river will soon be opened. It is now 1,000 feet wide and 35 feet deep.

The uniformed police have been removed from the White House and placed on duty on the streets. They, because of their uniforms, were of little service to the country.

The British Government has bairred American meat packers who are under prosecution by the United States Government from bidding for meat contracts for the British Army.

Daniel Howard was inaugurated President of the Republic of Liberia on January 1, taking the place of President Barclay, another negro. Liberia is one nation that is entirely under the control of the colored race.

James Whitcomb Riley received twelve hundred letters of Christmas cheer. He did not answer all of them but expressed his keen delight in these words: "I can't answer them all. I can't hold a pen, but this is a Merry Christmas for me, and I hope for all my unknown friends."

A boarding house keeper recently hid fifty dollars in the muzzle of an old shot gun. A boarder was disturbed one night later by the howling of a cur. Thrusting a shell into the gun he fired at the disturbing dog. The dog left and has not been seen or heard since. Neither has the fifty dollars.

The report of the Chicago live stock market shows that more than three million cattle, seven million hogs and five million sheep were purchased during the year 1911. Almost all of these were butchered in Chicago. These facts indicate that the United States has not yet swung into line as a vegetarian nation.

The Kansas Board of Health proposes to establish a legal standard for hash. Think of it! Hash standardized. One might think of standardizing drinking cups, bed sheets, ideas and systems, but to think of standardizing hash requires a state of mental ataxy akin to delirium. One had just as well try to think of establishing a standard for chaos.

An agricultural campaign will be begun in Mississippi on January 9, to last until the 3rd of February. Experts have been engaged who will address the farmers on practical and scientific farming and give tried methods of fighting the crop pests. This is the kind of schooling that the farmers need and the State is to be commended in this undertaking.

That a man past sixty isn't too old to learn and achieve success in a new field is abundantly proven by the record made by Rear Admiral Charles H. Davis, who after passing the age of sixty-three took up painting and is to-day ranked as perhaps America's foremost landscape painter. He now has thirty-two paintings on exhibition in the Corcoran Art Gallery in Washington.

$14,500,000 were spent during the past year in the war against tuberculosis. Nearly $12,000,000 of this was used in sanatoriums, and the balance was spent in promoting schools, rests, associations and other organizations. Already $10,000,000 has been pledged by state legislatures for use during 1912. Science has decreed that the great white plague must be stamped out.

Recent statistics show that Kansas has 7,000 rural schools and 500 high schools, 400 of which teach scientific agriculture. Kansas is the richest state per capita in the Union—one out of every five of her citizens owns an automobile. She has fewer drunkards, less crime, and less poverty than any other State. Kansas has state-wide prohibition. She is sometimes spoken of with a sneer, but Kansas does things just the same.

Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans died last Wednesday in Washington, D. C., aged sixty-five years. He was one of the most conspicuous figures in our modern Navy, and after more than a hundred achievements worth while, had gained for himself the endearing soubriquet, "Fighting Bob." He had won fame and had been signally honored by his country time and again, and his death removes from our Navy one of its real fighting men.

Dr. Sun Yet Sen has been elected by the reactionaries in China as president. He is a native of Canton and has been in practical exile for twenty-five years. America has not recognized the new government, nor will other nations likely act favorably towards it until after the meeting of the proposed peace conference. At any rate it is not likely that a man who has been so unpopular as Dr. Sen will be considered the proper man to head the new Republic.

The Massachusetts shoe manufacturers threaten to raise the price of shoes fifty cents per pair on account of the increase in the cost of leather. There are 249,000,000 pairs of shoes purchased annually in the United States. This would mean an additional cost of $124,000,000 for this item of wearing apparel. In the last five years the cost of sole leather has increased less than half a cent per pound. Other leather has advanced but slightly, not more than an average of ten cents for each pair of shoes. Why this slight rise in cost should be an excuse for such a raise in the price of shoes is hard to understand.

Concerning Missions

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

The Woman's Home Mission Society, now called the Home Department of the Woman's Missionary Council, closed its 25th Anniversary on Dec 31, 1911. It has accomplished a wonderful work; not only in a material way, but in the larger life that has come to the women of the church.

December 23rd marked the birthday of the founder of this society, and we are calling for a thank-offering to celebrate, in a fitting manner, these two epochal events in the history of Southern Methodism.

This building is to include a chapel for the devotional services of the school and also a gymnasium for physical culture, and will cost $25,000. It is to be called the Lucinda B. Helm Hall. If the one hundred thousand women and children enlisted in this work will respond with only a small thank offering, we can easily erect this monument to one whom we should delight to honor. I would suggest that every Missionary auxiliary in the Louisiana Conference supply itself with mite boxes, and put in these boxes a nickel or dime or more every time there is cause for gratitude. This suggestion comes from a dear sister of the Alabama Conference where the mite boxes overflow with these offerings.

Mrs. A. L. Marshall, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., will supply all demands for these little boxes or any literature you may need. Let us not fall behind in this expression of gratitude but send on through our Conference treasurer, by the 31st of March, 1912, the close of our first quarter of the New Year, an offering worthy of the call and the occasion.

ANENT THE DISTRICT STEWARDS' MEETING.

"Well begun is half done," is a very familiar phrase and closely allied to it is another, "Be sure you are right then go ahead." We often hear from speakers or see it in print that we are living in a progressive age. But the writer is either very dull of comprehension or utterly lacking in a sense of appreciation, for relatively speaking as he sees it, we are in no more of a progressive age now than when Columbus by accident discovered America.

And while rapid strides of progress are being made in the commercial and scientific world, the Church of God is attempting long strides to keep up with the world. That is all right; we do not object to the Church keeping up with the world. But let us only keep up with the world in the sense that we can reach and win the world for Christ. It seems to me that the tendency has been too much in the direction of appealing to the sympathetic chord of the world in order to win favor for the Church instead of making the life and intent of the Church to glow with such divine light as to appeal to the world and bring forth from the world a craving desire to come into and be a part of, and help the Church.

But the Church in many respects is already and has been doing this. However, many of the ministers of the Church in their zeal are attempting too much, we are afraid, and sometimes overleap their own responsibilities and presume to assume the responsibilities of the laymen. The writer now speaks of the district stewards' meeting. The district stewards do not fully attend and the preachers being there by courtesy assume the duties of those absent. The excuse is often given for this that the work must be done. Certainly, but there are always three, four, five or more of the district stewards present and they should do the work. One of the causes for the failure to get a full attendance or a quorum at these district stewards' meetings lies, we believe, in the fact that the office is not magnified as it should be. And in the next place the district stewards will not attend because they figure it out that the preachers will be there and will do the work. But the office will never be magnified and the attendance of the district stewards secured by the presumption upon the part of the preachers to do their work. In the first place, the responsibility of apportioning the assessments has been laid upon the district stewards by our law-making body, and in the next place the responsibility for the payment of the assessments rests upon the laymen whom the district stewards represent.

So while it affords profit and pleasure to the writer and the other preachers, let us attend the district stewards' meeting for the benefit of meeting the brethren and conferring and exchanging plans and purposes for the new conference year's work. The writer is sure of his ground in this matter as far as the temper of his presiding elder is concerned, as several conversations have been had with him along the line of the laymen's responsibilities in this line of church work.

And while new ways and new plans are all right, I believe in keeping in sight of and in touch with the old landmarks as much as possible. In adopting the new plan of weekly contributions on the assessments, we are simply reviving a lost practice introduced by Mr. Wesley in first organizing his "societies," and he got the inspiration from St. Paul, (1 Cor. XVI 2).

Let us be sure that the work is "well begun," for then it is "half done," and making sure that our start is "right," let us "go ahead" to a happy completion of our Lord's work, praying, planning and working for glorious results for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom in the world.

SAN FRANCISCO LETTER.

By Rev. W. P. Andrews.

Bishop Waterhouse spent a few hours at "Headquarters" last Thursday, en route from Montana, where he had been touring that Conference, to his home in Los Angeles. He had the preachers about the bay summoned and held a conference with them. The Bishop is pleased with the outlook throughout his district. In this Conference there is much to encourage, in spite of some discouragements.

A union revival meeting recently held at Red Bluff, under the leadership of Evangelist Hunnewell, resulted in over four hundred professions, mostly men. The genuineness of the work is being proven by the converts uniting with the Churches. Dr. S. W. Walker is having a continuous revival in his church in San Jose, there being conversions and accessions at almost every Sunday service.

Displeased with his appointment, Rev. H. F. Hoffpauer declined to go to his appointment (a banner charge as to liberality, etc.), at Milton, surrendered his credentials and has taken work with the M. E. Church. The place has been supplied with Brother Watts, who was transferred from the Los Angeles Conference.

Rev. H. F. Beaver, one of our most efficient young preachers, on account of the state of his health, has been compelled to ask to be relieved of his charge, Upper Lake.

The pastor at Gilroy, Rev. O. C. Coppage, is confined to his bed with typhoid fever, a rare disease in that locality. Rev. J. A. Batchelor, agent for the Fitzgerald and Pioneers Memorial Church Fund, is working quietly, but energetically, and hopes to be able to announce definite plans and report progress at an early date. In my next letter I hope to write of the ascended heroes, whose memory we would perpetuate. They are worthy.

The Home Missionary Conference recently held in this city, under the auspices of the International Council of the Federation of Churches, was an interesting one. Painstaking inquiry was made concerning destitution and overlapping, looking to a better distribution of workers. A committee was appointed to collect data. A much needed work this. I question not that workers enough are called into this field if they were only properly distributed. To have half a dozen churches competing with one another in a small town while another is wholly without the gospel, cannot be pleasing to the Lord.

A special session of the California Legislature has just closed. It was called for the purpose of adopting legislation made necessary by the recent adoption of several constitutional amendments. Among the most important of these, the initiative, referendum and recall (of all elective officers), woman suffrage, and an amendment prohibiting Appellate and Supreme judges from setting aside just verdicts in the lower courts purely on technicalities. This last was greatly needed. But for its adoption it may well be doubted if a plea of guilty would have been secured in the McNamara cases. The wisdom or unwisdom of woman suffrage will be demonstrated later. Will say now that our women are voting, regardless of their previous views on the subject, and I dare say that the men do not vote more intelligently. This special session of the Legislature has submitted another amendment providing for free text books in the public schools. Whatever fault may be found with the Johnson administration, it cannot be charged with failure to keep pre-election promises. I question if ever such promises have been more faithfully kept. I know not of a single failure.

San Francisco is having a cleaning up. The recent municipal election resulted in completely routing the McCarthy administration. What is hoped will prove to be the best business administration the city has ever had will take the reins of government Jan. 1. San Francisco is not all bad—not by a good deal.

Active work on the Exposition grounds is to be entered upon next month. The ground-breaking ceremonies were held Oct. 14, President Taft lifting the first shovelful of dirt. The State of New York has been the first to select a location for a State exhibit. Let all our friends in the East keep this great Exposition in view, and calculate to visit us then, if not before.

Think of an open-air concert on Christmas Eve. This is what took place in San Francisco last Sunday evening. It was a great affair. It is estimated that fully 100,000 people were gathered in the streets in the vicinity of Lotta's Fountain. Several eminent musicians furnished music, vocal and instrumental, and the multitude joined in a chorus of praise to Jehovah. The entertainment was provided by the San Francisco Examiner, under whose auspices Tetrizini sang Christmas Eve a year ago. It is proposed to make this an annual celebration. San Francisco usually has its nicest weather in winter.

REMINISCENT.

No. 2.

In Pensacola at last, we were within nine miles of Fort McRae, our objective point. We lodged at Sprawls, each one sprawling out to suit himself. Our breakfast at a restaurant was not the best, but better than our lodging. Our next move was to get to the Fort, right down Pensacola Bay. In the harbor were vessels and vessels, and our recruiting officer got us aboard of a nice little hoat and we ran down to the Fort in about thirty minutes, passing a lighthouse and a marine hospital on the way. On reaching the Fort we became members of the 10th Mississippi Infantry and were introduced to the commissioned officers of our company (H). They were Capt. Bibbs, Lieutenants Donaldson and Thomas. Lieutenant Little was our recruiting officer.

That night the "tug of war" began. We were taken on top of the Fort and drilled by moonlight. The drilling was in the main monotonous and hard, especially the drilling in the sand. It was white, two or three inches in depth, dry and loose, and when we were drilled in double quick (a trot) for a mile, perhaps, without a break, the mercury in the nineties, it was something like work. We were located on the bay, which was salt water. How could we make out? There were two large tank cisterns (guessing) each thirty to forty feet high. The tanks gave out early in the fall, and then the soldiers dug holes thirty feet and more from the edge of the water. The water would rise to a sufficient depth, and strange to say it would be fresh enough for all practical purposes.

On the opposite side of the bay, a mile and one-eighth distant, was situated Fort Pickens, which was occupied by the Federal soldiers. Pretty close together! Why didn't we fight? We did try sometimes but we were something like fighting cocks on different sides of a fence. All they can do is to thrash the fence. Our heavy artillery would become engaged sometimes and make land and sea tremble, but very little was accomplished except to batter our forts.

Living in the fort was enjoyable in some respects, and disagreeable in others. The ebbing and flowing of the tide produced a pensive wall that was agreeable. The sand was objectionable, but no healthier place we thought could have been found.

We found fish in great abundance in the bay and they were easily caught, and good to eat. We caught mostly the redfish, sheepshead, and flounder. We caught no sharks nor porpoise, although they were in abundance and almost as gentle as hogs. The boys were not afraid of the porpoise, but were a little shy of the shark. A crowd of boys, a hundred sometimes, would go in bathing together, yelling and screaming, and the sharks would take to their heels (?) and run away. About a hundred yards out in the bay was a big flat rock about on a level with the water. We would wade out to the rock and stand on it and fish. Beyond it was deep water. In fishing we used big, strong hooks and lines about like a trot line. A sinker was tied a foot above the hook, bait adjusted and the line was wound around the arm like a plowline, tossed twenty to thirty feet out and no sooner sunk than the fisherman would begin to wind up and to haul in, and more than half the time he hauled in a fish. More fish were caught in nets, however, than otherwise. I remember that one afternoon a crowd of boys with two or three skiffs and nets bagged enough fish for the supper of the 10th Mississippi regiment.

The reader may wish to know how we spent our evenings until "taps," nine o'clock. Some one way and some in another way. A majority played cards until 9 o'clock, and sometimes adjusted blankets to the inside of their tents to hide the light and played all night. Others read, some their Bibles and some other books that they had brought with them. I had only been there a few days when one evening just after dark, I was surprised and thrilled with delight to hear the sound of sacred song burst forth from a number of well-trained voices, like a choir in a grand church. I had been a church member for several years but was then back-slidden, but at the sound of that song I trembled with emotion and tears filled my eyes. I quickly inquired who was singing, and was told that it was some young men of the Madison Rifles from Canton, Mississippi. Every one of the company of one hundred men was dressed in uniform made of commissioned officer's Confederate gray. They had their song book with them, and read and sang instead of playing cards.

WHAT KINGS AND QUEENS THINK OF ALCOHOL.

The kings of Italy, Spain, Bulgaria and the queens of Holland, England, and Sweden are total abstainers. The czar and kaiser and the king of England are very temperate, and old Franz-Josef owes his life and strong personality to long practice of very limited indulgence.

The Canadian navy allows no grog on board as do our own fleets. Germany, England, and Japan prohibit drinking among the officers to such a degree that most of them find total abstinence preferable.

"Victory in the next war will crown the banners of the nation that consumes the least alcohol."—Kaiser Wilhelm.

"I will give my body a willing sacrifice if I could rid the nation of the alcohol."—General Fred Grant.

Field Marshal Kitchener is not only an enthusiast on the question of temperance, but a severe disciplinarian in regard to it when in command. Not a drop was allowed outside the hospital cases in his Soudan campaign.

"I do not believe alcohol in any form ever has or ever will be any good."—Admiral Charles Beresford, of the British Navy.—Southern Christian Advocate.

THE BROKEN DOLL.

My Christmas dolly's broken,
And the other dollies smiled;
They've always felt too jealous
Of this dear youngest child.
I turned their heartless faces
In a row against the wall,
And then I cried, and cried, and cried—
They didn't cry at all!
When Santa Claus first brought her,
In baby clothes like snow,
I nearly cried—that time for joy—
I loved the darling so.
But I held back my feelings
Till I explained to all the rest,
I loved them all just as before,
Not any child the best.
But now she's lost an eye and wig,
And got an awful crack;
They just can't sit there in disgrace,
I shall not take them back
Until I take this poor sick child
To mother and her glue,
And then I'll surprise those naughty ones
When she's as good as new.
I'll make them try to love her
As little sisters should.
It makes a mother feel so sad
When children are not good.

—L. E. Chittenden, in Churchman.

THE BOY JESUS.

When Jesus was a boy at home, in Nazareth, we are told that He was subject to His parents. We cannot imagine that in His childhood Jesus ever disobeyed His mother or did anything which gave her an instant's pain. Perhaps we do not often think of Him as having been a boy who played with others, learned lessons, came and went on the streets as His companions did, and on the Sabbath attend the synagogue and behaved reverently there. Let us try to imitate the boy Jesus in what we do and say.—Comrade.

A KNOW-HOW GIRL.

"I like her because she is a know-how girl," said Amy.
"What is a knowhow girl?" I asked.
"Why, the kind that can tell you what to do when things happen," said Amy. "Sometimes my doll's dress won't go right, and Daisy can make the arms go in and not break them. And one day I hadn't any lace for the bottom of the skirt, and Daisy took the crochet needle and made some—just as quick! She can do her own hair and tie her sash and make a perfectly lovely bow. She says she made nurse show her. It's so much fun to know how to do things, for sometimes there isn't anybody around to do them for you."
Are you a know-how girl or boy?—The Mayflower.

ROSE, BIRD, AND BROOK.

"I will not give away my perfume," said the rosebud, holding its pink petals tightly wrapped in their tiny green case. The other roses bloomed, and the people were made glad by their beauty, but the selfish bud withered away.
"No, no," said a little bird, "I don't want to sing." But when his brother soared aloft on joyful wings and sang with all his might, the little bird looked sorry and ashamed.
"If I give away my wavelets, I shall not have enough myself," said the brook; and it kept all its waters in a hollow place, where it formed a filthy little pool.

A boy who loved a fresh, wide-awake rose, a singing bird, and a leaping brooklet, thought on these things and said: "If I would be loved, I must share with others all that I have."—Kind Words.

A RECIPE WORTH TRYING.

"I've a recipe for making a sunshiny day that I've never known to fail," said Auntie, one wet morning. "It's one hundred smiles, one hundred laughs and one hundred pleasant remarks." "I've made twenty-five pleasant remarks," cried Jack at noon. "I've smiled so much I can hardly keep sober," Jill added. "And it's been the brightest morning I've seen this week," finished mother.—Child's Gem.

ACCLAIMING INDIA'S EMPEROR.

For the first time in the history of India, the populace has witnessed the crowning of its Emperor and Empress. On December 12, George V. King of Great Britain, and Queen Mary, his consort, were formally acclaimed as Emperor and Empress of India. The Durbar was held in Delhi, in elaborate splendor, and at its close a dramatic feature was the announcement that the capital was to be removed from Calcutta, and placed at Delhi. Although the secret was well kept, this change was made with the full knowledge of the Indian chiefs, and is welcomed alike on historical, political and administrative grounds. The native princes and army are greatly pleased at the revival of the ancient glories of Delhi. The cost of the transfer, it is estimated, will be $25,000,000.

The Durbar itself was a magnificent affair. The great feudatory princes and rulers of India, with the leading officials, occupied seats of honor near the pavilion located in the center. Screened from the gaze of the curious by a lattice framework, a number of Mahatani and other Indian ladies of high rank occupied two sections of the front galleries.

The interval of waiting was beguiled by the playing of military music. The soldiers played a large part in the Durbar, and a guard of honor, composed of 100 picked men, was drawn up before the central pavilion. Troops of every arm surrounded the arena in a compact mass, and lines of soldiers extended along the route of the royal approach. Cheers heralded the arrival of a little band of veterans, the survivors of the armies which had made the present Durbar possible. The old fighters in their weather-beaten uniforms strove to keep up a show of military formation as they marched to the privileged place allotted them, but generally it was impossible, and many of them limped to their seats.

Almost immediately, the vice regal procession came into view. Escorted by a brilliantly uniformed native bodyguard, the Viceroy and Lady Hardinge sat in their state carriage, drawn by blooded horses, with outriders in scarlet and gold.

Then the booming of an imperial salute announced the approach of the Emperor and Empress. The royal carriage, drawn by four magnificent horses, was almost hidden from view by the gaily caparisoned escort. The Emperor wore a robe of imperial purple, a surcoat of purple with satin breeches and silk stockings. He was decked with the collars of the orders of the Garter and Star of India, and also with the star of the latter order. The imperial crown consisted of a band of diamonds studded with large emeralds and sapphires, with rubies in the center; and a cap of purple velvet turned up with ermine.

The Queen-Empress' dress was of white satin, embroidered with a design of roses, thistles and shamrocks, with a border of lotus flowers. The star of India embroidered the front of her dress. Her Majesty's imperial robe was of purple velvet trimmed with ermine and with a border of gold braid. She wore the orders of the Garter and the Star of India. Her ornaments were a diamond and emerald necklace and brooches.

Carriage after carriage with members of the suite followed the imperial pair. The guard presented arms and the bands burst into the royal anthem. The combined procession proceeded slowly to the great tent, where their Majesties stood to receive the homage and congratulations of the Governors, ruling princes and other representatives of British India.

When this gorgeously uniformed line had filed past, the imperial and vice-regal parties appeared before the vast assemblage in the Durbar amphitheatre. When they took their seats on the crimson dais, the strains of the national anthem were heard and the people rose as one person and stood in profound silence.

The first formal act of the ceremony was performed by the Foreign Secretary, who advanced to the dais and asked permission of the Emperor to open the Durbar. At his signal a long roll from the drums and a thrilling call from the bugles were sounded, followed by a triumphant peal of music from the bands. Then a note from the heralds' silver trumpets rang over the plain.

At that moment appeared the striking figure of the imperial herald mounted on a jet black charger, and blazing in his brilliant uniform of gold and purple. Behind him were a drummer and sixteen trumpeters, eight British and eight natives. Halting for an instant, they sounded another blast, and then rode slowly toward the dais, where they gave a third call before saluting.

The Emperor then commanded the herald to read the proclamation announcing the coronation. The herald wheeled his charger around and read aloud, so that all could hear that George had been crowned King-Emperor. At that moment the royal standard was unfurled from the tail flagstaff in the center of the arena. The national anthem was played by the massed bands, and as the last notes of the music died away, 101 guns boomed the tidings of the proclamation.

Then along the never-ending line of infantry rattled out a continuous firing of blank cartridges.

The herald retired to the entrance of the arena, sounded a further flourish, and the Emperor arose from his throne and bowed to all sides. As he sat down, the herald called for three cheers for the Emperor, and a mighty roar burst from over 100,000 throats. Natives vied with the British in their acclamations and the cheers within the arena were continued by the troops outside until they extended to the horizon.

The Viceroy then announced the change of the capital of Delhi, the gift of the King of fifty lakhs of rupees (about $1,600,000) to the promotion of popular education in India, and the promise of further generous gifts for the same purpose.

The greatest of Durbars ever held in India then came to an end with the national anthem and a final burst from the silver trumpets.—The Presbyterian.

PRAISE FOR METHODISM.

There are two classes of individuals for whom we have little admiration: the constitutional iconoclast who is forever trying to depreciate persons and things that have been exalted, and the constitutional tinker who thinks there is nothing that he cannot improve. The specialty of the former is to find and point out what he conceives to be defects. He cares little for excellencies; he wants to discover blemishes, and is never so happy as when he thinks he has turned up one which had been overlooked. He had rather find a spot on the sun than to locate a new luminary burning in the depths of space and lighting the heavens for vast distances around. He has none of the spirit which would "raise mortal to the skies", but no lack of that which "would drag angels down". Or to borrow the homely but expressive figure of Bishop Candler, "He can see a knot on a barn door a mile away without seeing the door." He can set forth the mistakes of Moses and Paul, the errors of Luther and Wesley, and the weaknesses and flaws of all theological teaching from the apostolic period down to the present. Nobody in the past knew anything worth while, and nobody living now knows anything of consequence except himself and those who agree with him. He feels sure that the world should revise its estimates of everybody and everything and conform its views to his notions.

The tinker has the same fault-finding dispositions as the iconoclast, but does not want merely to disparage and lower things, but also to rearrange them, to make them over. He has a passion for effecting changes. He is sure that there is no piece of church machinery, that does not need a new wheel or pulley or tap or something. Nothing exactly suits him. His spirit is akin to that of the Irish emigrant who had just landed in New York, and who was asked with what political party he would align himself. He said in reply, "Have you a government?" "Yes," was the answer. "Well, I'm agin it," he declared.

Of these iconoclasts and tinkers, Methodism has her full share. They are constantly "knocking" the Church and prating about its deficiencies and needs. They would have us believe that our theology is worn out, that our polity is antiquated, and that our only salvation lies in aping other denominations. They want to modify or wipe out the episcopacy, to abolish the presiding eldership, to remove the time limit, to fling away our standards, and to tear up things generally.

But it is quite refreshing, as we listen to the noisy clamor of these fault-finders among us, to know that there are clear-visioned men in other folds who see the merits of Episcopal Methodism and who do not withhold from it generous words of commendation. A striking instance of this is seen in the impressive utterance of Bishop A. R. Graves of the Protestant Episcopal Church, made in a public address at a meeting of the Federated Council in Nebraska a little more than a year ago, which Dr. Ivey quoted in the Nashville Christian Advocate of last week. This distinguished churchman said:

"The oldest Churches in this country are the Episcopal, the Presbyterian or Dutch Reformed, and the Congregational, and these three in general represent the three kinds of Church government. Now, has any one of these kinds of Church government been preeminently successful and efficient in gathering in the great mass of the American people? I think we must acknowledge that the Methodists have outstripped us all. Now, wherein lies the cause of this? Is it because their ministers have greater natural ability, or more thorough education or greater piety than the rest of us? I doubt if any of us is willing to admit that, or that the Methodists would claim it. Wherein, then, does the strength of this Samson lie? If we study the matter calmly, I think we shall find it in their Church organization and government. The great authority they have given to their bishops, and the close supervision of all their parishes and missions by their presiding elders, creating as they do an army-like solidarity to their work, account for their enthusiasm and mammoth-like growth. It is not pleasant for us older Churches, who think we are founded on a rock, to admit this; but facts are facts, and better not be ignored. I think the Church of the future, in this country at least, should be modeled in a general way after the Methodist system. There are indications now in the other bodies pointing that way. The Episcopal Church somewhat resembles it now, but its immense dioceses prevent the close supervision needed for the work, and it is trying to remedy the defect by appointing suffragan bishops, archdeacons, and department secretaries of missions. The Presbyterian Churches and the several kinds of Congregational Churches are supplementing their systems by using moderators, State superintendents of missions, educational secretaries, and such officers. I believe the work done by all these supernumerary or supplementary officials is better and more systematically done by the bishops and presiding elders of the Methodist Church. Another advantage the Methodists have over the rest of us by their close supervision is that they can use in their ministry men who are more closely in touch and sympathy with the common people, even if such ministers are not so highly educated. We are all needing more ministers, yet we make our standards and requirements so high that we bar out many an earnest and effective man."

Nor is Bishop Graves alone in his estimate of the value of the Methodist form of government. Two or three years ago a Methodist and Baptist preacher were riding together on a train through the great Mississippi Delta, where nearly everywhere the Methodist Church is overwhelmingly in the ascendancy. Remarking upon this fact, the Baptist brother said: "Your success here is due to your presiding eldership. You have kept men travelling over the field discovering the open doors, and enterprising means of entering them in advance of others." In our judgment, this was a well merited tribute to the district superintendents who had served in that section. Despite the fact that it is frequently sneered at, it is our conviction that Methodism owes a large part of its success to the efficient supervision and leadership which this office provides for the work.

The truth is, the Methodists have every reason to be gratified at the trend of things in the Protestant religious world. Our doctrines have modified to a considerable extent the teachings of all the other Churches and are more generally accepted now than ever before. The rank Calvinism of former days is at this time seldom preached from any pulpit. It still exists in the books, but is confined almost exclusively to them. And now with other denominations seeking to secure in some way or other the supervision and other specific forms of service that our government has provided from the beginning, the wisdom of our polity seems also to be fully vindicated. It is to be hoped that our people, in spite of the song of complaint which some are constantly singing, will have the good sense to know when they are well off and will insist upon having things let alone. Nothing is perfect, and in the course of time some alterations in our system may become necessary to meet new conditions that may arise; but as yet there is no warrant for sweeping and revolutionary changes. What Methodism to-day needs is not a new statement of faith or a new form of government, but more consecration and energy to execute the methods that we already have. With a re-baptism of the Holy Ghost and a revival amongst us of the heroic spirit of Wesley and the pioneers, there is no reason why our future achievements should not outstrip those of the past, which have excited the wonder and admiration of Christendom.

HOSPITAL DAY IN MISSISSIPPI.

By the joint action of the Trustees and the two Mississippi Annual Conferences, the fourth Sunday in this month (January 28) has been named as the day when the claims of the Methodist Tri-State Hospital, which is to be built in Memphis, are to be presented to every congregation and offerings for it received. The Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues in every charge are also expected to send in contributions. Our pastors, Sunday school superintendents and League leaders should at once begin to get ready to observe this day, and see that this cause is presented impressively to the people. This proposed institution is most urgently needed. It is a reproach to us that we have waited so long to enter this important and necessary field of service. Let every Methodist in Mississippi lend a hand to this movement. And let every preacher see that his charge is not left out when the list of places reporting is made up. This enterprise is destined to succeed; and it will be a great day for Methodism in the States contiguous to Memphis when its doors are opened. Nor will that time be distant if our pastors and people will give such assistance as is easily within their power.

SAYS INCIDENT IS APOCRYPHAL.

Dear Doctor Meek: I agree with the sentiment of your editorial of last week on Mr. Adams and George Washington; but, as a matter of fact, there is no proof that Frederick ever sent a sword to Washington, and most historians think that the incident is purely mythical.

Yours sincerely,

J. E. WALMSLEY.

We gladly give place to the above from Dr. Walmsley, the accomplished Professor of History in Millsaps College. We had run across the incident referred to in our reading, and, never having looked carefully into the matter, had supposed it to be true. In writing our brief editorial in an off-hand manner it came into our mind, and we used it. We thank the Doctor for his note, since we desire to make no statement in the Advocate relative to any subject which is not accurate and reliable. The fact that the sword incident may not be true, does not, however, lessen the force of what we had to say concerning Mr. Adams' criticism of General Washington, as it is well known that Frederick the Great did entertain a high opinion of the military skill of the great American.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A reception will be tendered Rev. C. A. Battle and family at the Felicity Street Church, this city, next Friday night.

The Main Street and Court Street congregations joined at Main Street Church in Hattiesburg, Miss., in a union watch-night service.

A kind reception was tendered Rev. R. S. Walton by the people of Kentwood, La., and he writes that he has found there a fertile field for Methodism.

W. D. Perritt passed through New Orleans last week on his way to his new charge at Marksville, La. He spent the holidays with his parents in Mississippi.

"Things begin well on the Brookhaven district," writes its capable presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett. We imagine they will continue to do well, as Bro. Leggett generally moves things.

Rev. J. A. Moore writes kindly of the splendid reception he has had at Magnolia, Miss. He has a fine charge, and a people who know how to make known their love for their pastor.

A news report states that the congregation at Lake Arthur, La., "pounded" their new pastor, Rev. A. S. J. Neill. There are few congregations in Louisiana that can surpass the one at Lake Arthur in providing for a preacher.

Rev. S. L. Pope, of Itta Bena, Miss., has secured a list of our subscribers in his new field and expects to press the work of circulating the Advocate. We wish him success in his efforts to extend the influence of his "assistant pastor."

Rev. G. W. Huff, of the Mississippi Conference, announces that his address is Coles, Miss.

Rev. L. T. Sargent's address has been changed from Greenwood Springs, Miss., to Amory, Miss.

The Alabama Christian Advocate is now printed on its own press. Brothers Cumming and Whitehead are to be congratulated on this forward movement.

Rev. H. R. Singleton has made a splendid beginning at Parker Memorial Church. He received fifteen into the Church on the first Sunday after Conference.

Rev. J. G. Galloway enters upon the new year at Crystal Springs, Miss., with an encouraging outlook. He is said to excel in both his pulpit and pastoral work.

Rev. J. A. Poe has entered upon his work at Guntown, Miss., in a happy frame of mind. He writes: "I am pleased with my new home, and expect a good year."

Rev. R. P. Neblett announces that things are moving along nicely up his way and that all the interests are well in hand. Brother Neblett serves the Houston (Miss.) charge.

The Baptists have a revival under way at their Central Church in this city, of which Rev. F. C. Flowers is the pastor. The preaching is being done by Evangelist Reese, of Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, head of the Volunteers of America, will deliver an address in Rayne Memorial Church on the evening of Feb. 4. Mrs. Booth is one of the strongest leaders of evangelical Christianity in America.

Rev. F. D. Macy, the new pastor of the Sonjat Avenue Christian Church, preached his initial sermon last Sunday. He comes to New Orleans from Bartlesville, Okla., and is a graduate of Drake University, at Des Moines, Iowa.

Rev. W. B. Perritt, who served the Zachary charge last year has arrived at Hammond, and met with a delighted people. The time is propitious for doing a good work at Hammond and Brother Perritt is, we think, the man for the work.

Rev. I. L. Peebles, one of the missionary evangelists for the Mississippi Conference, will begin his year's work the third Sunday of this month. His health has greatly improved. He will make his home at Meridian, Miss., where correspondents may address him.

It will require but thirty-five days for Rev. Paul M. Brown, the energetic presiding elder of the Shreveport district, to make his first round of quarterly conferences. He announces that he will then devote his time to those points and interests needing him most.

Our church at West Point, Miss., had a most delightful and profitable watch-night service. We have received an interesting account of it from the pen of the pastor, Rev. E. S. Lewis, which reached us too late for this issue, but which will appear next week.

Rev. W. J. Wood, of Pott's Camp, Miss., announces that his congregation will raise $1000 and furnish a room in the new hospital to be erected in Memphis. Rev. H. M. Ellis visited Pott's Camp last Sunday, and, in spite of the inclement weather, stirred things up.

Rev. J. B. King, who is serving the Deasonville charge, sends us word that his post office address will be Vaughan, Miss., R. F. D. No. 2. He adds in his letter that good things to eat are arriving every few hours. In such a place, we dare say, he is taking no thought of the morrow.

Dr. and Mrs. W. R. Tillett and their daughter, Miss Kate Tillett, have returned to their home in Nashville after an extended tour of Europe and the Holy Land. They have been absent for several months. While Dr. Tillett was away, Dr. O. E. Brown served as Dean of the Vanderbilt Theological Faculty.

Our circulation continues to grow on the Ackerman charge, North Mississippi Conference, where Rev. J. M. Wyatt is the pastor. We doubt not that the other interests of the Church will go forward correspondingly under the leadership of this faithful toiler. Nothing is neglected where he has supervision.

A new $2100 pipe organ has recently been installed in the church at Starkville, Miss., and the pastor, Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, reports that because of its power to charm he has almost lost the attention of the people; however, we dare say that Brother Brogan will not fail to be heard with profit by the large congregations that wait upon his ministry.

Mr. C. H. Hodges, of Decatur County, Ga., has made a gift of $10,000 to the Wesleyan Female College. Are there not wealthy Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana who are willing to do something for our schools for the education of young ladies located in these States? Such assistance is urgently needed and would accomplish immeasurable good.

Writing from Corinth, Miss., on Jan. 3, Rev. W. D. Bass says: "My mother has been sick for four weeks. She is some better now. The new presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, and all the preachers of our town have made a good beginning for the new year." We regret to hear of the illness of this mother in Israel, and we pray that she may soon entirely recover.

Bishop A. W. Wilson, who was stricken with illness while holding the Alabama Conference at Pensacola, Fla., is reported to be much improved. A family reunion was held in Baltimore on Christmas day. The Bishop's many friends throughout the connection will be happy to know that there is a good prospect of his being able to be about his work again in the near future.

In a brief business note to the office, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, the new presiding elder of the Corinth District, adds: "We have just bought a handsome new district parsonage in Corinth." With Brother Mitchell in charge of affairs, it is safe to predict that this property will soon be paid for, if that has not already been done. As a financier he ranks with the best to be found in the Church.

Rev. M. M. Black, pastor at Philadelphia, Miss., finds no little encouragement in the fact that the members of his flock give evidence of being much gratified at his return for another year. He and his family were the grateful recipients of a substantial pounding, administered by a number of his parishioners during the holidays. The eatables so kindly brought were greatly enjoyed.

In the election of Rev. J. D. Ellis to the chaplaincy of the Mississippi State Penitentiary, the Prison Board made no mistake. This is a most responsible post, which can be filled properly only by a strong and resourceful man. That Brother Ellis will measure fully up to every requirement, his many friends do not in the least doubt.

Dr. Sawyer preached at the Mary Werlein Mission last Sunday night to a splendid audience, considering the stormy night. Brother Sawyer organized the church at this point and has always shown a deep interest in its welfare. The people there also appreciate the attentions of the Doctor, and are always glad to have him come. He administered the sacrament of the Lord's supper at the close of his sermon.

The Shreveport Times, referring to the services at the First Methodist Church of that city on Sunday, Dec. 31, says: "They were attended by record-breaking crowds, and the music rendered by the choir was most beautiful and appropriate to the occasion." This is a great congregation, and Dr. G. E. Cameron, who is entering upon his second year, has the ear of the city and is doing a telling work for Methodism.

The Chairmen and Field Secretaries of the Conference Sunday School Boards of our Church are in session in New Orleans this week. The meetings are being conducted in the First Methodist Church, where the opening session was held Wednesday evening. All our pastors in the city called in their prayer meeting services Wednesday evening that their flocks might be free to attend the Conference from the beginning. The meetings will continue through next Sunday.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, the energetic presiding elder of the Columbus District, of the North Mississippi Conference, has sent out invitations calling all the preachers of his district to meet in Starkville on Jan. 22 to attend a preachers' institute. A number of excellent subjects are announced for discussion, among which "The Value of the Church Paper," "How Best to Instruct the Children in the Doctrines of the Church," and "The Problem of the Prayer-meeting" deserves special mention.

Dr. W. W. Pinson, chief secretary of the General Board of Missions in a communication received a few days since, referred as follows to the Mid-winter Missionary Institute, which was then in session in Nashville: "We are having a splendid session. We have the largest and most representative body of men in attendance that we have ever had." This is gratifying news. A larger interest in missions is one of the most imperative needs of the Church to-day. We are not half awake on the subject.

In renewing his subscription, Rev. A. P. Leech, who is one of the honored superannuates of the North Mississippi Conference, takes time to write some encouraging words concerning the Advocate. There is no class of men among us whose good opinion we should rather have than that of our worthy veterans who have borne the burden and heat of the day. We wish every one of them a happy New Year, and pray that their paths may grow brighter and brighter till the Master shall call them home.

Mrs. F. L. Copeland, of Natchez, Miss., has kindly sent us $5 to be used as we think best. We shall place it to the credit of our "Help Fund," which is used to send the Advocate to poor persons who desire it, but are unable to pay for it, of which there are not a few. Another North Mississippi friend has forwarded $3.50 to be applied to this purpose. This is money well expended, and we wish the "Fund" were many times larger. In such cases we, of course, furnish the Advocate at actual cost.

Rev. F. A. Downs announces that the Alexander Collegiate Institute, of which he is the principal (at Jacksonville, Texas), has great promise for the future. Brother Downs recently went from the Louisiana Conference into that field.

The work in the Meridian District is moving on well under the leadership of Rev. W. H. Lewis, the consecrated presiding elder, who is held in high esteem by both the preachers and the people. Methodism is going forward in that section of Mississippi.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin writes: "I wish to call attention to the fact that Rev. Henry A. Gatlin has succeeded me as agent of Whitworth College, and that all remittances on notes and subscriptions and other correspondence pertaining to this work should be addressed to him at Brookhaven, Miss."

On Monday night the City Epworth League Union extended a formal welcome to the pastors of New Orleans at the First Church. Rev. H. R. Singleton responded in a splendid way to the welcome address delivered by Mr. C. F. Neibergall. A delightful programme was rendered and the pastors of the churches responded with two-minute talks. All of the pastors in New Orleans were present.

From Walnut Grove, Miss., on Jan. 8, Brother C. E. Cain writes as follows: "This morning, near 8 o'clock, the spirit of Mrs. Melissa Miller, wife of the late Rev. Irvin Miller, passed quietly to the land of rest. She was stricken with paralysis on Christmas day, and never spoke afterwards, though she was conscious for a number of days and recognized her friends as they came to her bedside. She died as she had lived—a child of the King. A suitable memoir will be sent later."

In a letter penned on Dec. 29, Rev. H. B. Watkins, who was recently assigned to the Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, says: "We arrived yesterday, but will be the guests of my brother, Dr. McDonald Watkins, for a week. Brother Huntley departed for Port Gibson this morning, leaving, as he ever does, a host of affectionate friends behind him. I shall have to be a cavalier indeed to succeed worthily so knightly a gentleman." Difficult as is the task which our gifted young friend has before him, we doubt not that he will give a good account of himself in seeking to discharge it. He has the habit of achieving success wherever he goes.

It is a live subject which Dr. S. A. Steel discusses in this week's issue of the Advocate, and it is needless to say that he handles it in a most entertaining and instructive manner. The cause of Christian education is one of pressing importance, which we predict will command an increasing amount of attention within the next few years. The truth is, the Church is going to have to come to the rescue of her institutions of learning within a short time, or their very existence will be imperiled. It takes much more money to maintain a respectable college now than in former days. We must be up and doing, if we expect to hold our place in the educational world in the face of the fierce competition with State institutions which must now be encountered.

Whitworth College, BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

"G. W. HUDDLESTON,

On the night of Dec. 17, 1911, the death angel visited the home of Jason and Lily Hancock and carried away their baby, EDDIS, aged about three years. She was the pet of the home and leaves a father, mother, four sisters and five brothers to mourn her death, but their loss is heaven's gain. Eddis has gone to rest. May God comfort the sad hearts of all the family! It seems that the fairest flowers must be plucked first but God's ways are always just and we may look through this veil of tears and see a glory indescribable for when our loved ones have gone on before, it makes heaven more attractive. There can never be heard any more on this earth the prattle of the little tongue or the sound of the little feet, but she will stand at heaven's gate to welcome her loved ones.

O. H. STEELE.

Mrs. ELLA SHOLTS.—On March 25, 1911, the death angel came and called away a dear, devoted mother and wife, Mrs. Ella Sholts (nee Jenkins); aged 46 years. She leaves a husband, one daughter and two sons to mourn their loss. But they grieve not as those who have no hope, for she was truly a good Christian woman, loved by all whose good fortune it was to know her. She joined the M. E. Church, when fourteen years old, and was always true to her church and her God. She is sadly missed by her family and friends. Silent is the voice that was as the music of heaven in her house. Mother is gone; heaven is her home. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." May we who loved her here meet her there some day, and sing the praises of him, "Who doeth all things well."

KATE M. CLARK.

DeKalb, Miss.

JAMES W. NEWTON was born in Copiah County, Miss., Sept. 15, 1855, and died at his home at Barlow, Miss., Nov. 22, 1911. He was happily married, Aug. 22, 1877, to Miss Jennie Nollie, a capable, affectionate, and godly woman. He was an exceptionally devoted husband, and their home was the center of sweet and beautiful concord. As a citizen, Brother Newton was patriotic, honorable, and absolutely trustworthy. He was always on the right side of every moral question affecting the public good, and became the soul of every movement in his community that had for its purpose the spread of civic righteousness and Christian culture. Though deprived of the opportunity of an education, he was a devoted friend to public education. He was genuinely converted in early manhood, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in whose communion he lived faithfully, giving in humble service and increasing loyalty the best part of his noble life. For twenty-five years he served as steward, in which capacity he was faithfully aggressive. He loved the church and its great heart; he enjoyed the fellowship of God's people, and the pastor found in him a ready and lasting friend. To him friendship was not so much a sentiment, as a principle. Constancy and fidelity were its cardinal virtues. The writer of this sketch had the honor of knowing and appreciating his worth as a friend. Jonathan and David never loved each other more ardently. To him I confided the deepest secrets of my soul, when young manhood looked with high hopes and enchanted dreams to an untried future. He is my friend to-day, as he enjoys the deep, rich experience of the heavenly world. The cordial suavity of his manner, the genuine kindness of his heart gave him easy access to those with whom he even casually met, and his simplicity, frankness and gentleness of character won for him the ardent admiration of those who knew him well. And, now, that he has joined the "assembly of the just made perfect," we shall miss him—sadly miss him—but we hope to meet again. His friend, J. T. LEGGETT.

FROM HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS.

It affords me great pleasure to be able to tell you that our new pastor, Rev. R. O. Brown, has made an excellent impression upon our people. He has already inspired them with confidence in him as a man and has established himself as a good, sound preacher. His text on his first Sunday was: "For I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Last Sunday night as the old year was dying, he preached from the text, "Grow in Grace". It was practical, and was delivered with such sweetness and earnestness that all who heard it went away delighted. The new presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Tucker, has moved among us, and he and his family have been warmly welcomed. Brother Tucker will preach for us on January 14, it being his first visit here in holding his Conference. He comes, like Brother Brown, well recommended. We are looking forward to a gracious year. Every thing seems to have started off on the right foot. We read the Advocate up here with much interest. Our people, however, are wanting to have "ye Editor" come to see us. Just run up some time later on and preach for us, Brother Meek. We will give you a good congregation, a hearty welcome and a bountiful dinner—and supper, too, if you will wait. God bless you.

Tidings From the Field

Baker, La.:

Permit me to say a few words. Before Conference the ladies of Baker presented me with a fine tailor-made suit of clothes which I wore to the Conference. In this public way I acknowledge the gift with thanks. I had a good time at Conference, being free from committee assignments. I was at liberty to take a seat and quietly hear the good things. If a silent tongue makes a wise head, I am being permitted at the Conferences to acquire a wise head. In my younger days, in another church, I was placed on many committees and Conference was a siege of labor, but I prefer to remain silent and listen. I was delighted with the Bishop, Dr. Carter, and all the connectional men. In fact, Methodist preachers are a fine set of men. I am praying that God may make this the greatest year in the history of the Louisiana Conference. May he bless the Advocate and its editor. I ask the prayers of all the brethren.—S. D. Howard, P. C.

Waynesboro Circuit:

We reached Waynesboro on Dec. 27, 1911, and found a delightful home to enter. We found that the parsonage was not sufficiently furnished for comfort, so on the morning of the 29th, by the help of a good brother, the needed furniture was purchased. I am glad to say that this New Year's Day finds us nicely situated in our new home here in Waynesboro, and that we are looking forward to a good year in the harvest field of the Master. I went out yesterday at 11 a.m. to hear a man preach whom I learned to love in my boyhood days, Brother W. G. Forsyth. His theme for the hour was, "The vital connection with Christ and its fruitage." His discourse could easily be classed as "par-excellent." As far as I can see and learn, my esteemed friend is held in high regard by his people. He asked me to preach for him in the evening, and I consented to do so. So we congregated at the church at about 7:15 p.m., and I had the pleasure of preaching to an attentive congregation. I preached my first sermon here in the Waynesboro Methodist Church to Brother Forsyth's congregation. Thus far, we can say that we are well pleased with our location.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C.

Vernon, La.:

It has rained nearly ever since I returned from Conference, and I have not been able to get about much. But as it began to clear up, the strangest thing happened. We had a big storm when it was fair and the sun was shining. It was a "Northwester" and came from the direction of New Prospect Church. It started on Wednesday and struck Vernon on Thursday about 1 p.m., when the parson was at work in the garden (since Dr. Carter said the garden could be used as a means of grace) I have decided to try it. The parson's wife was just coming out looking sweet, and asking for dry grass to fix the pillow-shams. Some one at the gate called out, "Hello, Sister Bamberg, come out here and go to work." The parson looked and there appeared a bearded man, in the person of Brother W. T. Houghton, with a wagon well loaded down and drawn by a span of very fine mules. It was loaded with corn, hay, potatoes, meat, flour, sugar, meal, and canned goods of various kinds to the amount of $25 worth or more. The bearded man said, "Brother Bamberg, we make you a present of all this. It is not to be charged." We do not care if the Bishop did send us back to preach some more of our big sermons. We have some of the best people under the sun, if they just had a pastor. That is all that is lacking up this way.—R. H. Bamberg, P. C.

Okolona Circuit, North Mississippi:

Dear Brother Meek: I arrived in Okolona Thursday after Conference closed, and was not at the train by the station pastor with a surrey and carried to our home. I have been to all appointments it was possible for me to meet. The bad weather and the impassable roads have been considerable hindrances. I find a splendid people and a hopeful field. On New Year's Day the people of Okolona gave the circuit parsonage a rousing pounding. Such poundings are pleasant indeed. Such expressions coming from a town of strangers makes one glad to be living in such a town and among such good people. Each one has our hearty thanks. Methodism in Okolona moves along well. Brother Holder is happy in his work. We are all working and trusting that we may have a great year in 1912.—D. R. Douglas, P. C.

Brooksville, Miss.:

We have begun our second year here with much encouragement. The people, both in and out of our church, have been sending nice tokens of kindnesses to the parsonage ever since we came back from Conference. Mrs. Price, Mrs. Smith and Mr. Tom Heard, the president of the bank of Brooksville, sent us a turkey each. Two of the teachers in our splendid high-grade public school, Misses Brinkley and Lanier, sent a nice basket of fruits and nuts; and Brother E. C. Jamieson, the treasurer of our Board of Stewards, sent a box of nice fresh oranges. No better man than Brother Jamieson can be found in the land, and no pastor in the North Mississippi Conference has a nicer, better charge than this to serve. We have planned to hold our revival here at Brooksville the first of February, Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., will do the preaching, and we hope to have a great time. The best results I have ever gotten from revivals have come from those held in the first part of the year. I think that the revival should be held in the first part of the year wherever the town is large enough to contain the largest part of the membership. Then the pastor and church officials and Sunday school teachers have the year before them to gather up the fruits. Pray that we may have a great meeting. Last year this charge sent in the best report of its history. We collected $28.56 over the assessments on Conference collections, and the pastor was paid about $40 over his salary, though we had as short a crop and as many difficulties in the way as any charge. We aim to do more this year than we did last along all lines. The Lord bless all the readers of the dear old Advocate. It comes as a welcome weekly visitor to this parsonage home.—J. H. Bass, P. C.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

It has been definitely decided to put a secretary in the field for all his time during the ensuing year. Immediately after the meeting of the Conference chairmen in New Orleans, Jan. 11, the executive committee will meet and arrange to carry out the plans of the board.

At our anniversary Saturday night, Miss Magee, the conference elementary worker (and during the summer months, field secretary) addressed the audience. Brother W. Fred Long, State Sunday school secretary, spoke on the need of a field secretary and Dr. Chas. D. Bulla emphasized the adult Bible class work.

The most pleasant and profitable meeting of the Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board held in several years, was had in Meridian during the recent session of the Annual Conference. Every clerical member of the board, several lay members and a number of visiting Sunday school workers were present and participated in the deliberations. The work of the year, the needs of the field, and plans for the future were carefully and prayerfully considered. The spirit of the meetings augured well for 1912.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Miss Duval's class at Shelby, Miss., has added a neat $50 to its bank account for future and useful reference.

Brother A. W. Langley has a good Sunday school at Verona, but is planning higher and better things this coming year, and is exhibiting great wisdom in beginning early.

Mrs. Weaver's class of young ladies at Corinth will dress their usual number of orphans from head to foot, and have them out to Sunday school for the New Year. This class does lovely work along all lines.

One Mississippi mother confesses she has studied her Bible more this last year than in her whole life before in order to assist her daughter, now studying the Junior Graded Lessons. And her face, her home and her life prove where she has been.

Robert E. Speer says: "Education is not what goes in, but what comes out—for service." Such a charming and beautiful service several young girls are rendering Home Department shut-ins. Just this: They are going to each such home, singing two or three simple, helpful songs to poor, walled-in dear old folk, and a real radiance follows their every visit.

One Home Department has helped families in need, presented a really artistic and simple registry board to the main school, assisted in purchasing new hymn books, helped in refurnishing the pastor's study, and materially assisted in the Cradle Roll work. This department is one of the vital forces and feeders of the Sunday school, and should command as leaders the highest and most consecrated talent in the school.

HOSPITAL DAY.

To the Pastors and Superintendents of the North Mississippi Conference:

Attention is hereby called to a section of the report of the Sunday School Board adopted at the recent session of our Conference at Macon: "The Board hereby endorses the splendid enterprise of the erection of a Tri-State Methodist Hospital at Memphis, Tenn., and our schools are requested to have some part in this monumental work by getting into touch with those having the matter in charge, and contributing as opportunity presents whatever amount they can to this worthy cause. Write Rev. H. M. Ellis, Memphis, Tenn. As far as possible, let Sunday, Jan. 28, 1912, be observed in a suitable way as Hospital Day, calling attention to the needs and opportunities."

Let some contribution from every Sunday school, be sent to Brother Ellis on this date. The ideal school is the one giving sympathy and aid, as far as is in its power, to every worthy call made. Brethren, this is indeed a worthy cause.

R. P. NEBLETT,
Chairman S. S. Board.

CONCERNING HOSPITAL DAY.

To the Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: This brief message is to remind you of the action of our Conference in setting apart Sunday, Jan. 28, as Hospital Day, and the agreement to present the matter to our several congregations and Sunday schools. Please bring this matter before your Sunday school that day and take an offering for this cause. Other than our Conference claimants and the orphans, no cause can appeal more strongly to us than that of caring for our sick.

Your offering may be small, but let me ask the consideration of the following facts, which I feel sure will appeal to you:

1. If every school in our Conference will raise the very small sum of only $2 each, we will put over $1000 into our hospital treasury. What will result if we do what we can? Because your offering may necessarily be small, let not that deter you.

2. Every school contributing will be put more thoroughly in touch with our connectional work, and one of our great needs just now is connectional education. While this money is needed, and needed badly, the educational feature is an urgent necessity.

I deem it is needless to say more. Make your remittance direct to Mr. Jno. R. Pepper, treasurer, 1101 Poplar Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

B. F. LEWIS, Chairman,
For the Sunday School Board.

To the Pastors and Official Members of the M. E. Church, South, Shreveport District:
 You will note that we are making the first round of quarterly conferences in as little time as possible. We deem this best in order to get the year's work launched as soon as possible.
 The presiding elder will then be able to spend his time at those places where he can be of most service. We are very anxious to meet, during this round, officials from each church in the district. Let the stewards be ready with answer to Question 6. We urge the attendance of the lay leaders at this quarterly conference.
 Yours to serve,
PAUL M. BROWN, P. E.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.
 As a token of the high esteem we hold for our departed sister and friend, Miss CORA GRAYHAM, who by the inscrutable and allwise will of God was on Dec. 17, 1911, removed from this earthly sphere to realms of immortal bliss beyond the skies; we, the undersigned committee, in behalf of the Bentonla Sunday school, offer the following resolutions:
 First—That in the death of our dear Christian sister, we have lost one of our ablest and most devoted laborers in the Master's vineyard.
 Second—That in every capacity she was faithful and true; that she was ever ready and responsive to any call for the advancement of our Sunday school, and that in all positions, pertaining thereto, she did her whole duty and so endeared herself to all of us that her life will be to us a beacon light to guide us to the kingdom of our Lord.
 Third—That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and condolence, assuring them that their loss is her eternal gain.
 Fourth—That copies of these resolutions be printed in all our county papers and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.
 Signed: W. D. Ogden, C. M. Mansfield, Mrs. E. S. Logan, Mrs. J. B. Newman.

THE SPIRIT OF WINTER.
 The Spirit of Winter is with us, making its presence known in many different ways—sometimes by cheery sunshine and glistening snows, and sometimes by driving winds and blinding storms. To many people it seems to take a delight in making bad things worse, for rheumatism twists harder, twinges sharper, catarrh becomes more annoying, and the many symptoms of scrofula are developed and aggravated. There is not much poetry in this, but there is truth, and it is a wonder that more people don't get rid of these ailments.
 The medicine that cures them—
 Hood's Sarsaparilla—is easily obtained and there is abundant proof that its cures are radical and permanent.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

They Are Closely Observing Public Health Conditions.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that the reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of applicants do not even suspect that they have the disease.
 He states that judging from his own experience and reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has probably been more successful in relieving and curing these diseases than any remedy known.
 The mild and healthy influence of
 Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of cures.
 We find that Swamp-Root is strictly an herbal compound and we would advise our readers who feel in need of such a remedy to give it a trial.
 It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes—fifty cents and one dollar.
 However, if you wish first to test its wonderful merits, send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle, absolutely free. When writing be sure and mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DREAD OF AN OPERATION.

N. Manchester, Ind.—Mrs. Eva B. shore, of this place, says, "I suffered female misery of every description. Two doctors attended me, and advised an operation. I lost weight until I weighed only ninety pounds. I dreaded an operation, and, instead, began to take Cardui. In a short time, I gained 25 pounds, and feel as well as I ever did. Cardui, I am sure, saved my life." Cardui is to-day used in thousands of homes, where it relieves pain and brings back strength and ambition. It is a woman's medicine, for women's ailments, and you are urged to try it for your troubles. Ask your druggist. He will tell you about Cardui.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty six years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM DEATH.
Rev. T. P. Pierce, a Minister and Merchant of Vinemont, Ala., has a Close Call.

REV. T. P. PIERCE.

Following is Mr. Pierce's own story of how he fell into good hands and evaded the "grim reaper."

"In the spring of 1907 I was a complete wreck, and was pronounced by some doctors to have dropsy, by one to have cancer of the stomach, another said tumor. In all there were fourteen or fifteen doctors. Scarcely any of them agreed, and none of them did me any good whatever. Four of our country doctors said I could not be cured and gave me up to die. My weight had decreased to 14 lbs and I was perfectly helpless, when I decided to try W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron. After using five bottles, my health was immediately restored and in a few weeks, I was as strong and healthy as ever in my life. My weight to-day is 247 lbs, and I shall never fail to recommend W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron."

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron can be had from any druggist. If after using two-thirds of a bottle you are not benefited, take the remainder back to your druggist and he will refund your money. If your druggist's supply is exhausted ask him to order it for you from his jobber. You can't afford to take a substitute.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy Ever Used

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly.
A Family Supply for 50c. Money Refunded if it Fails.

If someone in your family has an obstinate, deep-seated cough—even whooping cough—which has yielded slowly to treatment, buy a 50 cent bottle of Pinex and watch that cough vanish. If it fails, money back promptly, and without argument.

A 50 cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, makes a full pint—a family supply—of the most effective cough remedy that money can buy, at a saving of $2. Gives instant relief and will usually wipe out a bad cough in 24 hours or less. Easily prepared in five minutes—directions in package.

Pinex Cough Syrup has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative—both good features. Splendid for croup, hoarseness, throat tickle, incipient lung troubles, and a prompt, successful remedy for whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other elements which are so healing to the membranes. Simply mix it with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use. Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 14, 1912.

THE PROPHET AND HIS METHOD; GOD'S USE OF HUMAN POWERS.

(I Sam. iii, 19-21; Mark i, 1-3.)

God Calls a Man.

The Israelites and the Philistines were in a death grapple. Following the battle of Aphek, in which 30,000 Israelites were slain, the Philistines were in control of the land. The ark had been captured, Shiloh destroyed, and for twenty years the Hebrews were under a foreign yoke, helpless, dispirited, and even disarmed.

In this period of utter demoralization all eyes were turned to Samuel, the child granted beyond hope to the prayers of his mother Hannah. His very name, "God heareth," suggested to them the source of their help. His childhood had been passed at the sanctuary of Shiloh. Here he had been under the tutelage of Eli, the priest, and had on many occasions witnessed the desecration of their priestly office by the sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas. When twelve years old, God spoke to him in a vision (I Sam. iii, 1-15), revealing to him the impending downfall of the house of Eli. As Samuel grew and Jehovah was with him, "all Israel from Dan even to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a priest of Jehovah." Thus steps upon the stage of Israel's life the first of her mighty company of seers and prophets.

The Work of the Prophet.

The first task of this new leader of Israel was to help in the establishment of a monarchy. Never before had the people had any other king save Jehovah. Moses had set before them the ideal of government, a "theocracy," the immediate sovereignty of Jehovah, exercised through human agents, such as Moses and Aaron. But now the desire of all Israel was for a king, and their wish was based upon no disloyalty to God, but a great political need. Samuel, interpreting the desire of Israel as the hand of God in their history, anoints Saul, the people's choice, to be their king. At last there was a strong hand to unite their scattered and disorganized tribal forces.

Edmund Burke has said: "The foundation of politics is like every foundation of society—true religion." Samuel was not only the savior of Israel's political state but also the restorer of her religion. He founded the school of the prophets. He gathered about him the zealous young men of the nation and organized them into teachers and preachers of righteousness. He kept alive "the light of Jehovah" in a day when heathen darkness was on every side. At Bethel, Jericho, Gilgal, and other places centers of training and instruction were established and the teachings of Moses taught to the common people. In this way he laid the foundations of all that was great in Israel's future history.

God's Need of Men.

Bishop McTyeire once said: "When God has a great work to do, he first gets ready a great man to do it." The most remarkable feature of this bit of Hebrew history is the dealing of God with Samuel. A nation chosen of God for world leadership stood tottering because of internal dissensions and strife. The way of redemption lay not in new commandments, for Sinai had not yet been outgrown, nor in miraculous interventions of the Lord, for if the people had forgotten the Red Sea, nothing could avail to impress them with Jehovah's power. The need of the hour was a man, another Moses to lead them out of a new wilderness. And God looks into the heart of a guileless boy and puts upon him the spirit of the Lord, anointing him aforetime for the prophetic work of blazing new paths for the glory of his advancing kingdom.

The supreme need of the kingdom of God to-day is men. In the face of dishonesty in business life and fraud and graft in high circles of society our need is men. When we study the rapid increase of divorce and constant violation of the marriage vow, we cry out: "God give us men." When little children are chained in the factories as slaves and thousands seek justice in vain, we turn everywhere for a man to lead us. In the presence of an awakening East, hungry for the light of God and the knowledge of his women to carry his name across the waters. We wait for Christlike men.

God is limited in us. He has chosen to do his work indirectly through human agents. He cannot do that work over our heads and still let us maintain our freedom. The great yearning of his heart is for us to share with him this passion for righteousness, to catch the prophetic vision; and to hear the divine call. May we not to-day stop to hear his whisper to us and out of an obedient heart respond, as did Samuel of old: "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth?"—Epworth Era.

MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD.

Mr. Hugh McGinty, of Rockland, Texas, writes,—"I have had a running sore for five years and Gray's Ointment is the only thing that I have found that would do it any good. My leg is almost well." Think of the pain of a chronic sore for five years. Think of the burden which Gray's Ointment lifted from the shoulders of this man, and then the insignificant cost, only 25c per box at the drug stores. If you know of any person (or animal) who is suffering from an old sore, boil, carbuncle, or festering wound, do them and us the kindness of writing us for a free sample. No medicine chest is complete without Gray's Ointment. Address Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 807 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Knees Became Stiff

Five Years of Severe Rheumatism

The cure of Henry J. Goldstein, 14 Barton Street, Boston, Mass., is another victory by Hood's Sarsaparilla. This great medicine has succeeded in many cases where others have utterly failed. Mr. Goldstein says: "I suffered from rheumatism five years, it kept me from business and caused excruciating pain. My knees would become as stiff as steel. I tried many medicines without relief, then took Hood's Sarsaparilla, soon felt much better, and now consider myself entirely cured. I recommend Hood's."

NOTICE.

To the North Mississippi Leaguers:

The Board of Commissioners of the Tri-State Methodist Hospital to be located in Memphis, Tenn., are making an appeal to the interested Conferences for the necessary funds to build and equip this much-needed institution. Throughout this entire section we have no hospital. Our sick must be cared for by others. This is a reproach to our Church that should be removed, and removed now. The fourth Sunday in January has been set apart by our Conference and the other interested Conferences to secure a contribution from every Methodist in our bounds. If this is done, what a magnificent beginning it will be! We can soon begin building, and in a few months be ready to care for our sick.

As the president of your League Board, let me appeal to you to see that every Leaguer in North Mississippi has a chance to make a contribution to this noble cause. Remember that the League is the pick of the Church's young people. They must take the lead. Would it be asking too much of our Leaguers to contribute an average of a dollar per member? Some will have to give much more than this to make up for those who are not able to do this much. You need not confine yourself to the membership of the League. If there are others outside the League who will contribute, by no means pass them by. We are counting on our Leagues to rally to this enterprise. Do not disappoint us. Fraternally,

J. H. HOLDER,

President of the Board.

Objections to "The Truth" Do you know what they are, and can you give a convincing Scriptural answer to those who deny the vital principles of the gospel?

A RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY

By CHAS. E. ORR

Enables the Christian reader to locate the very Scriptures best calculated to show the true nature of Bible salvation to the objector and to those unacquainted with the truth.

PRACTICAL AND TRUE TO LIFE

Through hearing the preaching of the pure gospel and the reading of literature, Mrs. Wiseman receives light that condemns her former life and awakens an intense desire to know God. James Wiseman, having lived forty years with only a Christian profession, is strongly "set" in his religious ways.

The humble life of his wife—her prayers, earnest entreaties and convincing explanation of regeneration, baptism, sanctification and the one church—finally bring about a very desirable change in the Wiseman home.

10,000 PECAN TREES

Grafted to paper-shell variety, were carefully grown by us for our own planting, but on account of not getting land ready for them this season, we offer them for sale.

Other Nurseries are already cleaned up on Pecan Trees, although the season lasts until March. Ours is now the only complete stock in the whole country.

Grafted trees begin bearing in a few years and continue for generations. Nothing increases the value of a Southern farm like a Pecan Orchard, which in a few years is worth $1000 per acre.

Every land owner should plant at least a few pecans. They are the surest, safest and most profitable investment. Ten acres means a fortune laid by for old age.

No other section of our country has such an opportunity as this. Take advantage of it now, and send at once for our Price List.

Editorial

Why not hand your pastor some quarterage now? He is pretty sure to need money early in the year. Especially is this true if he has had an expensive move.

Dr. J. H. Jowett says: "God does not comfort us to make us comfortable, but to make us comforters." The truth is, none of God's gifts are designed to be selfishly enjoyed. He said to Abraham, "I will bless thee, and make thee a blessing." Christ gives him in whose heart he dwells a vision of the "other man" and a sense of obligation to him.

Have you welcomed the new preacher? If not, by all means do so at your earliest opportunity. And do not forget his wife and the other inmates of the parsonage. A family moving into a strange community are certain to appreciate any kindness shown them. At such a time a few words evincing interest and giving encouragement are calculated to do great good.

No sermon can be great in which self is paraded. The discourse which has for its aim the exaltation of the preacher is unfit to be delivered from the pulpit. There was much wisdom in the petition which our fathers were wont to make for the brother who was about to expound the Word: "May he hide himself behind the Cross, and preach Christ and him crucified."

It is a matter of great importance to have the church comfortable during the hours of service. A cold church tends to decrease attendance and lessen interest in what is going on. Fortunate is the congregation that has a good sexton, who adjusts the fires to the state of the temperature and keeps things in good order in every part of the building. These remarks are especially applicable to our country chapels, where, too often, window panes are out and no provision is made for starting a fire until the people have begun to gather. Such a condition of things should not be allowed to exist. Everything possible should be done to make God's house bright, cheery, and attractive, and whatever contributes to this is a means of grace.

Some of our contemporaries have had something to say about the burden of celebrating Christmas. Not a few things which some people unhappily connect with it are a nuisance, such as dissipation and the din of disagreeable noises. What nexus there is between a firecracker and the birth of the Prince of peace, we have never been able to discover. Truly, the explanation of some human ways is past finding out, and the Bard of Avon evinced his usual marvelous insight into human nature when he made Puck say: "What fools these mortals be." That a people who call themselves civilized should annually spend thousands of dollars, burn up a vast amount of property, and sacrifice a number of human lives for the mere privilege of making an outlandish racket, is certainly passing strange.

THE POVERTY PROBLEM.

The problem of poverty is as old as the race. In all ages and lands since the human family began to multiply on the earth there have been those who lacked the necessities of life. Such destitution arises from various causes, chief among which may be mentioned misfortune, idleness, improvidence, vice, oppression, and the inequitable distribution of wealth. It is true that some political economists have sought to throw the responsibility for all the want in the world upon God by bringing forward what is known as the Malthusian doctrine, which holds that population increases in a geometrical ratio, while the means of subsistence increase in arithmetical ratio. In other words, they argue that the people in the various nations tend to multiply faster than do the products which are essential to their existence, and that in consequence, by the very laws of nature, poverty must inevitably result in the course of time. But this theory has little to sustain it, and it is becoming more and more discredited. Every new explication of science shows more strikingly how abundant is the provision which the benevolent Creator has made for the race of beings upon whom he has stamped his own image. God gives enough to supply the needs of all, if it were only properly distributed. It is "man's inhumanity to man" that "makes countless thousands mourn."

Most of the extreme destitution upon the planet to-day exists in heathen lands. Where Christianity prevails it seems to be decreasing. That poverty will ever be completely obliterated in the world, we scarcely dare to hope. The Master said: "Ye have the poor with you always." But if we must ever have needy ones, may we not hope to have ultimately charity sufficient to supply their necessities? Is it too much to expect that in the coming kingdom of our Lord on earth, where want shall exist, philanthropy shall correspondingly abound?

It greatly pleases us when we see statesmen and governments seriously concerning themselves with the condition of the masses of the people. Civilization can go forward to higher things only as they are lifted up and enlightened. A nation can be no better or greater than the body of its citizenship. No man is fit to be a ruler who does not feel for the common people, and carry in his breast a sense of obligation to strive to make life better and brighter for them. That there are to-day such men in public life is shown by the following utterance, made a few days since in a church in Wales by Chancellor Lloyd-George, one of the foremost members of the British Cabinet:

"Poverty is not the fault of Providence, who provides in abundance. There are millions of men, women and children in this (the richest) country in the world who, through no fault of their own, go through life sodden in poverty, wretchedness and despair.

"You cannot deal with a problem of this magnitude by mere spasmodic appeals to the charity of the benevolent. That is hopelessly inadequate. You might as well try to run the army and navy by voluntary subscriptions. It is the community alone that can command the resources to drain this morass of wretchedness, so as to convert it into a verdant and fertile plain. I do not agree with the view that the Church is concerned solely with spiritual things.

"Churches ought to be like a searchlight turned on all slums, to shame those in authority into doing something. What does poverty mean? It means that men have not enough to purchase the barest necessities of life for themselves and children. One-fourth of the population of this country, even in times of prosperity, are living under conditions of poverty thus defined.

"The national income is large enough to give $1000 a year to every family. Yet one-third of that income is received and spent by 250,000 persons. One two-hundredth part of the population, or, in families, one-fortieth of the population are receiving and spending one-third of the income of the country.

"It is incumbent upon those who have been blessed by Providence to make sacrifices for others. This is said to be talking socialism by setting class against class. Let us get rid of these cockatoo phrases. Let us get to real, terrible, human, lasting facts, writhing, and see the thing below. Let us tear from this pit of wretchedness its flimsy covering of phrases, so as to reveal that mass of human agony. It is idle to attempt to deal with a colossal problem of this kind unless those who are well-to-do are prepared to make great sacrifices. The great lesson of Christianity is this: You cannot redeem those who are below, except by sacrifice of those who are above. It is the task our Master came here for, to lift the needy from the mire and the poor from the dung hill, and it is the Christian churches alone that can accomplish it."

PASTOR RUSSELL'S SERMONS.

Many of the country weekly newspapers and not a few dailies are carrying plate matter giving the sermons of Pastor Russell of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. It appears that some editors think they are affording their subscribers good religious reading, but the contrary seems evident. Pastor Russell misses the recognized standards of Christian doctrine about as far as any self-styled Christian preacher in the country.

He denies the doctrine of final punishment; teaches that those who have faith in Christ shall be joint heirs with him and shall occupy a better place than others in heaven, to which place "all the families of the earth" are going; predicts that we are rapidly nearing the dawn of the millennium and the chaining of Satan for a thousand years, and conveniently advocates about every form of destructive criticism. The fact is that Pastor Russell's sermons are nothing less than a mild form of moral lectures discriminating against pure orthodoxy, and the readers of secular papers that contain his sermons should interview the editors and insist on having these discourses discontinued.—A. J. G.

CHARACTERISTICS OF EARLY METHODIST PREACHING.

"Our Fathers Have Told Us."

Nothing was more characteristic of early Methodist preaching than potency. Methodism, like the American Continent, is a huge fact. Some one discovered this continent and some one made Methodism. It may be said with truth that John Wesley was not the founder of Methodism, but the Lord Jesus Christ. Nevertheless, it is equally true to say that the Lord did not create Methodism as, for example, he created its works. He himself laid the foundations of the world and gave to the sea its decree that its waters should not pass his commandment, there being no one with him to see which way the light was parted. Not so did He found Methodism.

It was the Lord who founded the Apostolic churches, yet the book which contains the history of their founding is properly called "The Acts of the Apostles."

What the Book of Acts is to the Apostolic Church, that "the lives of the early Methodist preachers" are to the Methodist Church. We speak, as I have just done, of the early Methodist preachers and we do well, for they were preachers above everything else. They were not priests, nor men of letters, nor organizers—though the first of their order was a supreme organizer. They were preachers. And we may justly inscribe on Methodism this legend:

"Methodist Preachers—Their Mark."

Preaching is not like the singing of a lark—it is an action, or it is nothing. Paul's preaching created the churches which he founded; the proof that it was Christ who spoke to him is seen in the signs and wonders that followed, when fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, the effeminate, abusers of themselves with men, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, executioners were washed and sanctified and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the spirit of our God. Paul's preaching was potent, if any man's ever was; his enemies themselves being judges. It was an enemy who said of Paul that "almost throughout all Asia he had persuaded and turned away much people," i. e., from idolatry. The preaching of the early Methodists resembled that of Paul, because, like him, it was potent.

John Foster desiderated some means whereby the practical effect of the preaching of his day might be measured. We may measure the practical effect of early Methodist preaching by the Methodism it produced. The two Wesleys, Whitefield, Nelson, Walsh, Benson, Clarke, Smith, Storer and their fellows were all, like Gideon, mighty men of valor, and for much the same reason, namely, the Spirit of God clothed himself with them, so that it was not they but the grace of God which was with them. God gave them not a spirit of fearlessness, but of power and love and discipline, and the Methodist Church was the result. They were men of might and found their hands; hence the thirty millions of Methodists to-day.

Early Methodist Preaching—Evangelistic.

Paul said to Timothy, "Preach the Word." It was a large order, for the Word of God is like its Author. So much like its Author is the Word of God that it has long been a most important point whether the well-known passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews, which describes the Word of God as being "quick and powerful," refers to the Son of God himself, or to "the truth as it is in Jesus." If I refer to St. Paul again it must not be supposed that I wish to institute a comparison between that great apostle and the early Methodist preachers, much less to assume that Paul and they were on a par. But it was St. Paul's method to open the Scriptures and then to allege therefrom, than which there is no higher form of preaching possible to man. The first Methodists followed this example notably. Wesley himself, and in less degree his helpers, some of whom had a remarkable knowledge of the Scriptures—Walsh, Benson, Clarke, and in a later day, Watson, Bunting and others—were mighty in the Scriptures. They preached nothing else but the Word. You might have gone to hear any one of them any day in the week and you would have heard nothing about astronomy, the milky way, radium rays, but you would have heard much about loving grace, justification by faith, assurance, and perfect love.

In Christ Jesus they begot thousands of souls through the gospel, which is, indeed, the only means of the procreation of spiritual children. They gave no organ recitals at the close of their services; they had too much business on hand for that. They were always plucking brands from the fire. They took heed to the ministry they had received in the Lord and fulfilled it, watching over themselves as did that preacher who wrote in his Bible: "Thou art a minister of the Word: mind thy business."

This Preaching Was Inevitable.

In this sense, the resurrection of our Lord was inevitable—it not being possible that he should be holden of death. The preaching of the early Methodists was inevitable—it not being possible that men whose ears had been opened by the divine Ephatha and whose tongues had been loosed should be silent concerning their Savior. Like Paul again, these men were "constrained of the Word." They did not preach for the morsel of bread they received (for sometimes they dined off the hedges, satisfying their hunger with blackberries), nor because they were appointed or expected to preach; but because they could not forbear, the Word of God being a fire in their bones. They could do no other; necessity was laid upon them. They were peripatetic preachers, propagandists, apostles of the Christian faith.

You have just had an election in Canada and your leading men a week or two ago were engaged in firing the zeal and currying the vote of the electors. It was a strenuous conflict while it lasted. Now, however, the hub-bub is over and the Canadians have settled down to the ante status quo. But Wesley's campaign did not close till his life ended. For fifty years he contested the United Kingdom in the interests of the Lord Jesus Christ, as also did his helpers and immediate successors. They never accepted the ante status quo. They were revolutionary preachers, as was Christ Himself, of whom it was said, "He stirreth up the people." In England, at the present time, it is thought by some that conventional and aimless preaching is greatly retarding the progress of the Kingdom of God. But that kingdom was increased daily by the incessant evangelistic preaching of the early Methodists. We must imitate their methods if we would enjoy their success.

A Demonstration.

In our science schools teachers give demonstrations to their scholars. Some teachers are not content to theorize and philosophize, they demonstrate the truths they teach. The early Methodist preachers were "converted under the Old Act," as we have heard Gipsy Smith say he was. They have known "every one the plague of his own heart;" they had proved for themselves the efficaciousness of the death of Christ; and hence they were witnesses for Christ, and as such they demonstrated the gospel which they preached.

Scientists are fond of what they call original work, of research, as they call it, and the doing of it makes them experts. The early Methodist preachers were "experts." What they said concerning Christ was not what some one else had told them, no matter how distinguished that some one else might be; they said it of themselves.

"What we have felt and seen,
With confidence we tell;
And publish to the sons of men
The signs infallible."

That was the religion that made Methodism: is it not the religion that we may expect will conquer the world?—Rev. Henry T. Smart, Wesleyan Methodist Church.

THE ART OF ARTS.

By Rev. C. E. Sheppard, in the Methodist Recorder.

The art of living right—a greater art, there can not be. It is the art of arts. It involves right adjustment between man and man, between man and God. All literature, music, poetry, law, philosophy and religion are nothing worth, only as they promote this end.

The one supreme master of living is Jesus. He shows us that it can be done, and how. To those who would approximate it, there is the one rule, "Follow me."

The effort at right living suffers greatly from prejudices; hence we are thrown out of gear. We see life as we are, and not as it is, our prejudices making the difference. Proper perspective is necessary to a correct view and understanding. However familiar we may be with the Word of God, or well soever filled our mind with splendid maxims and correct principles, it boots us nothing, unless the truths they contain become ours by reflection, and are embodied in life. Getting a right view, and possessing the disposition to put in practice what the right view reveals is, after all, the secret.

We learn easily to quote, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," how hardly we learn its force and importance. And the reverse, which is equally true, sufficient unto the day is the good thereof. If it is unwise to burden to-day with to-morrow's load of care, it is equally unwise to slight to-day's provisions of comfort and joy, while we pluck at the fruit that will not be ripe until to-morrow. We should be glad for the comforts of to-day; but permit the sweet joys of to-morrow to await to-morrow's coming. A long absent friend is coming, be glad; but be not so feverishly impatient in your anticipation as to lose or mar the pleasure of to-day. Be not so eager at the sound of a long missed voice as not to hear the music of that voice speaking at your side, to be hushed to-morrow forever.

The only safe and wise method for us is to live in the present tense. Yesterday we can not reach, except through memory; the future, the grandchild of yesterday, has not arrived. To-day is ours. The duty of life is with us now. To live humbly toward God, to live courageously and generously, reaching out our hands in a brotherly way now, is our privilege. To live each day as though we had only the one day on earth—the one day in which to praise God, the one day in which to be loyal to Christ, the one day in which to make the world happy, that is the way to live if we would realize the highest art and bring something of heaven into the present. Such a life has caught the right spirit, is moved with the divine fire; it inspires to the highest living, to the art of arts. Such a life counts. The poet describes the life that counts after this fashion:

The life that counts must toil and fight;
Must hate the wrong and love the right;
Must stand for truth by day and night—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must aim to rise
Above the earth to sunlit skies;
Must fix his gaze on Paradise—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must hopeful be;
In darkest night make melody;
Must wait the dawn on bended knee—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must hopeful be;
The cares and needs of others see;
Must seek the slave of sin to free—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts is linked with God;
And turns not from the cross—the rod;
But walks with joy where Jesus trod—
That is the life that counts.

The late Henry Clay Trumble one time said, "That which is not worth dying for is not worth living for. Living is dying and the spending of life is the bringing of death." He who lives right from day to day also dies right from day to day. Each day we live is one day added to life, also one day taken from life. This day adds one more day to the number you have lived since you were born; and this day is one day less for you until the end. So then, in this sense, living is dying; and as to how we die is as important as how we live. The following lines from the pen of Edward Vance Cook embody not a little truth:

"Did you tackle the trouble that came your way,
With a resolute heart and cheerful,
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh! trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it,
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only how did you take it.

You're beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face.
It's nothing against you to fall down flat,
But to lie there, that's disgrace.
The harder you're thrown, why the higher you bounce;
Be fond of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're licked that counts,
It's how you did fight and why.

And though you be down to the death, what then?
If you battled the best you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the critic will call it good.
Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,
And whether he's slow or spry,
It isn't the fact you're dead that counts,
But only how did you die."

WHEN PENTECOST COMES.

Bishop Berry, in Zion's Herald.

The Holy Spirit is the only revivalist. When he comes, spiritual life is always quickened. When he dominates, evangelistic activity is always intense. He alone can awaken, renew, sanctify, and surcharge with unconquerable energy.

When the history of evangelism is studied from the eternal side, it will be found that no genuine revival, great or small, ever came to a community in which some eager soul was not first touched by the pentecostal flame. "When he is come to you, he will convince the world (through you) of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment."

At one of the annual Conferences the leader of the morning devotional hour was giving an exposition of the Scripture just quoted. Among those who listened was a scholarly, influential minister. The speaker said: "When He is come—to whom? Why, to you."

When the words "to you" were spoken, the minister dropped his face into his hands and leaned over the back of the seat in front of him. The tears ran down his cheeks and through his fingers. He said to himself: "To you—yes, to me. Why have I not seen it before? The personal Holy Ghost must come to me, then I shall convince the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. Dare I presume to open my heart now? I do receive him to dwell with me."

Before the meeting was over the minister arose and, with choking emotion, exclaimed: "My Pentecost has come!" He went from Conference to his old field to see ninety souls converted within ninety days.

"When he is come to you"—to you, pastor; to you, Sunday-school teacher; to you, member of the official board; to you, father and mother—you will become a storm-center of a new and mighty evangelism, and all the forces of evil cannot keep back the incoming tides of saving grace.

PLANNING THE REVIVAL.

Every earnest pastor is planning his work for the new year, and among the many important events he is looking forward to is the revival season of 1912. When shall the meeting be held? Who shall do the preaching? What help shall be employed? These are some of the questions being asked just now by hundreds of preachers and, we doubt not, many of the lay people as well.

As to the time, let it be God's time. What we mean by that is to hold the meeting when the revival spirit is moving upon the congregation. As to who shall do the preaching, if possible let the pastor do it himself. This will give him a great advantage in taking care of results. If the pastor cannot do the preaching, let him at least stay in charge of the meeting. He cannot afford to let any one come between him and his congregation. As to the help employed, let it be the congregation. If the pastor and the people will work together, if the whole church will come to the preacher's aid, then the results, whatever they may be, will abide.

Every victory a church gains not only counts in its onward movement, but adds spiritual strength and moral courage to it. That is the process by which heroic congregations are developed. That is also the method by which heroic preachers are made. That is the method also that convinces the world of the heroism of the cross, and consecrated heroism wins.—Midland Methodist.

REMINISCENT.

No. 3.

Captain Sharp, in command of a company of Mississippians, became noted in Fort McRae for his perseverance in drilling his company. In training recruits to keep time in marching, the officer to prompt them would call, "'Step! step! step!" Captain Sharp would abbreviate, and with a stamp of his foot, would say, "Epp! epp! epp!" And it was said that after a faithful day's drilling was done, the captain could be heard in his sleep at any time of the night, commanding, "Epp! epp! epp!"

There was neither frost, ice, nor snow, in the fort up to the time we left, about Dec. 20, yet the wind at times, especially in the night, was very chilly. A young man named Smith from Bahala, now Beauregard, coming in from guard duty one morning looking mad enough to fight, said: "The next man I hear say it is not cold in Florida, I'll tell him he is a liar."

Before our term of enlistment expired, a law of conscription was being enforced, and to escape conscription, I, with a number of others, re-enlisted. An inducement of $50 bounty and a furlough of thirty days was offered us. Travel north was suspended, which made it impossible for me to go home, so I went to Bahala, Miss., where I had been teaching. Railroad connection was now easy between Pensacola and Mobile, but alas! when we arrived in Mobile, we learned that our train had just left us and we were doomed to wait in the city for twenty-four hours. We doffed our soldier's garb and donned citizen's clothing, and, being unrestrained by martial law, turned ourselves loose. We had not seen a child nor a woman for months, and we scarcely recognized each other in citizen's apparel. Everything seemed strange and new, and all looked complacent and happy until late in the afternoon, when the few sober ones discovered that the most of our crowd was drinking heavily. In my raising, whisky was so plentiful and about as cheap as buttermilk, and tobacco was grown all over southwestern Kentucky, yet I never learned to use either. I would not drink with the boys, and some of them said I should drink. Two undertook to hold me, while a third one tried to drench me, but "one can lead a horse to water, but forty cannot make him drink, if he won't drink."

We reached our respective places without delay and our thirty days were soon gone, and we all met at Corinth, our place of rendezvous. The weather was cold, damp and rough compared with Florida. We lost no time in stretching our tents and very soon we had a number of sick men in camp. A Corinth hotel was substituted for a hospital, the sick were conveyed to it, and I was put in charge of it. Dr. Gibson of Corinth came around each morning and prescribed for the sick men. After that it became my duty to administer the medicine, day and night, make out requisitions for rations, whether they could take them or not, and I had entire control of the hospital containing nine men. The most of them could not sit up nor get up and down without help. I became so well accustomed to my work that I administered medicine every two hours through the night and slept between times. A number of the Corinth ladies visited the hospital and predicted exhaustion and a breakdown upon my part, but I had fine health all the time.

Other troops soon arrived and the little town became lively. About the fourth Sunday in January, '62, it was reported that Chaplain J. A. Fife, a Methodist minister, would preach in the Methodist Church at 11 o'clock. I took leave of absence, as my patients were better, and went, and what a crowd! Some citizens, ladies and gentlemen were present, but the auditors in the main were soldiers. The preacher wore full beard, which was a strange sight in ante-bellum days, and he was very enthusiastic. He did not preach the gospel that day, but spoke out of the abundance of his heart a war speech which fired the hearts of his auditors, and he was applauded through his entire speech. I remember these words of the chaplain's speech: "My fellow-soldiers and citizens, if we succeed in repelling our foes and establishing our independence, we must be of one mind and heart, and while we, as husbands and young men, bare our breasts to the storms of leaden death that shall be hurled against us, we beg the sympathy and prayers of the wives, mothers, and sweethearts that shall be left behind. 'Be strong and of a good courage, be not afraid, neither be thou discouraged, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.' Courage is the word, for no milk and cider men will count in the dark and bloody struggle before us."

H. ARMSTRONG.

GRUMBLING.

Dear Brother Meek: Of late I have heard no end of grumbling about the weather. To-day (Saturday, January 6th) the snow, "like messengers from above," has been falling. The complaint has been increased accordingly. The older I get the more I am convinced that James Whitcomb Riley was right when he said:

"Taint no use to grumble and complain;
It is jest as cheap and easy to rejoice;
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain,
W'y—rain's my choice."

I never could agree with William Cullen Bryant when he said: "The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year." I have never seen the reason for one part of the year being sadder than the other. 'Tis true that in the fall the leaves lose their verdure, but they are only dying that new ones may come in the spring. "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die." I have long ago subscribed to the doctrine that "we are creatures of habit." I believe that we often grumble because it has rather become a habit as well as a fashion. We ought to quit it. It does no good, but, on the contrary, it does harm. It wears us out. It lessens our ambitions. It throws a dark shadow across our pathway. It makes us suspicious and fault-finding. It hides us from God's smile. It not only hurts us, but it likewise hurts those with whom we associate. Let us think of something good to say instead of something evil or unkind. Let us count our blessings and look at them awhile. Let us brush up the old Bible and see the many promises of God contained therein. Let us look about us and see how many people love us. Let us then see how many we love. That "love begets love" is still a true saying. In short, let us quit grumbling and go to praising awhile. Praise is not flattery.

Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Hamill will spend a week conducting Sunday school institutes in the Danville District (Va.) some time in February.

Gipsy Smith was slated to begin his revival campaign in San Francisco on December 30. His meetings at other points on the Pacific Coast have been remarkably successful.

It is claimed that in the list of prominent men given in "Who's Who," one in every twelve is the son of a minister. This argues well for the value of Christian training in the home.

It is stated that for several years the Methodist missionaries in India have refused to accept the increase in their salaries from $950 to $1200, and have applied the money thus accruing to an extension of the work.

The South Georgia Conference raised last year an excess of $1100 for the Conference Chairman's Fund, and those whose names were on the list were paid 125 per cent on the apportionment. This Conference also has made for several years a great missionary record.

Evangelist Joe Ramsey is spending a month at his home in Manchester, Tenn., resting and studying. Though not blessed with eyesight, this efficient worker manages to familiarize himself with current literature to a remarkable extent by having others read to him.

The Methodists of British Columbia are founding a college at Point Grey, which they have named for Dr. Egerton Ryerson, who was one of the most prominent educators that ever lived and wrought in Canada. This institution will be affiliated with the University of British Columbia.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, who has been named for the presidency of the projected Chinese Republic, is reported to be a son of an early Christian convert, and also to have obtained his education in Christian schools. The Westminster Gazette of London affirms that he himself is, in faith and practice, a Christian.

Mrs. Janetta C. Fisk, the wife of General Clinton B. Fisk, died at her home in New York City on January 1, in the eightieth year of her age. She was a woman of uncommon intellectual strength and far-reaching influence. She greatly assisted her husband in founding Fisk University (a school for the education of negroes) at Nashville, Tenn., and was for fifteen years president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Edward Jackson, thirty-five years ago a newsboy in Kansas City, died in Galveston, Texas, on December 27, leaving an estate valued at $1,250,000, which he acquired as a ranchman. He gave in his will a small sum to relatives and $100,000 to the daughter of a Mexican who befriended him when he was a shepherd attending a flock of sheep, and bequeathed the remainder of his fortune to the Roman Catholic Church, to be used for orphans and other helpless children.

The Mueller Orphan Home at Bristol, England, in its annual report, shows receipts for last year of $178,745. Nearly $2,000,000 have been received since the death of its founder thirteen years ago, and more than $9,000,000 in its entire history. The receipts are all purely voluntary gifts. Mr. Mueller always insisted that he never asked a man for a penny, and the rule has been strictly adhered to. Last year 230 boys and girls under fourteen years of age were received into the home, and at the close of the year it reported 1833 inmates.—Richmond Virginian.

The English Religious Tract Society last year issued from its home office 491 new publications—136 books and 139 tracts; produced for the first time in England illustrated booklets and tracts in Chinese; and, publishing the Pilgrim's Progress in Wemba, added a new language to its list. The Auxiliary Tract Societies in India, China and Japan have extended their work—the Chinese society having issued 471,407 books and tracts. A fund of $100,000 for special work in China has been raised during the past three years, but more can be used. A Portugal fund has been started and $7,500 received toward a desired sum of $15,000 for use in that new republic.

Samuel Cupples, philanthropist, Christian and member of St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, South of St. Louis, Mo., died January 8, at his home in St. Louis. His funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. Dr. J. W. Lee, assisted by Bishop E. R. Hendrix of Kansas City, Mo., and Dr. S. H. Walcott, former presiding elder of the St. Louis District. Mr. Cupples has embedded himself in the memories of Methodists of Missouri by his generous gifts to Central College at Fayette, Mo., the Methodist Orphan's Home, of St. Louis, and to St. John's Church of which he was a member, but he has built for himself a greater monument in the hearts of all who knew him by his beautiful and simple Christian life which was radiant with the image of his Lord and Master.

CENTENARY COLLEGE AND SHREVEPORT NOTES.

Revs. H. W. Cudd and D. L. Griffin spent the holidays with brother Cudd's family at Quadrate, La.

Rev. T. J. Holladay labored faithfully with his people during the holidays. He serves the Oil City charge.

Rev. S. J. Davies will supply the Pleasant Hill charge this year in addition to teaching in Centenary College.

Rev. Henry T. Carley, well known to New Orleans Methodists, is doing an excellent work as professor in Centenary College.

Rev. W. F. Roberts, who serves the Greenwood charge, has entered upon his new labors with zeal and is well liked by his people.

Rev. F. Power, having begun his fourth year on the Mooringsport charge, reports everything in good shape and the prospects bright for a good year.

Rev. J. L. Cady preached at Bossier City last Sunday, after having spent some time visiting relatives at Indian Bayou, where he preached for J. S. Rutledge.

Revs. I. T. Andrews, Q. R. Henry, A. D. George, and D. B. Boddie have returned to pursue their college work, after having spent the holidays with their relatives and friends.

Rev. H. J. McCoy, who was appointed to the Cedar Grove charge, located in the newly developed district of Shreveport, has been restricted in his work on account of the want of a proper meeting place.

Rev. L. A. Sims is in high favor with his people at Vivian, La. The Methodists at that point have no house of worship and are at present worshipping in the Presbyterian Church. Our people are planning to purchase a site in the near future upon which to build a new house of worship. With the present pastor, a building is practically assured.

SOME LATE BOOKS.

The Work of Christ, or the Atonement Considered in its Influence upon the Intelligent Universe. By Enoch M. Marvin, D.D. Smith & Lamar, Publishers. Price, 25 cents, net.

This is a new edition of this famous little volume, which has been out of print for several years. We read a borrowed copy in the beginning of our ministry, and immediately tried to purchase one, but, much to our regret, found that none was to be had. It is doubtful whether our Church has ever produced a clearer thinker than Bishop Marvin, and in this discussion he is at his best. This brief treatise is worth its weight in gold, and we heartily commend it to the public. Especially do we urge our young preachers to procure a copy and give it a thoughtful reading.

The Hymns and Tune Writers of the Church, by W. F. Tillett, D.D., of the M. E. Church, South, and Charles S. Nutter, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Issued by Smith & Lamar of Nashville, Tenn., Eaton & Mains of New York, and Jennings & Graham, Cincinnati. Price, $2, net.

This is an annotated edition of the New Methodist Hymnal, furnishing an account of the origin of the hymns and tunes contained therein, and giving many interesting incidents in connection with them. It is needless to say that this volume serves a useful purpose. Hymnology is an important study, and whatever tends to encourage and promote it renders a substantial service. Next to the Bible, the Hymnal is our greatest devotional book, and we need to know it and use it to a far greater extent than most of us do. This admirable publication should be in every preacher's library, and, indeed, in every Methodist home. We do not see how any intelligent church worker can afford to be without a copy.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION OF THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

For One Year (regular subscription rate) . . . $1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)

Eight Months 1.00
To Preachers 1.00
To widows of preachers 1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription to cover expense of remitting, etc., provided they remit by money order, or New York exchange, or stamps, or registered letter. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or stamps, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society's nine-story granite and marble building in New York City was destroyed by fire on January 9. Four men were killed and a loss of $15,000,000 was sustained.

C. V. T. Richeson, the Cambridge (Mass.) preacher who poisoned a young lady music pupil of his congregation, has been sentenced to die during the week of May 19. Thus ends the tragic attempt to cover immorality with crime.

The National Committee of the Democratic party has decided to hold the next National Convention in Baltimore beginning June 25. St. Louis was the next place in favor, having received 18 votes, Baltimore's vote being 23.

With the beginning of 1912 all the telephones of England passed into the hands of the Government. About $80,000,000 worth of property and 18,000 employes were involved in the change. The Government was already interested in the telephone business, and now has 723,000 subscribers and $125,000,000 worth of property.

Success Magazine, which has for the past twelve years attempted to achieve the golden prize signified by its name, suspended publication on January 4, and Orison Swett Marden, its accomplished editor, is forced to acknowledge defeat in his undertaking. While in existence it stood for high ideals and was a leader in political reforms.

Miss Caroline Carpenter, a young lady 19 years old, died recently in Roosevelt, L. I., after having been the popular favorite at a dance given by the Junior Guild of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The doctors claimed that the cause of her death was over-exhaustion from dancing. No comment on such an event is necessary. The very fact cries out its warning note.

There were sixty lynchings during the year of 1911. Two of this number were white men, one a black woman, and the others black men. The crimes of which they were accused were, for the most part, murder and assault. One was cremated in the state of Pennsylvania. It is claimed that violent outbreaks and riots among the people are on the decrease.

Statistics show that there are fifty-one cripples on the streets of New Orleans under the age of sixteen, who are maimed by the practice of hopping trains. Most of this number are beggars. If possible, some means should be devised to prevent lads from engaging in this bad and dangerous practice. Possibly this work might be aided by the use of moving picture films to show the frightful results of such recklessness.

In an annual trade review letter written by Henry Clews, the Wall Street banker, there are two items of moment. The first is that we have a marked increase in our export trade and a decrease in our import trade. The second is that we spend annually $500,000,000 on automobiles, and the result of this enormous expenditure is that automobile owners have saved little, and many have become financially ruined because of this extravagance.

The London Morning Post recently devoted three columns of news space and an editorial condemning the proposed policy of the United States to give preference to American vessels in the Panama Canal. The British journal alleges that this is strictly contrary to existing treaties and thinks it should be prevented at any cost. Possibly the Post would have this country dig the canal, pay for the same, and turn it over to British management.

A new law made effective on January 1 in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Vermont requires that parties desiring to secure marriage license must give at least five days' public notice of their intention. Failure to give said notice makes illegal the marriage. The object of this law is to do away with elopements and secret marriages. It will further have a tendency to clip the wings of romance and sober the judgment of prospective contracting parties.

CONFERENCE OF SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS.

The third annual meeting of the Chairmen of Annual Conference Sunday School Boards and Field Secretaries convened in the First Methodist Church in New Orleans at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, Jan. 10, 1912, with Dr. E. B. Chappell, general secretary, presiding. Thirty-one delegates were present, and many others would have attended, being detained only because of the inclemency of the weather. A great program was rendered and many topics of telling importance were discussed by men who are alive to the best interests of the Church and the most modern methods of Sunday school work.

Among the many effective themes might be mentioned the general headings of the sessions: "Conference Sunday School Boards," "Field Secretaries," "Conference Anniversaries," "Presiding Elders, Pastors and Superintendents," "District Organizations and Work," and "Sunday School Equipment." These various topics were sub-divided so that no speech lasted more than fifteen minutes, which rendered the program very interesting. Following each general subject, the topic was given to the Conference for general discussion, and during these discussions many effective truths were uttered and much matter was suggested for the consideration of the Church.

Of more than ordinary interest were the opinions of the Conference as expressed in the resolutions offered at the close and adopted by that body. Some of these resolutions were strongly opposed, and while receiving the majority of the votes, could not be said to express the opinion of the Conference. Among the resolutions passed worthy of note are: That each Conference be urged to place in the field a secretary, who shall give his entire time to the interests of the Sunday school (there are now only ten Conferences employing field secretaries); that the Church, so far as possible, co-operate with the International Sunday School Association; that the Church both sympathize and help the negro in southern territory with his Sunday school work; that a standard of excellence be agreed upon for the Sunday schools of our Church; that all adult Bible classes, so far as possible, be organized according to the plan of our own Church; and that a committee of three be named to secure the preparation and publication of a suitable book on Sunday school work.

Each night special addresses were given in the church, to which the public was invited, but, on account of the severe weather, the meetings were poorly attended. Dr. Chappell, Rev. C. D. Bulla, Rev. C. W. Byrd, Rev. H. M. Hamill and Mr. John R. Pepper were among those who delivered addresses at the evening sessions, and all of these men inspired their hearers with greater love and consecration for the work of the Sunday school.

The Conference was not in vain. Dr. Chappell is accomplishing a great work through the Sunday school, and he has an efficient force of workers in the various Conference Chairmen and Field Secretaries. He makes an effective chairman of a public gathering, because of his masterly conceptions of parliamentary law and conference customs.

The Conference will be long remembered by all present, and will prove a means of advancing the interests of the Sunday schools in this section.

The following delegates were present: Dr. E. B. Chappell, general secretary, Nashville, Tenn.; Little Rock Conference, Rev. J. M. Workman; North Georgia, Rev. H. B. Mays; Alabama, Rev. H. M. Hamill; Arkansas, Rev. W. T. Martin; Baltimore, Rev. C. S. Stanton; Holston, Rev. J. A. Lyons; Illinois, Rev. L. F. Lawrence; Kentucky, Rev. C. H. Greer; Louisiana, Mr. H. L. Baker; Louisville, Rev. C. H. Prather; Memphis, Mr. J. R. Pepper; Mississippi, Rev. B. F. Lewis; North Carolina, Mr. W. B. Cooper; North Mississippi, Rev. R. P. Neblett; North Texas, Rev. O. T. Cooper; Northwest Texas, Rev. B. W. Dodson; St. Louis, Rev. Paul H. Linn; South Georgia, Rev. J. M. Outler; Southwest Missouri, Rev. W. H. Comer; Tennessee, Mr. E. E. French; Virginia, Mr. W. E. Hearn; West Texas, Rev. J. A. Pledger; Western North Carolina, Rev. C. W. Byrd; White River, Rev. W. P. Talkington; Florida, Rev. G. S. Roberts.

The following field secretaries were present: Alabama, Rev. W. M. Curtis; Florida, Rev. C. W. White; Louisiana, Rev. P. O. Lowrey; North Carolina, Mr. M. W. Brabham; North Mississippi, Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick; South Carolina, Mr. J. M. Way.

GREAT TEMPERANCE MEETING.

The first meeting looking to the efforts to be made in Louisiana to pass the Sheppard-Kenyon Bill through Congress will be held in the First Baptist Church, corner St. Charles Avenue and Delachaise Street, Friday night, Jan. 19, 1912, at 8 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., will be the principal speaker. Dr. Crafts has had years of experience in this work and has a national reputation. The character of the speaker and the great object of this meeting ought to make the attendance large and the interest intense. It is to be hoped that every pastor, every friend of moral reform and every enemy of illicit liquor selling and lawlessness will attend and show enthusiasm in the cause. Let all who read this announcement aid in publishing this mass meeting as widely as possible.

S. A. SMITH,
Superintendent Louisiana Anti-Saloon League.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The fire which destroyed the printing establishment of J. W. Tucker, of Jackson, last week, has greatly embarrassed the getting out of the Mississippi Conference Journal, some of the copy having been consumed by the flames.

The contract for the present job contemplated the completion of the work by the 15th of January, and at the time of the fire the work was progressing favorably.

The editors of the Journal have addressed themselves diligently to the reproduction of the statistical tables and other parts destroyed, and Mr. Tucker has made arrangements for the resumption of the work. We believe that there will be no further loss entailed than that involved in the delay, and we ask the brethren to exercise all possible patience in view of our misfortune.

We will give notice of the time of the completion of the work through the columns of the Advocate.

GIPSY SMITH.

By C. L. McCausland.

Gipsy Smith was born in a tent near Keystone, England, in the year 1860. His parents were rough gipsy people, without education or religion of any kind. Their home was by every road side. His father was given to the forms of dissipation for which the gipsies were noted; his mother was loyal to her husband and tender and kind to her children. His life, from his earliest years, until his conversion, was pathetically hungry and mysterious. The lonely boy of the open had all the possibilities and powers of those more fortunate than himself; and he felt longings and aspirations he could not understand; and they grieved him. He was of an outcast race; and felt it. The popular disfavor with which the gipsy race was regarded weighed upon him like a leaden pall. All knowledge of God was strangely missing from his life. His very first knowledge of God and the hereafter came to him from the lips of his mother, as she lay dying of smallpox in their tent by the road. She had blindly groped her way through heathenism at the last, and while dying told her husband and little children of God's goodness; and with her last breath prayed for them to the Father in heaven. The actual turning point of his life began with the death of his mother, and was completed years afterward in the conversion of his father, which he so beautifully describes as "the time when Christ looked into our old gipsy tent, when my father was praying for the first time in his life, and saw five preachers in that rough gipsy man and his four motherless children—the time when Christ entered their wretched home and turned that old tent into a temple of praise. That simple but mysterious scene staged a real miracle. It was a sublime moment in his life, as it is in the life of every convert. A gipsy boy, born in a tent, reared on the depressing plane of poverty and reaching out timidly from the gloom of fatalism, finds the Savior and believes on him. It was possibly an instantaneous conversion, but most probably it was a gradual one, for he tells us many weary days of heaviness before his faith was made whole. But from that day he had the knowledge of Christ and the example of an earnest Christian father to help him. The fervor of the "rough gipsy father" spread from his little family to all the camp, and to the villages where they stopped; and a voice began to sound in the heart of his boy, which he perceived but did not understand, but which was destined to lead him into ways he knew not. To the illiterate nomad, the untutored tramp of sixteen, came the call which was to bind in an indissoluble union the master and the man, and make him a factor in the religious life of the world. He was not a child prodigy. He did not begin at once to speak "In other tongues," but in painfully halting phrases and simply expressed thoughts; he did not so much as know a letter in the alphabet (and had never been in school a day in his life). He first testified humbly to his faith in Christ. He next spoke to the awakened members of his own sad family, to gipsy relatives and neighbors, to villagers by the roadside, to small congregations in Salvation Army missions and then to vast throngs in all parts of England. And to-day, Gipsy Smith, the boy from the tent and the lane, is the evangelist of Christendom, swaying the multitudes by the power of his eloquence; his speech replete with the richest, truest imagery; his voice flexible, vibrant and sympathetic, a past master in the use of the purest, strongest Anglo-Saxon. It is a remarkable sight, and one which must impress even the most cynical and skeptical observer. The gipsy instructing the world!

Any representative audience of a Gipsy Smith meeting would, on investigation, be found to have in it persons from every walk of life, and of every shade of character—scientists and illiterates, bankers and tramps, mothers and fathers from the home and men and women from the haunts of vice. And how many thousands his musical, kind voice has called back into the fold of God, and how many millions have been strengthened in their faith only the Book of the Judgment Day can show.

The man is a living example of the fulfillment of God's promise. His is a normal Christian development. His mind in early life was kept singularly free from evil; arriving at the age when danger threatens the youth, his father's conversion was a protection to him; following this, God seems to have thrown him into contact with spiritual persons. General William Booth, his first and truest friend, outside his own race, is a type of the men who influenced Gipsy Smith. But it was the reality of his own religious experience and the practical working of the Salvation Army, coupled with the pathetic adventures of his gipsy life, that gave to him the tremendous store of affection and sympathy which draws people to Christ by the thousands.

Through all his success and triumphs, which at times must have been sore temptations to self-congratulations, he has retained the naturalness of the forest, in the shade of which he was born. The same open frankness which is characteristic of the boy marks the man. And the same spirit which quickened his young soul into life, and gave him strength to overcome the handicaps of his birth and absolute illiteracy, leads him on from continent to continent, preaching Christ as the only hope of the eager multitudes that flock to his ministry.

There is nothing objectionable in the man or his method. He is consistently logical. Choosing every word with deliberate care, he places before his audiences the facts of the eternal words of God and their meaning, and insists that they be heard. He places tremendous emphasis on the deity of Christ and the necessity of the new birth and experimental religion. Here is where the man is seen at his best. He regards himself as a messenger of the divine Christ and demands a hearing. And to this end he preaches in terms exactly fitted for that purpose, and uses illustrations which shall be so plain as to demand a response to that subject. There is no equivocation. It is a matter of gospel truth with him and his intense earnestness helps doubting souls to believe it.

He is a master of assemblies. But more than that he appeals to the individual. He has a wonderfully developed faculty of reaching the individual, and making each hearer feel that he or she is the especial object of his solicitude.

Watching him day by day you are impressed by his wonderful influence over the vast congregations, and find yourself trying to account for it. He has a strong personality; there is undefinable charm about him; his bearing is graceful and natural; his manner frank and engaging. He has a strong, versatile mind; his well-trained intellect makes him as much at home with scholars as with the gipsy members of his own family, which he loves so well. His wide experience in many lands gives him a fund of information that is remarkable, and the intimate, brotherly relation he has had with needy souls has taught him the language of the human heart, and made him an adept in its use. But instead of these things accounting for Gipsy Smith, they deepen the mystery, because they must also be accounted for. However, he gives the key to his life in every sermon he preaches in the oft-repeated words, "My Lord." Take that key and go around the whole circle of the man and the lock to every door of his being will respond to it. The divine Christ accounts for the man all the way from his gipsy tent to his place of power in the world to-day. The burden of every message he delivered in Seattle, where thousands responded to his appeals, was: "Behold, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

WHERE MORAL COURAGE COMES IN.

Christiana Dickson, the wife of one of the first settlers of Erie county, Pa., was a small, blue-eyed, low-voiced woman, extremely timid, but she had a horror of drunkenness, says an exchange.

She lived in the days when the use of liquor was universal. But when her sons were born, she resolved to put a stop to whiskey-drinking in her home. Her husband being absent, her brothers called for the help of the neighbors, according to custom, to put up a barn needed on her farm. They all assembled and went to work, whilst she prepared a great dinner. After an hour or two, whisky was asked for. She refused to provide it.

Her brothers and, at last, an elder in the Church came to reason with her to tell her that she would be accused of meanness. Without a word, the little woman went to the barn, and baring her head, stepped upon a log and spoke to them.

"My neighbors," said she, "this is a strange thing. Three of you are my brothers, three of you are my friends. I have prepared for you the best dinner in my power. If you refuse to raise the barn without liquor, so be it. But I would rather see these timbers rotted where they lie than to give you whiskey."

The angry men went home, the little woman returned to the house, and for hours cried as though her heart would break. But the next day every man came back, went heartily to work, enjoyed her good dinner, and said not a word about whiskey.

This led to the discontinuance of the use of whiskey at barn-raising in the country. Her sons grew up strong, vigorous men, and did good work in helping to civilize and Christianize the world; their descendants are all of a high type of intellectual and moral men and women. If she had yielded this little point, they might have become like many of their neighbors—drunkards.—The Presbyterian.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

"G. W. HUDDLESTON,

THE HINDERED CHRIST.

The Lord Christ wanted a tongue one day
To speak a message of cheer
To a heart that was weary and worn and sad,
And weighed with a mighty fear.
He asked me for mine, but 'twas busy quite
With my own affairs from morn till night.

The Lord Jesus wanted a hand one day
To do a loving deed;
He wanted two feet on an errand for him
To run with glad some speed.
But I had need for my own that day;
To his gentle beseeching I answered, "Nay!"

So all that day I used my tongue,
My hands and my feet as I chose;
I said some hasty, bitter words
That hurt one heart, God knows.
I bruised my hands with worthless play,
And my willful feet went a crooked way.

And the dear Lord Christ—was his work undone
For lack of a willing heart?
Only through men does he speak to men.
Dumb, must he stand apart?
I do not know, but I wish to-day
I had let the Lord Christ have his way.

THE VERY BOY.

"There is a boy in the electrical shops that I want to recommend to your attention," said the superintendent of the Eureka Manufacturing Company, as he and the president came down the steps of the office at the noon hour.

"What about him?" said the shrewd old gentleman.

"He has an inventive turn of mind, and has already made several suggestions that have saved us a lot of money?"

"How old is he?"

"Fifteen."

"Fifteen? He is a mere child!"

"But he has a man's head on his shoulders. There he is now—the little fellow that just threw that hand spring. He is the queerest possible combination of childhood and manhood that I ever saw. What in the world is he up to?"

As the superintendent passed, a fair-headed, slightly-built lad disentangled himself from a crowd of fifty or sixty workmen who were hurrying into the street, and hid behind the corner of the building, peering keenly toward a figure coming slowly down the road. The object of his attention, a man of almost gigantic mold, was dressed in his working clothes, having evidently just come out of the rolling mill, where he had, no doubt, been puddling iron. In spite of his dirt-stained garments, he presented not only an imposing but an attractive appearance. His great head was finely poised upon his broad shoulders. His features were strong, his blue eyes keen, and his heavy shock of hair so fiery red that his shopmates called him the "Volcano." The boy permitted him to pass the corner, and then with an agile spring bounded onto his huge back and flung his arms around his neck.

"You little imp!" the two observers heard the giant exclaim, and they saw him holst his evidently not unwelcome burden across his shoulders and start down the street on a run, the boy's musical laugh ringing out, and the crowd cheering.

"That's his crony—Mike McGinnis," said the superintendent.

"Queerly mated pair," the president replied.

"Perhaps you never heard how they became friends?"

"No."

"Well, this little shaver's name is Alfred Atherton. He lived in a little town up in the state somewhere, and when his parents died, a couple of years ago, he struck out for himself, and came down to Cincinnati. For a few weeks he sold papers, and then got into the messenger service, and finally landed here. He was good-natured and clever, making many friends, but exciting some hostility by his indomitable teetotalism. When he was not aggressive about the temperance ideas, it became perfectly evident that he disapproved of his shopmates' habits of 'rushing the growler." They resented this, of course. Ridiculing could not move him, however, and they resorted to the scurviest trick you ever heard about.

"Eight or ten of the biggest and toughest boys in the shop devised a scheme to inveigle him into one of the saloons and either persuade or force him to drink a glass of rum. Somehow or other they got him inside the door, and, failing to make him obey them voluntarily, began to threaten. 'We'll pour it down your throat,' they said. 'You will?' he cried with flashing eyes. 'We'll see! My father fills a drunkard's grave, and I promised my mother on her dying bed that I'd never drink a drop! Now make me break that promise if you can!' With these words still on his lips the little shaver flung off his coat and set his back against the wall.

"In a jiffy the crowd was on him, and he went down, but fighting like a wild cat! Several of them held his mouth open, and one was just going to pour the whiskey into it, when the big Irishman sprang from his chair and, seizing them one after another, flung them across the room as if they had been five-pound bags of salt. When he came to little Atherton at the bottom of the pile, he picked him up, set him on the bar, slapped him on the back, and said to him, 'You little spalpeen, you make me want to sign the pledge.'

"Then do it," said Atherton.

"But I can't keep it."

"Yes you can, with the help of God," the boy said.

"There was something about the honest look in the boy's eyes and the clear ring in his voice that made the giant tremble. He had been a terrible man, you understand, having taken to drink on account of the death of a little child. He was the best puddler in the city, earning good wages, but spending them all in weekly drunks and going home to abuse the sweetest and most patient little woman in the world.

"For a moment McGinnis looked him blankly in the face, while the boys picked themselves up and stood watching from a distance.

"My Dennis would have been just about your size," said the half-drunken puddler, and burst into tears.

"Don't cry! Don't cry!" exclaimed little Atherton, putting both hands on his shoulders in an agony of sympathy, for it hurt him to see the giant weeping.

"Come home with me lad," the Irishman replied, and, lifting him down from the bar, led him out of doors. No one knows just what happened; but it looks as if the McGinnisses had adopted the boy, for he stayed in the house, and the 'Volcano' has never drunk another drop."

"Send the boy to me at 7:30 to-morrow morning. I've been looking for him for twenty years," said the president, when the superintendent had finished his story.—Epworth Herald.

WINTER.

Snowflakes flutter down from the clouds
And icicles hang from the eaves,
But the sleeping flowers never know,
And lie warm beneath the leaves.

The children polish skates and sleds;
They never find it drear;
The house is full of spicy smells,
And Christmas-time draws near.

—St. Nicholas.

THE CHIEF AMUSEMENT OF CHINESE BOYS.

"What do the boys play most in China?" I asked a missionary.

The missionary laughed heartily. "Kites," he said. "All the kids up to eighty years old fly kites, and I fly them too when I am in China. When the winter is over and the fields are green and the air is balmy once more, all the people, young and old, bring out their kites. You never saw so many kites, and they are all sizes, shapes, and colors. It is very exciting too; at least I find it so. It looks funny at first sight to see grown-up and aged people take such delight in flying kites, but it is surely a simple and healthful amusement, and helps to keep everybody young."—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

CHURCH EXTENSION AID.

The annual meeting of the Board of Church Extension will be held late in April or early in May. This is the meeting where applications for aid are considered. That those interested may know exactly how to proceed, the following is submitted:

1. All applications must be made upon the printed form provided by the Board for that purpose. These application blanks may be had without cost from this office.

2. After the application has been properly prepared, it should be sent at once to the Secretary of the Annual Conference Board as the following rule provides:

"Every application for consideration at the hands of the General Board must first receive the approval of the Board of Church Extension of the Conference from which it comes, and said approval must be given at the regular meeting of said Board or of the Executive Committee held in the month of March. Said Boards or Committees shall consider all the applications from their respective Conferences and forward such as they approve so as to reach the Board's office at Louisville, Ky., by April 1 of each year. Each application so approved must have the action of the Conference Board written therein, certified by the President and Secretary, and all the applications from a given Conference must be, by the Conference Board, graded and marked in the order of their relative importance, and the Secretary is thereby directed not to put on the calendar any application not in conformity with this rule."

3. The mid-year meetings of the Conference Boards or their Executive Committees are held in March. Do not fail to have your application in the hands of your Conference Board Secretary by March 1.

4. Personal representation in the interest of applications by other than members of the Board is not permitted, as the following rule declares:

"The Board has not time to hear oral arguments or statements in behalf of applications, and while considering applications for aid its doors are closed. Representatives other than those named in the application can be made in writing or through members of the Board. A different rule would be obviously unfair to applicants too far away or too poor to send representatives."

5. The demands upon the Board have been so numerous and so urgent that over-appropriation has resulted. The fiscal year will close with many unpaid grants on the book which must be taken care of out of next year's receipts. It is hoped, therefore, that, except in cases of extreme need, no request will be made for aid this spring.

For further information, application blanks, etc. address W. F. McMurtry, Corresponding Secretary, 1025 Brook St., Louisville, Ky.

Editorial.

It is said that it is by early work alone that one in growing a cotton crop can outwit the boll weevil. This is also the best way to overcome the influence of this pest in raising the Conference collections. If you desire to report in full on these claims next fall, the thing to do is to pay them off during the winter and spring. Why not make the attempt, brother? Should you not succeed, no harm will have been done. But you are certain to achieve some measure of success, if you will try faithfully.

Mr. Woodrow Wilson's candidacy for the presidency of the United States is now well under way. He has begun to address State Legislatures, and Mrs. Wilson's picture is beginning to appear in the papers. The more we observe the doings of public men in these strenuous times, the more our admiration for Grover Cleveland grows. He refused to chase around after the presidential nomination, and on one occasion when an effort was being made to secure and parade the pictures of his family, he threatened the parties doing this with a lawsuit. But we fear that we shall never see Mr. Cleveland's like again. Apparently the day of the statesman has passed in our country, and the day of the politician has come.

Harper's Weekly predicts that Mr. Taft will be chosen to lead the Republican party in the contest for the presidency and that he will be defeated. Col. George Harvey is a political prophet with no mean record, and his opinion will carry weight with many. We concur in the view that Mr. Taft will be nominated, but we consider the question of his being defeated as somewhat more problematical. However, we hope that he will not be re-elected. We think he is undoubtedly a man of good character and many admirable qualities, and that he has made a fairly good chief executive; but we hold the conviction that a great Christian nation should have at its head one who is an orthodox believer. We do not want for President a man who denies the deity of Christ. Some, doubtless, will call this narrowness, but we care not for that. Indeed, we have little admiration for those who are so broad that they stand for nothing.

THE CHURCH'S TRUE IDEAL.

Our ideals largely make us. They give direction to our energies and, to a great extent, shape our conduct and measure our achievements. Aye, more—they influence our characters, determine what we shall ultimately be, and fix at last our eternal destinies. What the paramount aim of one's life is, is a matter of the most fundamental importance. The difference between Abraham and Lott, between John and Judas, between Paul and Nero was, in the last analysis, a difference in their ideals—in what they conceived to be worth striving to attain. Every human soul has a dominant purpose, a goal toward which it seeks to progress. This master passion often discloses itself in one's early years. Warren Hastings is said to have resolved when a mere youth that he would regain the ancestral estate that bad management and debt had placed in other hands, and this resolution is represented to have been the inspiration of his extraordinary career. Napoleon is reported to have had a fondness for military history and the drill when a mere lad, and we see that the ardent passion for martial glory still possessed him when, upon reaching the summit of the Alps, he exclaimed, "Hannibal is surpassed!" Chopin and Mozart evinced when only children that remarkable passion for music which subsequently made them masters in the realm of melody and harmony. Few are the difficulties which a resolute and persistent purpose to realize one's aspirations cannot surmount. The history of the world's progress is principally the history of men fired with an ambition to achieve some great end and their struggles to accomplish it. The power of an ideal is well-nigh immeasurable. If low and unworthy, it is man's greatest curse; if exalted and noble, it is his mightiest lifting power. Indeed, it is by giving the depraved soul a new vision, a new ideal, through the work of the Holy Spirit, that Jesus redeems and saves it.

In view of their great influence upon the life and character, it is obvious that we need to watch our ideals lest they should mislead us and keep us from measuring up to the best of which we are capable. They are not unchanging—they may expand, or they may shrink. A shrunken ideal is the explanation of many a career that began nobly and ended in disappointment and perhaps in dishonor. Particularly does the minister need to be concerned about his ideal—the ultimate object at which he aims. In the early days of Methodism the ministerial ideal was, in the generality of cases, evangelical. Unless a preacher's ministry was fruitful it was counted a failure. The consuming passion of nearly every itinerant was to lead men to Christ, and to accomplish this end he brought into requisition every power and resource at his command. Whether he received other compensation or not, he felt that he must have souls for his hire. In his reading and studying, in his pastoral calls and sermon-making, in his prayers and preaching, this was the one mighty purpose that fired his heart and urged him on. Efficiency in this work was the one thing that he craved and sought. The result is well known. These men became mighty revivalists who dispensed the Word in awakening power. Under their stirring messages conviction seized the unsaved, and the slain of the Lord crowded to the "mourner's bench." When the cultured Dr. Coke, who had come to the United States dreading the coarseness and ignorance of these pioneer ministers, listened to their earnest appeals and witnessed their effect, he lost control of himself and excitedly exclaimed, "I can't preach a bit! I can't preach a bit!" Such were the sons of thunder that this burning passion to reach and save the lost developed and gave to American Methodism in the opening years of its history.

But to-day what is the prevalent ministerial ideal among us? Is it not educational, rather than evangelical? It so seems to us, both with reference to the preacher's aim for himself and his people. Is it not to be feared that many of us are more concerned to instruct and please those to whom we preach than we are to convict and save them?—that we are seeking self-culture, with a view to being able to preach learnedly and eloquently, rather than effectiveness in the noble work of influencing the unsaved to surrender to Christ? The effect of this change in ideals is only what might logically have been expected. Having ceased to aspire to be evangelists, a majority of our pastors have little revival power and skill. The note of urgency that characterized the preaching of former decades is too often lacking in their pulpit utterances. They are true and noble men and are doing a great work of a benevolent, moral, and reformatory kind, but is there not need among us of a more vigorous exercise of the spiritual functions of the Christian ministry, both in the salvation of sinners and in the perfecting of the saints? Do we not, as the commissioned ambassadors of Christ, need a new and clearer vision of what our high calling is? No matter what our intellectual attainments, do we not need so to present the truths of the gospel, that we can say with Paul: "And my speech and my preaching was not with the enticing words of men's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

We hear much talk in this day about a revival. The need of it is recognized as widespread and urgent. The small gain of the churches is exciting great concern, and rightly so. But if the much-discussed awakening is to come, here, in our humble judgment, is where it must begin. There must be a re-enthronement of the evangelical ideal. In all her operations, the Church must again lay the chief emphasis on spiritual things; she must pronounce as the most successful pastor not the man who brings up the finances, but the man who leads the largest number of people into the divine kingdom. Our theological schools must turn out not merely scholars, but equipped men with hearts on fire to do the work of evangelists. And, indeed, our preachers generally must feel not only "woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel," but woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel so as to bring men to repentance and salvation. Nor is this all. We must also have, as did the early Christian Church, a lay evangelism which enlists the rank and file of our membership in the supreme work of soul-winning. When Zion's heart is thus stirred and this has become her consuming aim and her united energies are thus directed, the day of spiritual dearth will soon pass, and from every quarter will come the glad news of glorious victories won for our Lord. It is only by sowing more bountifully to the Spirit, that we may hope to reap a larger spiritual harvest.

MR. CARNEGIE'S GREAT MEN.

As was stated in last week's Advocate, Mr. Andrew Carnegie has recently named the twenty men in the world's history who he thinks have done the most for humanity. We reproduce the list, which is as follows: Shakespeare, Morton, Jenner, Neilson, Lincoln, Burns, Gutenberg, Edison, Siemens, Bessemer, Mushet, Columbus, Watt, Bell, Armstrong, Franklin, Murdock, Hargreaves, Stephenson, and Symington. Is it not significant that Mr. Carnegie does not include in his list a single religious leader? Moses, the great lawgiver; Paul, the establisher of the early Church; Luther, the monk who shook the world, and Wesley, who infused new spiritual life into the decadent churches of the eighteenth century, are all left out. We have no disposition to criticize Mr. Carnegie severely. He is entitled to his opinion. But evidently from his list of great men he is a materialist. We have only this to say: A man with such ideals ought not to be allowed to give type to the Christian colleges of America.

THE METHODIST REVIEW.

The Methodist Review for January, 1912, is on our table. Both in its mechanical make-up and contents it measures up to its usual high standard. It opens with a luminous article—"The Social Teaching of the Old and New Testaments," from the pen of its scholarly editor, Dr. Gross Alexander. Following this are two strong and interesting discussions: "Modern Theology and the Preaching of the Gospel," by Prof. William Adams Brown, of the Union Theological Seminary of New York, and "Wesley's Relation to Theological Standards," by Chancellor Burwash, of Victoria University. Particularly appropriate is the paper entitled, "Dickens After a Hundred Years," in view of the fact that the centenary of the birth of the great novelist will be celebrated in the present year. Dr. Alexander rightly refers to Miss Bennett's contribution,

"The History of the World-wide Movement for the Liberation of Women," as an "informing" one. Indeed, this gifted woman writes with a rare and enviable brilliancy, and even though one may not agree with her, he cannot but be interested in her able handling of her subject. Of the other good things in this number of the Review, we cannot now write. The book reviews are especially instructive and suggestive. The Church has reason to be proud of this excellent periodical, which ranks with the best in the country. It deserves a wide circulation. To our pastors and people we say, Take the Review and read it.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. O. L. Savage has been heartily received by the Belzona charge.

United States Senator Percy, of Greenville, Miss., was in New Orleans last week.

Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, Miss., is planning to make a special canvass for the Advocate.

Rev. H. L. Norton has begun well at Purvis, Miss. His people gave him a splendid reception.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Sardis, Miss., has been unwell for some time, but has now about recovered and was in his pulpit last Sunday.

Miss Ella Bowden, a deaconess from San Antonio, Texas, spent a few days last week in New Orleans, the guest of Miss Ragland at St. Mark's Hall.

Rev. Hugh K. McKee reports that he is settled in his new field at Camden, Miss., and has made a good beginning. His congregation has given him a splendid reception.

The Sunday school officers and teachers were publicly installed last Sunday at both Louisiana Avenue and Parker Memorial churches. Appropriate addresses were made at both places.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, Sunday school field secretary for the Louisiana Conference, is spending several days in New Orleans, assisting the pastors in solving the problems of the Sunday school.

Among the other poundings that have been administered since Conference, we note that the McDonoghville charge remembered their pastor, A. J. Gearheard, last week in a substantial way.

A splendid reception was tendered to Rev. C. D. Atkinson, the new pastor at Crowley, and to Rev. Robert Wynn, the new presiding elder of the Lafayette District, at Crowley last Thursday night.

Rev. George Manotte, representative of the American Bible Society, and an effective local preacher of our Church at New Iberia, La., is in the city this week pressing the claims of his cause.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, who served Covington last year and located at the last session of the Louisiana Conference, has moved his family to New Iberia and is now engaged in the wagon making business.

Everything is moving on nicely at First Church, Columbus, Miss., and the pastor, Rev. H. G. Henderson, has all the interests of the church in hand, including the subscription list of the Advocate.

The Rev. J. E. Sampley begins his second year on the Harriston charge under favorable circumstances. He has been made the recipient of many useful gifts from the members of his church since Conference.

We regret to learn that Rev. W. A. Bowlin, of North Carrollton, Miss., has been on the sick list. He is alive to the best interests of the church and is supported by an active and loyal congregation.

Rev. John R. Ramsey, of Utica, Miss., announces that all his stewards are subscribers to the Advocate. He claims and is justly entitled to a place on the Honor Roll. Such a church should not want for results.

Rev. Dr. H. M. Hamill, superintendent of the Training Department of our Sunday school work, stopped off in Montgomery on his way to New Orleans and delivered a lecture in the Dexter Avenue Church.

According to the announcement sent out by Mrs. J. B. Cobb, secretary of the Foreign Department of the Woman's Missionary Society, the Woman's Missionary Council will meet in Washington, D. C., on April 11.

Rev. M. A. Burns, of Greenwood Springs, Miss., reports that he was much delayed in reaching his new charge after Conference on account of the torrents of rain, but has at last arrived "in part" and found a pleasant field.

Rev. Lastie N. Hoffpauir has been visiting relatives since Conference. He preached at Estherwood last Wednesday night, and after a short visit to his brother, Ellis Hoffpauir, left for his new work at Oak Grove, La.

Brother J. T. Otts sent us a list of twenty-four subscribers to the Advocate from Homer, La., and announced that he had hopes of getting more. We heartily thank Brother Otts for the interest he takes in the Conference organ.

Mrs. A. P. Holt has been chosen, as the president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of Crowley. Mrs. Holt is the wife of Attorney A. P. Holt, who is considered one of the most effective Sunday school superintendents in the State.

Sister T. S. Randle reports that her husband, the esteemed and loved Rev. Tom. Randle, is improved in health. Brother and Sister Randle have been visiting in Gibbstland, La., before departing for their temporary home in Brundage, Texas.

Mrs. Christian Keener, who is known as one of the most consecrated members of the Missionary Societies of New Orleans, has recently remembered each auxiliary in the city with a check for three dollars to be applied to local work.

We notice from a clipping from one of the Shreveport, La., papers that Queensborough, a suburb of Shreveport, plans to erect a $10,000 Methodist Church. This congregation is under the efficient pastorate of Rev. H. W. Jamieson.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick delighted the audience at Parker Memorial Church last Sunday evening with one of her excellent addresses on Sunday school work. The same audience was permitted to hear John R. Pepper, who as a Sunday school expert has few peers and no superiors.

We are under great obligations to Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Columbia, Miss., for gathering notes of the Sunday school Conference and in other ways assisting us in gathering data for our report. Rev. G. H. Greer, secretary of the Conference very kindly furnished us a typewritten copy of the resolutions adopted.

Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Columbia, Miss., occupied the pulpit at Carrollton Avenue Church last Sunday morning and delivered a strong sermon, using as his theme, "Our Relationship to God." At night, Dr. C. D. Bulla preached a practical sermon to a large audience. Both sermons were highly appreciated.

A great Sunday school rally was held last Sunday afternoon at First Church in which all the Sunday schools of our Church in the city participated. The Cambonne branch of the Carrollton Avenue Sunday school, of which Mr. L. Herman is superintendent, won the banner for having the largest percentage of the entire school present.

McDonoghville Church was delighted last Sunday with a strong sermon by Rev. W. H. Comer, of Lees Summit, Mo. Brother Comer is a personal friend of the assistant editor, being a member of the Conference from which he came, and this fact added to the pleasure of his visit to the city and to the Advocate office.

Rev. B. P. Jaco, presiding elder of the Winona District, spent last Sunday at Carrollton, Miss. The local paper from that place gives a brief but glowing account of the service, which, in spite of the inclemency of the weather, was largely attended. Brother Jaco, the report says, preached an excellent sermon, which was appreciated by all present.

We are in receipt of some excellent notes concerning the missionary work being done in the Lafayette District, which we expect to give a place in our columns next week. These notes are highly complimentary to the work being done, by Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, of Homer; Rev. R. E. Martin, of Lockport, and Rev. Martin Hebert, of New Iberia.

Among the many who called at the Advocate office during last week we cannot forget the presence of Dr. E. B. Chappell, of Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. G. S. Roberts, of Florida; Rev. R. P. Neblett, of North Mississippi, and Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss. These four came together, and with them came the good cheer they carry with them in their Sunday school work.

In ordering the Advocate to continue to come to his home at Boswell, Okla., Rev. H. Rogers says: "I have a great field out here—one of fine possibilities. Our church at this place is a large one, which pays a good salary. I am delighted with my people." Brother Rogers' North Mississippi friends will be pleased to know that he is so pleasantly situated in the State of his adoption.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, Conference evangelist of the North Alabama Conference, has been undergoing severe trials recently. The death of a grandchild and the serious illness of his wife have been sufficient cause for grief. May the strength of our Lord sustain him and his family at this time. Brother Bowen is doing a good work in Alabama, as is Rev. C. A. Bowen at Trinity Church, Birmingham.

Port Gibson Female College is opening its second term under favorable conditions, the attendance of boarding students being a little greater than it was before the holidays. In the report which the Board of Trustees of this institution made to the Mississippi Conference at its session at Meridian, Miss., in December, it was stated that thirty-three parishes and counties were represented in the student body, thus showing that the school has a wide and varied patronage.

The pastors of New Orleans met together last Monday morning at First Church and discussed the various problems of their respective congregations and of the entire city. All the pastors, but three, were present. They decided to pay $15 a month towards the salary of Miss Bell, a Protestant missionary working at the Charity Hospital. The various charitable and penal institutions of the city were assigned as fields for labor to the several preachers. The next session will consider as a special subject, "City Evangelism."

Rev. W. E. Thomas has been assigned to the pastorate of Second Church, New Orleans, and will have charge of the boys' work of this city. He comes directly from Kentucky, where he has been in the regular pastorate. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University, and was a volunteer for service in the foreign mission field, but on account of illness was forced to return to the States, after having reached the Far East. He is a well equipped man, and appears to be peculiarly adapted to the kind of work he has been called upon to undertake.

Rev. J. W. Sandell, of Magnolia, Miss., has issued a suggestive booklet entitled "The United States in Scripture." It numbers sixty-three pages, and was printed by the Tucker Printing House of Jackson, Miss. It is dedicated to "The Peacemakers." The price is 25 cents. The author, however, says: "I am giving this book to preachers, Confederate veterans, legislators, educators, statesmen, and others as I have opportunity. I will give it to any person who will call for it at my house at Magnolia, Miss., or order it by mail and send 4 cents to cover postage."

Rev. C. C. Selecman, who recently was transferred from the St. Louis to the Louisiana Conference, and who, jointly with Dr. Moore, was placed in charge of the First Church Mission of this city, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office one day recently. He is busy adjusting himself to his new field and forming plans for the work committed to his hands. Brother Selecman brought news of the marriage of Dr. J. E. Godbey and Miss Martha Virginia Dunnivant, which took place at the bride's home at Kirkwood, Mo., on Dec. 25. Dr. Godbey is pastor of the Christie Memorial Church of St. Louis, having been assigned to that charge at the late session of the St. Louis Conference.

In the issue of the New York Christian Advocate appearing on Dec. 23, Dr. Buckley, in writing of the Trinity M. E. Church, of Albany, N. Y., which recently paid off and burnt up a $10,000 mortgage note, recalls the fact that Bishop Galloway preached one of the sermons on the occasion of the dedication of its present imposing house of worship. He refers to the Bishop's discourse as "The preaching of that marvelous orator, Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which for the time obliterated the shadow of division." It is doubtful whether American Methodism has ever produced a more eloquent preacher than Charles Betts Galloway, and his reputation extended to all parts of the country and across the seas.

The laying of the corner-stone of the Noel Memorial Church, Shreveport, which took place on the afternoon of Sunday, Dec. 31, and to which brief reference was made in our issue of Jan. 4, was an occasion of much interest. Besides the pastor, Dr. Felix R. Hill, Jr., and President Felix R. Hill, of Centenary College, who was the master of ceremonies, Rev. R. J. Harp, Rev. Paul Brown, and Rev. S. J. Davies were present and took part in the exercises. This structure, when completed, is expected to cost about $65,000. Of this amount Mr. and Mrs. Jas. S. Noel have contributed $50,000. The church is named in the honor of their son, James S. Noel, Jr., who died at Mooringsport, La., April 15, 1901. Dr. Hill's address at the laying of the corner-stone, which was printed in part in the Shreveport Times, was exceedingly happy and appropriate. That journal further says: "In a cavity chisled out of the bottom of the stone and encased in a brass-bound square box, which fitted the cavity perfectly, were placed the following articles for the enlightenment of future generations: The Holy Bible, the Church Hymnal, the Church Ritual, a copy of the Shreveport Times, a copy of the Shreveport Journal, a copy of the Shreveport Caucasian, a copy of the Nashville Christian Advocate, a copy of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, the Epworth Era, a sketch and history of the church, with the names of the presiding elder, pastor, stewards, trustees, officers of the Sunday school, Epworth League and Missionary Society; the names of the architects and contractors, one United States coin and private papers placed therein by Mr. and Mrs. James S. Noel."

WALTER SHEPHERD BYRD was born March 6, 1907, and died Dec. 10, 1911 age 4 years, 9 months. On Saturday and Sunday, as Mr. and Mrs. Byrd were visiting Mrs. Byrd's parents, little Shepherd was taken seriously ill at 2 o'clock p.m., and died at 4 o'clock p.m. Papa! mamma! don't grieve! for, if we live as God would have us live, we will some day be with little Shepherd in heaven. His childish laughter has ceased to awaken an echo in the hearts of dear ones, but me thinks I can see little Shepherd watching and waiting for papa and mamma to come. His little body was placed in the Hurry Cemetery. May God's blessings rest on the broken hearted family.

HIS GRANDMOTHER.

Little JULIAN WYLGUL, the son of James Mayfield and Lillie Harrison Wylgul, was born at Nettleton, Miss., Oct. 30, 1908, and died after a lingering illness Dec. 27, 1911. Little Julian blessed the home of Brother and Sister Wylgul for a little more than three years. He was very bright and full of energy, and, being the only son and the only living child, his death is doubly hard on the parents. He is the grandchild of Brother K. M. Harrison, a superannuated member of the North Mississippi Conference, to whom the dear father in Israel was deeply attached. Little Julian has gone to the Father on high to await the coming of the loved ones left behind. This is a link in the providence of God to bind the hearts of the parents to himself, and to heaven. May the blessing of God lead all the loved ones daily to a more consecrated life, and may they finally meet precious little Julian in our Father's house above.

W. M. YOUNG.

The reaper has culled another flower for the Lord of Paradise in the person of little NELL MAXWELL. Her bright, winsome presence had only gladdened the hearts and home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Maxwell, three short years, when she was wanted in the garden of God. She made friends wherever she went and there are many sad hearts now, longing for a "touch of the vanished hand, and a sound of the voice that is still." She had been dedicated to God by her parents in baptism only a few months before and as the consecrating drops fell upon her brow, a look of such unearthly sweetness came across the little face that the eyes of the writer filled with tears, and the thought flashed across "She is too pure and good to linger here." How quickly we brushed the thought away, but how it comes back to us now! The home is sad now, but the little angel spirit is beckoning to father and mother to come. "A little child shall lead them," and she has only led the way to the pearly gates and is waiting for you to come.

MRS. JOHN W. CHISOLM.

LUCY McCALEB NESMITH, wife of Thomas B. Nesmith and youngest daughter of the late John B. and Annie McCaleb, was born Dec. 4, 1872 in Claiborne County, Miss., married June 19, 1910, and died Jan. 1, 1912. In her girlhood she connected herself with the Methodist Church at Martin and lived a consistent Christian life. Her greatest delight was in Sunday school and church work. As a sweet Christian character, she endeared herself to all who knew her. Her Christian experience was very bright. Just a few days before she left us, she said to her mother, "Heaven is so near, I can almost reach up and touch it." She was ready and willing to trust in Jesus as her Savior who had prepared a home on high for her. She had been ill for several months, but up to her last conscious moment she was cheerful and thoughtful for the comfort of those around her. A loving daughter, an affectionate sister, a devoted wife and a sincere friend. She has left many aching hearts but their comfort is, she is with Jesus. Our loved one has only passed from darkness into light.

A FRIEND.

Miss ANNABELLE, daughter of A. F. and C. P. Cochran, died at the home of her parents, Dec. 31, 1911, after a brief illness of three days. Miss Belle was born Dec. 13, 1886, at Cross Roads, George County, Miss. Early in life she joined the Methodist Church and was a devoted member of the same until her death. Hers was a life that counted for righteousness in her church and community. The naturalness of her nobility coupled with meekness and humility was admired by all her acquaintances. Loving hands laid her body to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Cross Roads on New Year's Day. Her spirit was borne by loving angels to the new Jerusalem, where, with the heavenly hosts, her soul is resting satisfied and doing the will of God, and waiting for the coming of loved ones left behind. Her going was a sad loss to the Cross Roads community, yet it is far richer by her having lived and wrought therein. The bereaved ones are comforted in knowing that her life was not in vain. Her funeral was conducted by her former pastor, G. G. Yeager, assisted by Rev. J. Y. Bowman, of Lucedale.

Rose Hill, Miss.:

We have built a new church here and are badly in debt. We will be very glad for any reader of the Advocate, or any one else, especially those who formerly lived here, or are interested in Rose Hill, to help us.

Verona, Miss.:

The good people of the Verona charge gave us a very cordial welcome back for a second year. After making one round, during which we were encouraged with pleasant greetings everywhere, Mrs. Langley and I went on a long-talked-of holiday visit. When we returned, some parties had managed to get the key and entered the house, leaving flour, meat, sugar, coffee, canned goods of every description, fresh fruits, and many other useful articles too numerous to mention. They gave us enough to supply us for weeks to come. It is just like these Verona folks to do such a thing. May God bless them! And when the present pastor shall go to another field, may they have one more worthy of such kindness.—A. W. Langley, P. C.

West Point, Miss.:

We had a delightful and profitable service on the evening of Dec. 31, beginning at 10:30 o'clock and ceasing at 12 o'clock. Not for a long time had the congregation here observed the going out of the old year, but this year presented a peculiarly inviting hour, it being Sunday. It was freely predicted that we would have fifteen or twenty present, but when the service began we had quite a goodly number, and before it had progressed far there were eighty-eight present. We sang old songs, talked about the goodness of God during the past year, had several prayers, meditated upon the meaning of the hour, then Rev. J. E. Thomas, the presiding elder, preached an appropriate sermon. It was a good hour and many of our people registered vows for better living during 1912. The work here is in good condition. Brother Dorsey did a great work during his term of service. He left the church well organized. We are suffering somewhat because of a lack of more ample quarters for our Sunday school. When times are a little better, we hope to build a new house, such as will be adequate for the work to be done. In the meantime we will push the work of the church in its various departments with all possible vigor. We are looking for a year of gracious results in the building up of the kingdom.—E. S. Lewis.

Jan. 6, 1912.

Keatchie, La.:

It might be of interest to many of those who have labored in years past and gone among the good people of the Keatchie charge to know that their labors have not come to naught. People are still going to heaven from this historic old charge and not a few are ripening for the glorious harvest of eternal life. As I go to and fro over this work, I find the marks of heroes, "the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose." Men all the way from those who have been chief shepherds down to myself have wrought in this field. Two of our comrades who fell asleep last year have been shepherds here for our Lord. So many good men and women have crossed over who have stood bravely in the Lord's army here that I feel like there is an immeasurable host watching my feeble efforts from the other side. May the Lord help us to lead aright! We are beginning our second year under most pleasant and favorable circumstances. It seems that everyone is willing to join with us in a forward spiritual movement, even seniors seem to catch the spirit of a forward movement. All except one of our appointments have "pounded" us since Conference. Logansport, with her fruit-cakes and money, and Keatchie, with her "linen shower," administered poundings substantial. Our people at Bell Bower are expending a hundred dollars or more on church repairs, and this church is one of the most loyal and enthusiastic of the whole work now. Let us all labor and pray for great progress and spiritual victory this year.—Henry T. Young.

Meridian, Miss.—7th Ave.:

For the fifth time I have been assigned to 7th Avenue, Meridian, and have been to one other place only since I have attempted to do pastoral work. In the fall of 1905 I attempted to preach here my first time; in 1906 helped in three meetings; in 1907 I was pastor; in 1908 I helped in two meetings; in 1909-10-11 I was pastor, and I have been assigned as pastor for 1912. "Well," says someone, "this possibly is the only place willing to endure you." It may be. Who knows? We had a real good time Christmas, especially on Christmas Day. We had religious services conducted by Dr. C. W. Campbell, of this city, in connection with a Christmas tree, without Santa Claus. Many were the tears of joy and penitence, and some cried aloud and shouted as the Spirit gave the message and fell upon the people. Also there were many glad hearts when the gifts were handed out, for all received a gift. On the same day the stewards met, and, with others, the pastor was remembered and his salary raised $50. A gracious watch-night service was held the last night of 1911. We enter the new year humbled because of failures and blunders of the past, but conscious of the fact that the blood covered them all, and with firm confidence in God, his Word and Spirit, we face the future, praying for and expecting victory along all lines. Will all who read these lines, who know God, pray for me that God's purpose for me here may be fully accomplished?—J. A. Wells, P. C.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

One of the many benevolent things being done by Mr. Jud. Reaves, of Mansfield, is to support a Sunday school missionary in the American Sunday school union at a salary of $800 per year. Who will do so much for the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South?

Rev. J. H. Morris has inaugurated a vigorous policy for his Sunday school at Mansfield, having had his workers in conference and mapped out a forward move, looking to more effective work and an enlarged membership. The Elementary, Adult, and Home Departments are receiving special attention.

Rev. John F. Foster's Bible Class at DeRidder played Santa Claus on a splendid scale on the recent Christmas occasion. After collecting through suitable committees, money, toys, and fruits, a committee composed of a bank president, a notary public and a mill foreman, distributed over $100 worth of presents to the poor children of DeRidder. Not only is this a fine example of what a Bible class may do, but incidentally suggests one way of binding the capitalists and laborers together in brotherly love.

During last year Brother H. R. Singleton built a neat little church at Oil City, in the heart of the Caddo oil field, and appointed Rev. T. J. Holladay, pastor. Being without suitable help, Brother Holladay has also superintended the Sunday school, and now boasts that he has the best Sunday school to be found in any similar field in the State and as good ground for his boast. Recently Mrs. Chas. Dean has been chosen Elementary superintendent and Mrs. J. C. Madison, Home Department superintendent and two Adult Bible classes organized.

FROM REV. W. D. BASS.

Sometimes I am asked by the preachers why I do not write oftener for the Advocate. Here I come with a word if you will give it space. I have been silent, but not inactive. I had some fine meetings last year in Tennessee and Mississippi. I wish to say to the brethren if a campaign for a genuine revival in the Church and the salvation of a multitude of precious souls is what they want, I am ready to serve them. I am open for some more dates in March. The good Lord never fails to bless my labors where the conditions are favorable. My faith in God (not myself) is such that I am willing to work with the understanding that only my traveling expenses are to be paid, if the meeting yields no results. But where the services are successful, the necessary requirement for my support will be made known in the proper way, and a reasonable effort made to raise the sum over and above the pastor's salary.

This "no-cure-no-pay" suggestion is not professional evangelism only in the sense that faith in God is professional. I have a side line that aids in the happiness and culture of Christian homes by means of which I hope to add something to my own support, and if I succeed in doing so, I will be in shape to often turn the public collection at the close of my meeting toward the pastor's support, especially in places where he is in need of more money.

My sole purpose and desire, as God is my judge, is to preach the gospel

"The Friendly Volunteers," for young men, and "The True Blue," for young ladies.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

God's goodness is a constant challenge to our philanthropy. As He has dealt kindly and generously with us, so must we also deal with our fellow-men. This we can do best by giving the best head and heart gifts to our fellow-men.

"Religion is friendship with God, a joyous fellowship with him who is the fountain of all beauty, the source of all light, the life of all life, the good of all virtue, and the crown of all excellence."

The kind of friend and teacher we should prize above all others is the one who keeps before us high ideals, not merely by his words, but by his character. Really, though, comradeship with Christ is the greatest inspiration to worthy living. As we come to know Christ, we come to discover that the highest and noblest things in our best friends and most inspiring teachers are but portions of Christ's own perfections. Young people are not really indifferent to the highest ideals of life; in their heart of hearts, they wish to live nobly, but they find it quite hard to live that way with the adverse currents of social and youth-time temptations setting constantly against them. Christ, the all comprehending, all satisfying friend, stands at the door of every life, particularly in the impressionable time of youth, and asks to be permitted to come in and abide in that life as its unfailing guide and friend. The Sunday school is just one constant, consecrated attempt to bring the youth of our land in this touch with this Christ.

and lead dying souls to Christ. I have made reference to the financial question because it and the gospel are inseparably connected. Pastors wishing to do so, may correspond with me intelligently relative to engaging my services, on conditions that are within the reach of all. Fraternally,

W. D. BASS.

A REMARKABLE HONOR.

In 1840, 7 members of Congress from North Carolina, 94 members of the State Legislature, and the Mayor and 42 leading citizens of Raleigh, N. C., united in presenting a petition to the Director of the Medical Bureau of the United States Navy, which closes with the following words: "While all can testify to the high reputation this medicine sustains in the respective counties we have the honor to represent, many of us know, by happy experience in our own families, its efficacy; therefore, we can with much propriety, and do with great pleasure, give Dr. Gray our names in support of his truly valuable ointment."

OIL HEATER

A woman often does not notice what a cold day it is so long as she is bustling around the house. But when she sits down to her sewing and mending, she soon feels chilly.

It is then she needs a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Its quick, glowing heat warms up a room in next to no time.

That is the beauty of a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. It is always ready for use; you can carry it wherever you please; and you light it only when you want it.

The Perfection Oil Heater is smokeless and odorless—a patented automatic device insures that. It is reliable, safe and economical—burns nine hours on one filling. Handsome, too—drums finished either in blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

A TRIAL GAVE INSTANT RELIEF. THE GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY NEVER DISAPPOINTS.

Being broken down in health, suffering with Kidney Trouble, despairing of ever being well again, I was advised by a friend to try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which gave me instant relief, and after using several bottles, I am now sound and well, and can safely recommend Swamp-Root to anyone suffering with back or kidney troubles.

I also had rheumatism, and I have had more relief from Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root than any other remedy. A sufficient trial will convince anybody of the merits of Swamp-Root.

Yours very truly,

LONGING FOR GOD.

On the surface there is a strong, a seemingly overwhelming flood of worldliness and irreligion, but there are indications of an undercurrent of unrest and longing for a definite faith and hope. Pastors tell us that in their closer interviews with those who do not attend the services they find a deep-seated longing for reality in spiritual things.

The heart demands reality; can not be satisfied with negatives. The actual world is real. It has definite objects, it has a defined spirit, but the more this definiteness is realized the less satisfactory it is. As years advance earlier hopes vanish; as we go out nearer to the unseen the more the soul demands solid ground for the feet.

The present mood demands very earnest presentation of the realities of our faith as found in the knowledge of God and Christ and Christian experience. Abstract doctrinal discussion in the pulpit has little effect, for it does not have that positive certainty the soul needs; it does not speak to the heart, it answers no longings. But in Christ the world is reconciled to God. Bring the soul into the presence of the Cross, and there is a response which otherwise is not obtained.—Presbyterian.

LATEST WONDER OF THE AGE.

Religious differences are gradually fading away. Christians are coming closer and closer together. The latest wonder is the breaking down of immersion sectarianism by Mahaffey's book on Baptism. It proves beyond a doubt, from the only Bible St. Paul ever owned, that sprinkling was the mode. Hundreds of thousands have read the book and now see the truth as plain as daylight. Single copy 16c; $1 a dozen, by Mahaffey Book Co., Clinton, S. C. Order a copy at once and let the good work go on.

WHAT WILL MAKE YOU GLAD.

When the years have slipped by and memory runs back over the path you have trod, you will be glad you stopped to speak to every friend you met, and left them all with a warmer feeling in their hearts because you did so.

And you will be glad that you were happy when doing the small, everyday things of life that you served the best you could in life's lowly round.

You will be glad that men have said all along your way: "I know I can trust him; he is true as steel."

You will be glad there have been some rainy days in your life. If there were no storms, the fountains would dry up, the sky would be filled with poisonous vapors, and life would cease.

You will be glad that you stopped long enough every day to read carefully, and with a prayer in your heart, some part of God's message to those he loves.

You will be glad that you shut your ears tight against the evil things men said about one another, and tried the best you could to stay the words winged with poison.

You will be glad you brought smiles to men, and not sorrow.

You will be glad that you have met all the hard things which have come to you with a hearty handshake, never dodging out of them, but turning them all to the best possible account.

ARE YOU A WOMAN?

Baltimore, Md.—Mrs. W. H. Ison, at 1419 East Madison street, writes, "For several years, I suffered, off and on, from female troubles, until finally I was taken down and could do nothing. The pains I experienced, I shall never forget. I lost weight till I was only skin and bones. I believe I would have been in my grave, if I had not tried Cardui. I shall praise it as long as I live." Many women, like Mrs. Ison, are weak and discouraged, on account of some painful ailment. Are you one of these sufferers? Cardui will help you. Try it to-day. Any druggist.

THINK OF THIS.

Some one asked a famous musician: "What is your favorite composition?" The answer was: "Whatever I am playing."

That is the feeling which will cause a musician to throw his whole soul into his playing, and a workman to do his very best work. We have to like our work, or we shall not do our level best at it.

It may be that our present task is disagreeable, but it is possible to take a deep pride in doing it thoroughly, and in leaving no rough odds and ends to worry others.

To slight the music one is playing is a poor preparation for further music. If one makes up his mind that, whatever be the composition, he will handle the keys like a master, many things are possible to him.

Promotion nowadays comes to few men unless they like the present job well enough to do their work as masters.—Onward.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

STILL TIME TO GET THE COM- PANION FOR $1.75.

The publishers of The Youth's Companion announce that they will accept yearly subscriptions at $1.75 up to the end of March. The new rate of $2.00 will go into effect promptly on April 1. The large number whose subscriptions run over into the early weeks of the year, as well as those who were unable to send in new subscriptions before Jan. 1, will have this opportunity to get The Companion for another fifty-two weeks at the old price. If you had no other periodical reading for your family, The Youth's Companion would be sufficient—sufficient for keen enjoyment by every one, young and old; sufficient to keep you posted on the important news and events of the day; sufficient to give you a mind richly stored with useful knowledge. The new departments have become indispensable features of the paper. The page devoted to the interests of boys in school and college always has an article of expert advice on athletics by some one who speaks with authority, whether it is football, baseball, skating, swimming, or other vigorous pastime. The page for girls suggests useful occupations in the community, without forgetting that girls like to be ornamental as well as useful. And there is the family page, which in the course of a year fills the place of a domestic encyclopedia. Subscribe now—to-day—while The Companion may yet be had for $1.75. New subscriptions received at the office of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, 512 Camp street; or you may write to The Youth's Companion, 144 Berkeley Street, Boston.

MIGHT BE DEAD TO-DAY.

Garden City, Kas.—In a letter from Mrs. James Hamner, of this city, she says, "I firmly believe that I would not be alive to-day if it were not for Cardul. I had been a sufferer from womanly troubles all my life, until I found that great remedy. I feel that I can't praise it too highly." Are you a woman, suffering from some of the troubles, to which a woman is peculiarly liable? If so, why not try Cardul, the woman's tonic? You can rely on Cardul. It is purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, and acts gently but surely, without bad after-effects. It will help you. Ask your druggist.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

ELIJAH, THE HEBREW PROTEST-ANT AND PATRIOT; THE STRENGTH OF REVOLT AGAINST WRONG.

(I Kings xviii, 17, 18; John ii, 13-17.)

Introductory.

Since the days of Samuel and the establishment of the monarchy with Saul as the first king, of which we studied in our lesson last Sunday, many important events have transpired in the history of the Hebrews. David has come to the throne, and for many years reigned in glorious splendor; then Solomon, the builder of the temple; then the division of the kingdom into a northern and a southern division, known henceforth as Israel and Judah.

In the northern kingdom in course of time Ahab ascends the throne of Israel (875 B. C.). This brings us to the study of the great contemporary prophet Elijah, who has been called "the divinely commissioned scourge of Ahab's dynasty."

Elijah.

We know almost nothing of the early life of this brave prophet of God who came from among the sojourners of Gilead. I Kings xvii, tells of some interesting episodes in the life of the prophet. His public career presents to us the three crises in his life; the contest on Mount Carmel (I Kings xviii,) between the priests of Baal and Jehovah, the still small voice and its encouraging message to the disheartened prophet who has fled to Mount Horeb (see I Kings xix), and, lastly, the fearless accusation of Ahab the king for the murder of Naboth (see I Kings xxi.)

No more interesting figure comes to view in the Old Testament than this son of the desert with his unshorn locks and his rough mantle of camel's hair. He lives in the caves and desert places, appears in the city only to deliver the message of Jehovah and be gone. "He comes from the hills of Gilead as the champion and prophet of Jehovah in the dark days of Israel's apostasy. He comes to bear witness to the truths that ought never to have been denied in Israel. Like every true reformer, he takes his stand upon old principles. He is the personified conscience of the nation. He comes, a prophet of heroic mold, to witness by deeds rather than by words."

Some Modern Applications.

Elijah was the voice of God crying against certain social and ethical wrongs. The evils of our day are not the same as those of which the nation was guilty in the time of Ahab. But because our wrongs are not identical does not in any sense mean that they are less flagrant or less common. If Elijah were here, his voice would not be quiet; he would emerge from his desert solitude to strike at some of our social evils. What would they be? Let us glance rapidly at a few concerning which we need some prophet to warn us.

1. Domestic unfaithfulness. When the latest census reports tell us that one out of every twelve marriages terminates in a divorce, the American people may well ponder the causes of such domestic infelicity. The home is the very center of our life. It is the unit around which humanity gathers. When the family life becomes loose and immoral, the very pillar of our civilization is shaken. Our young people need to know the sacredness of the marriage bond and the sense of a divine sanction which rests upon the union of two hearts in holy love. The laxness of our family ties is nothing short of a national disgrace. Against this fundamental form of social instability and thoughtless sin against God we must be fearless in our attitude.

2. A worldly Sabbath. The God who made us set apart one day in seven as a day upon which our usual tasks were to be laid aside and we were to give ourselves over to worship and rest. The chief credential which the Sabbath has is our need of it. No civilization can stand which does not provide a time for the contemplation of the divine and the doing of deeds of mercy. We have drifted very far from our old standards. Perhaps our Puritan forefathers were a bit too strict and made the Sabbath an unendurable day, but better their severity than our laxity in regard to this institution of God. In many cities stores keep open all day Sunday, theaters and saloons do a thriving business, and every money-making device is run "wide open," oftentimes contrary to the law on the statute books. The Sunday newspaper and the Sunday automobile trip is keeping many men and women away from the house of God. No plea like this, "It is the only day I have to rest in," satisfies God. He never intended for a man to work so hard that he must take Sunday in which to lounge about. Besides, there is no rest comparable to the rest of doing one's duty. "There is no rest for the wicked." What is the attitude of our Christian young people to this growing evil of our day?

3. Intemperance. Here we touch one of the most ancient and bitter foes of human society. I read the following illustration in a recent number of the Sunday School Times: "Wine not only defiles but it destroys. Not long ago a magazine argued in favor of alcohol: 'Drinking people have led the progress of humanity. The Jews drank and gave us monotheism. The Greeks drank and gave us art and literature. The Romans drank and gave us law. What have the teetotal race done for us?' The New Voice answered: 'The Jews drank, but where are they to-day? Total abstainers are contributing toward a fund to provide a place where they may live in safety. The Greeks drank, but where are they? Their descendants sell total abstainers peanuts on our streets. The Romans drank, but where are they now? Their posterity grind hand organs about our streets or entertain the crowd with their pet monkeys.'"

The Methodist Church has never taken but one attitude toward the whiskey problem. Do all of our young people share in this attitude of relentless enmity against this thrice-cursed demon? Or do we fear to speak out because forsooth "good men differ in their views on temperance?" Are there any good men in favor of whiskey as a beverage? Upon what, pray, do they base their claim to goodness?—Prof. Thos. Carter, in Epworth Era.

Gentlemen:

We purchased one of your Club Pianos and are well pleased with it. Would not take anything for it. All who have heard it think it to be one of the grandest they ever heard. While we were paying for it my husband died. You gave us a life insurance clause. We were still owing $125 which was nicely settled, and our note was returned to us marked paid.

We thank you very much for your kindness and prompt attention, which you have shown to us. Any one who wants the best piano made should buy one of these. They will be pleased with it and will be treated nicely, as we were. We appreciate your kindness very much.

Yours truly,

MRS. J. A. BRAMLETT.

Gentlemen:

After my contract for one of the Ludden & Bates Club pianos had been running about fourteen months, my husband died. The firm being advised of the fact, within a few weeks after, sent me a receipt in full for balance due on piano. All of which goes to prove that they keep good faith with their patrons in regard to their free insurance agreement.

I can heartily recommend them as being in every way reliable.

Very truly,

Editorial

The best cure for doubt is doing. The man who keeps busy in the Master's service is seldom troubled with skeptical thoughts.

"Willingness to know the truth about oneself is the mark of a brave character; eagerness to hear opinions about oneself is the mark of a weak character."

We often hear used the expression, "a bird's-eye view," but the New York Independent tells of a visitor who went down in the subway of the great American metropolis and returned by the same route, boasting that he had had "a worm's-eye" view of the city. This phrase is quite suggestive. There are persons who live upon a plane so low and base that a "worm's-eye view" of things is about the only one possible to them. The state of a man's heart and his environment have much to do with how he looks at the world and its affairs. One who is himself mean and ignoble is incapable of forming generous and high-minded estimates of his fellow-men.

We publish in this issue of the Advocate an interesting sermon from Dr. J. H. Jowett, the accomplished pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City, who is regarded as one of the most brilliant and successful preachers in the English-speaking world. We desire to call attention to the simplicity and evangelical fervor of this message, spoken to one of the wealthiest congregations in the United States. It contains no display of rhetoric, no exhibition of learning, no apparent effort of any kind upon the part of the speaker to impress the audience with his own greatness. The truth is, there is no preaching so popular as that which presents the old and imperishable truths of the gospel in earnest words that are easily understood. The noble art of doing this is an acquirement well worth striving for.

Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" is perhaps unorthodox at some points, but notwithstanding it is a remarkably vigorous and suggestive volume which is likely to be read for many decades to come. Particularly striking is the chapter on "Degeneration," which sets forth with great impressiveness the important truth that disuse and deterioration go hand in hand; that if an organ or faculty is not exercised it must inevitably weaken and ultimately atrophy. Thus, Maurice Maeterlinck is quoted as having said recently: "So far as I am concerned, I don't understand music; I consider it quite unnecessary noise." It is probable that he has neglected to cultivate a taste for it, and perhaps his ancestors before him did the same thing. Is there not in this and similar cases a lesson that we need to lay to heart? If we fail to exercise faithfully the spiritual faculties of the soul, there is no escape from this inexorable law of degeneration. If we would mount up as on eagle's wings, we must wait assiduously on the Lord.

AN INTERESTING PROPHECY.

That we are living in a transitional period must be manifest to every careful observer. This is true both concerning State and Church. Everywhere throughout the world the governmental trend seems to be toward democracy and socialism. Scarcely anything more remarkable could happen among the nations of the earth than the probable overthrow of the Chinese monarchy and the erection upon its ruins of a republic. Even in Great Britain, which has long been regarded as the finest example of a stable government in the world, striking changes are going on. The House of Lords has recently undergone great modification, and the government is steadily becoming more paternalistic. The same tendency is clearly discernible in the United States and in nearly all of the other countries. What will result from this trend of things is beyond the power of the human mind to foresee. Whether good or evil will come of it, time alone can tell.

In our judgment, the most impressive phenomenon of the religious world at this time is the disposition of the churches to draw closer together and co-operate or unite. While we are not an advocate of the organic union of the various Protestant bodies, we cannot help but see that the indications point to the existence of fewer religious denominations in the future than we have at present. In a recent issue of Zion's Herald, under the caption "The Permanent Church," this subject was discussed by the editor of that periodical in a most interesting manner. Without sanctioning all of his conclusions, we quote for the benefit of our readers what he has to say on this most important question:

"The church of Jesus Christ has never had smooth sailing nor an easy time. How can it have? Its mission is to fight and conquer sin. That means a bloodless war to the finish.

"The Son of God goes forth to war."

"The church to-day is under fire. Its most serious enemies are its own members. The threatening evil is within. The weak spot is the inconsistency and indifference of the people who make up the church. If the entire church membership were downright religious and true followers of the Master, sin of every kind and name would be ashamed of itself, and open defiance of gospel truth and the shameless winking at the laws of good society would cease to be, or hide away from the gaze of men.

"Thank God, the church is not wholly unchristian! Some of the best people the world has ever known are in the church of to-day, and they are, by wise zeal and pure lives and intelligent endeavor, helping on the certain triumph of love and truth. The church is not spent or dying. It is much alive, and about to take on new forms of life for a more vigorous and winning campaign. God has his own plan, and we are finding out the way of the Lord. Much is being said and written about organic union; some of it is uncanny and unnecessary and impossible. Organic union is not fundamental to the best work and the greatest achievements. Denominational lines are less and less distinct, and ministers and people are standing together in love and service. What does this mean? As we see it, it means this: The church of the future, for the glory of God and for the well-being of humanity, will live and operate in three great organizations.

"First, the Church of Rome is to be reformed and modernized, but not destroyed. It is needed, for it fills a place in the economy of Christian worship and service. The next Pope will bring to pass great things; or, perhaps better, great changes are inevitable in spite of the Pope. The newer Romish Church is abandoning the idea of temporal power. The younger blood sees the futility of it. It is a providential compulsion to a nobler end. When Catholicism becomes purely a spiritual power, as she is fast becoming, she may go back to France and Italy and Portugal and Spain and Austria and become a mighty factor in the redemption of the world. That day is coming. That will be one branch of the permanent and triumphant church.

"Protestantism will be divided into two great bodies. One will be the class with an episcopal head, with ornate and ritualistic worship. There are people who get near to God in that way, and they are splendid people, too. All who love such forms and find help in that way of doing things will go into that communion. It will be an ever-increasing church and potential for good.

"The rest of Protestantism will come together in one fellowship and one faith and one work. Its worship will be dignified, but simple. Its spirit will be intense and fervent. People will go to that church to get a message. The sermon and the preacher will be the main features of the service. The preacher, therefore, will have to give the real message and deliver it well. Here we shall have a great and mighty and conquering evangelical force—the evangelism that saves the whole man. This is the great objective church which looms up in the to-morrow, the permanent church of Jesus Christ in its three-fold form and worship and work—a faith, a spirit, a deed. Speed on, O glorious day, for the glory of Christ and the triumph of the good!"

A WORTHY SENTIMENT FITTINGLY RECOGNIZED.

The following resolution was introduced in the Mississippi Legislature a few days since by Representative E. D. Cavett, of Noxubee County, and was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

"Whereas, we have read with great pleasure the following remark of the devoted mother of our esteemed governor, Hon. Earl Brewer, who, when asked if the day that her son was inaugurated governor of the State of Mississippi was not the happiest day of her life, replied, 'I was just as happy when my boys joined the church;' therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the above expression be inscribed on our journal as an example to the mothers of our State, and to show our appreciation of this splendid sentiment."

NO ROOM FOR CHRIST.

(A Christmas sermon preached in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City by Dr. J. H. Jowett.)

"There was no room in the inn."—Luke 2:7.

No room! Crowded out! I am going to take the liberty of using this incident in connection with our Master's birth as a symbol of a very frequent and continued tragedy in our relations with Christ to-day. Our Master is frequently crowded out. He has been excluded from the central place; He has been hustled into the yard; no room has been found for Him in the inn; He has been crowded out, and I am going further to suggest that the only place in which the Lord of Glory can find an inn to-day is in the human soul—the secret, inner room of the personal life. We sometimes sing that most tender and gracious hymn:

"O, make our hearts Thy dwelling place."

Well, He is waiting to do it. He is willing to do it.

O, make our hearts Thine inn! But when He moves toward us He frequently finds the inn already thronged and there is no room for Him, and He is relegated to the cold of the outer courts; He is crowded out.

Now, my brethren, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory, would have His home in human hearts, in the human soul. What do we offer Him in place of what He seeks? In place of the inn in which He could dwell what do we offer Him?

First of all, we build him stately material temples. We spend boundless treasure upon their erection. Art joins hands with architecture, and the material thing becomes a poem, a dream. Lily work crowns majestic pillars, and subdued lines of exquisite light and tender color add their graces to the finished pile. And when we have it all ready we turn our eyes toward heaven, and say: "Here is an inn for Thee, O man of Nazareth, King of Glory, here is a house that I have built for Thee." And there comes back the reply: "The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands," and there comes back the reply: "Where is the place of my rest, saith the Lord. I dwell in the high and holy place with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit."

That is to say, He seeks the inn of the soul, and we offer Him a manger of stone. He is crowded out.

Or, we build Him stately homes of stately ritual. We spend infinite pains upon picturesque ceremonial; we devise reverent and dignified movement; we engage the ministry to ennobling music for the expression of our praise and swing the censer for the expression of our prayers. Or, perhaps, we are opposed to ritual and we discard the color and dismiss the glow and we banish the elaborate and the ornate, and we will have no flowers, and our ceremony shall be reduced to posture and our music shall be unostentatious and simple; everything shall be plain and prosaic. But whether it be Catholic profusion or Quaker simplicity, bewitchingly pretty or severely plain, a glorious glittering ritual or a ritual devoid of fascination, we turn to the Lord and say: "Here is a house that we have built for Thee, O Lord. Take up Thine abode in the dwelling we have provided for Thee," and there comes the reply: "My son, give me thine heart."

He seeks the inn of the soul and we offer Him a ritualistic manger. There is no room in the inn. He is crowded out. There are people who are busy building our Lord an impressive house of a stately creed. It is solid enough; solid and comprehensive.

Every item in the creed is sharp and well defined and mortised one to another with passionate zeal and intense devotion, and we are proud of its constituents and our creed is all the more beautiful because it is hallowed with age. The weather stains and centuries only add to its significance and glory, and there our creed stands, venerable, majestic, indestructible, and we say: "Here is a creedal house for Thee, O Lord, and I am jealous for the honor of Thy house. I will contend earnestly for every stone in it. Here is a home, forever, O Lord; a temple of my creating," and I hear Him say, as He said before, when people spoke like that: "When the Son of Man cometh again, shall He find faith?" He does not want our belief; He wants our faith. Belief is attachment to a statement; faith is devotion to a person. Belief is mental assent to a proposition; faith is consent to will, to an authority.

Will He find faith? He asks for the inn of personal faith and I offer Him the manger of mental creed. He wants my soul, not my words. He wants the inn of the soul and I offer Him the manger of a big creed, and there is no room in the inn; He is crowded out, and so I say we are very busy offering these substitutes for the dwelling place He seeks, and if these are all the things we offer Him then we can quietly say as was said before: "The Son of Man hath not where to lay His head."

Now, come a little nearer to what I want to offer you. Let me quote from the apostle Paul, "Know ye not that ye are a temple?" Or, if I may withdraw the apostolic word and put in the words of my text: "Know ye not that ye are the inn?" Is there room for him? That is the house He seeks. That is the home in which He would make his abode.

I want to speak just a word to the younger people. I want to look inside that inn, the inn of the personal soul, because it has many, many rooms, housing many varying interests, and it is possible at this Christmas time we may exclude our Lord after all. Therefore I want you to walk with me through two or three rooms of the soul in which our Lord would like to dwell.

There is the first room; the room of the mind. It is the realm of understanding. A multitude of thoughts crowd its busy floors day and night. The room of the mind is crowded with thinking. Now listen (I quote from the word): "God is not in all his thoughts." Crowded out!

Now enter into another room, the room of desire, where love lives and sings and reigns and the room where love droops and sickens and sometimes dies. It is the room where impulse is born, where secret desire moves shyly and rarely shows her face at the window, the realm of emotions, and the Lord wants a place in the secret chamber of impulse, affection and desire. Is there room for Him?

Now take another room, the chamber of imagination, the bright chamber of ideals, visions, fancies and dreams. Prospect window is this room, and also the radiant window of hope. It is here we look out on the morrow, and it is here we have our wishes and visions, purposes and plans. It is the observatory of the soul, and our Lord delights to be in that chamber of ideal and purpose and vision and dream. Is there room for Him?

I beg you come into another of this many-roomed inn. That is the chamber of mirth. It is here that the genius of merriment dwells, and here you will find the bright presence of wit and humor. Here you will hear quip and jest and jollity. It is here that bridal joy is found. Will He turn in here? I warrant He will. Is there room for Him, or is He crowded out?

And here is the recreation room, the room of the soul in the hours of leisure and where it plays. Do we let Him in there? Has he any voice, any veto, in the matter and the manner of our play, or is there no room?

I have thought it well for the sake of my younger hearers to go through these rooms of the soul to make it plain that the personal incident that took place at our Lord's birth can be repeated all along the way, and that whereas to-day He is seeking all the rooms in that inn of my soul they may be so thronged that there is no room for Him and He is crowded out.

I come to this further point. Why do we shut Him out? It will be an exceedingly fruitful and impressive hour if we spend even a short time during this Christmastide in answering this question: Why don't we take Him into the inn? Well there are many reasons, but I will select perhaps the three most common. First of all we shut Him out because we should not like Him to see all there is there. Not that He does not see it, but we don't care to consciously meet Him there. It would trouble us. It would disturb us to meet our Lord in any of the rooms I have mentioned. The only way in which some people can find comparative ease is by forgetting Him.

But he sometimes does get in for a moment. There is not a man or woman who has not had Him in for a moment. If you have not opened the door, you have heard Him knocking. Some little incident has happened, and suddenly a thought of the Christ has come into one of the chambers of your inn and you have been thrown into confusion. You cannot keep Him away. Many a business man hears the knocking at the funeral of a friend; many a mind looks into the unseen when he stands at the open grave. He hears the knocking. We shut Him out because we do not care to have Him in.

Another reason is that we are so taken up by cares that we are careless about Him. We are so full of worry that we have no time to think about Him. That is what He said: "The cares of this world choke the Word." So many cares that there is no room for Christ. So many worries there is no time to entertain the Lord. And yet His promise is waiting: "Cast all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

Again we exclude our Lord from the inn by our sensational life. I mean that we can become so absorbed in the mere sensation of living that the things that really matter lie as if they were dead. We are so engaged with mere externals that we exclude Him upon whom the peace and joy and blessedness of life depends.

I wonder if you see why I have been preparing this sermon this week? If ever a preacher prepared a sermon for himself this is for me as well as for you. My brethren, I fear a Christmastide with Christ crowded out. Suppose we let Him in. What then? I had better give you His own words. He says: "I am come that ye might have life." I am come that ye may have vitality, buoyancy, everything significant of the full and buoyant life. I do not come to disturb your pleasure, to kill your joy; I am come that ye might have life.

Let Him in then. Let Him into your chamber of mirth and see what He will do. Take Him into your hearts and you will find all through your amusements there will be wonderful light and depth of joy that will go right into your new year, for in this matter it is possible for us to have Christmas all the year round.—Brooklyn Eagle.

IS THERE A HIGHER LAW?

(Reprinted from The Outlook of December 23 by courtesy of its Editors.)

A correspondent puts with ability the case against Cardinal Gibbons in a letter from which we make the following extract:

"The Outlook informs us that Cardinal Gibbons holds that the limits of civil and ecclesiastical government are 'well defined; that within its domain the civil government, in all matters which do not violate the moral law, is supreme; that within its sphere the Church is supreme.'"

"Does not this rule exclude the people from jurisdiction over matters and things that are violations of the moral law? Is not this rule a bold and audacious challenge of the sovereignty of the American people as enshrined in our Declaration of Independence? a bold and audacious denial of the right of 'the people' to form government on 'such principles' as shall seem best to them—the people, not popes, or bishops, or kings? Is not this rule a denial of the right to thus build our government? Acting under this sovereignty, have not the people written it in our Federal and State Constitutions? Is it not shining there like fixed stars in the dome of our republican government—that these Constitutions and the enactments thereunder are the 'supreme law of the land?' Is there room still above this ultimate law for a law made in the Vatican?"

This writer thus raises squarely the issue: Is there any higher law than the law which Congress makes and the Constitutions which the people make? To that question The Outlook answers with a vigorous Yes! There is a higher law. And the country needs nothing more than the affirmation of the sovereignty of that law by press and pulpit, by teacher in the school, parent in the family, statesman on the platform.

There is a law of gravitation, the law that all bodies are drawn together in a certain well-defined ratio. This gravitation is the force which binds the universe together. Man did not make it. Man cannot unmake it. He can violate it and suffer the consequences. Or he can obey it and apply it and gain the advantages of it. But it is a law higher than any he can make.

There are certain laws of social gravitation which bind human society together. Man did not make them; man cannot unmake them. He can violate them and suffer the consequences. He can obey them and apply them to the constant changes of human society and get the advantages of obedience. But they are laws higher than any he can make.

Congress cannot make laws. All it can do is to discover and apply laws already existing. There are higher laws—higher than Congressional statutes or Constitutions of State or Nation.

The supreme authority does not rest in the people. The majority are not God. Votes of a majority are only a convenient way of finding out what are the laws of the social order and how they should be applied. Majority rule means, not that the majority are omniscient or should be omnipotent, but that the common people are better guides to the discovery of the laws of the social order than any oligarchy, whether ecclesiastical or hierarchical. But whenever, if ever, the majority thinks itself the final authority, a foundation is laid for a despotism quite as unendurable as that of any autocrat that ever lived.

Mobocracy is worse than autocracy; and mobocracy is simply the majority acting without regard to any other law than that of its own self-will.

A good compendium of the moral law is contained in an ancient code with which our readers are familiar. In this code are the four following fundamental laws of the social order:

Thou shalt not kill.

Thou shalt not commit adultery.

Thou shalt not steal.

Thou shalt not bear false witness.

There are more mobs and murders in the United States than in any other civilized country except perhaps Russia. Murder is adopted as a scientific profession by hired assassins in a so-called labor war. The recklessness of life is astonishing. More men were killed in one year on our railways than in the Russian army in the battle of Mukden, the greatest battle of modern times. Our factories and mines are robbing children of their childhood and women of their womanhood. We are grinding up women and children to make cheap goods—an expensive cheapness.

Why?

Because we do not believe in a higher law. Because the mob thinks it may burn a defenseless Negro if it is sure that a jury will not convict the murderers; because murderers masquerading as workmen think murder is right if they can escape the detectives; because there are railway officials who think it lawful to refuse to employ safety appliances on their railways, provided they can evade or overturn the Congress-made law; because there are employers who think it lawful to destroy the lives of women and children if there is no law on the statute-books of the State to prohibit this form of killing.

In the decade ending in 1906 divorces in the United States were granted at the rate of two hundred every court day in the year. Adultery is a profit-making trade in our great cities—sometimes a slave trade.

Why?

Because there are men and women who think there is no law against the unrestrained indulgence in their passions provided a Reno law permits it; and other men and women who think there is no law against more flagrant self-indulgence if statutes do not prohibit it, policemen do not prevent it, and society disregards it.

There are men, once eminent financiers, who are to-day serving their terms in State prisons for robbing the men and women who trusted them; and others who gamble in breadstuffs while the children in the tenements cry for bread; and others who sell worthless stocks to the unwary and pick their pockets with a valueless certificate; and others who sell poisonous adulterations in lieu of health-giving food and curative medicines.

Why?

Because the lawyers the financiers employed were not shrewd enough to show them how they could rob with impunity; and the lawmakers can find no way to make gambling with breadstuffs illegal; and selling worthless stocks to unwary purchasers is not legal fraud; and the discovery of adulteration is difficult. And these plunderers of society know of no law which they need obey if they are shrewd enough to evade the man-made laws. They do not know that there is a higher law which no man can evade.

The "yellow press" is worse in America than in any other country, except perhaps Japan.

Why?

Because there are journalists who would scorn to sell rotten fruit yet who do not hesitate to sell rotten gossip; and men who would never feed their bodies with gatherings from the gutter yet who do not hesitate to feed their minds with it. They do not know that there is a law, Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

There is a law higher than any Congress can make; an authority higher than any majorities can confer. The will of the majority is not the supreme law. When the will of the lawmaker comes in conflict with this higher law, loyalty demands disobedience to the lower law. It was loyalty which made Daniel disobey the Court-made law and go to the lion's den. It was loyalty which made the Protestants disobey the Church-made law in Spain and go to the stake. * * *

This higher law the Church interprets for some; the Bible interprets for others; the conscience interprets for still others. The Outlook welcomes all three interpreters, and counts no one of them infallible. We welcome them even when we think their interpretation wrong; because the country needs nothing more urgently, nothing perhaps so urgently, as faith in the Higher Law—faith that legislatures and congresses and popular majorities can never make a moral law; it can only discover and apply the laws that are already made. We do not believe in the infallibility of either the Roman, the Greek, the Anglican, or the Protestant Church; but we welcome the cooperation of all four in the endeavor to teach the American people that there is a higher law than any which majorities can enact, and so to inspire democracy with the spirit of loyalty and of self-restraint.

REMINISCENT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

No. 4.

After a few weeks in the Corinth hospital my patients were well able to travel. Some returned to their commands, and others to their homes on furlough. Dr. Nesbit, at Iuka, being informed of this, wrote me to report to Iuka for further duty. I went at once, and on my arrival the Doctor said: "I think we had better hold on to you, as you have had some experience in hospital work. I have decided that you are the man to take charge of our hospital books." Besides keeping the register, it was the clerk's duty to make out all requisitions for rations, medicines, and everything else necessary to be had. This required close attention and considerable work, and yet, as a Paddy would say, it was a "nice clane job." It was far preferable to nursing the sick.

There I sat at a well-furnished table with the hospital physicians. In addition to our government allowance, we had as many extras as we were willing to pay for. There was no more toney nor independent character than a doctor in government employ. He was known by his dress, and his business being to attend the sick, the guards passed him without question. The army negro was next to the doctor in point of liberty, and he was known by his color and was allowed to pass without question.

The capacity of the Iuka hospital was limited, but substitutes for beds were brought into requisition until several hundred were accommodated. Almost every disease that flesh is heir to could be found there. Cholera, leprosy and yellow fever were about the only exceptions. One squad of soldiers had marched from some point in Texas; a number had measles on the way, and from exposure the death rate was wonderful.

In the month of May, I believe, Huntsville, Ala., fell into the possession of the Federals, and the Iuka hospital was moved immediately to Columbus, Miss. As our train rolled into Columbus, Dr. Oliver, of Hernando, who was seated with me, clapped his hand on my knee, and exclaimed: "My young friend, white people live in this town!" He was right. Of course, he did not mean that they were all white as to color, for the blacks were the more numerous.

The Doctor was proud of his State people in Columbus, who were noted for their thorough culture, refinement and hospitality. After our arrival, a large new hotel building was occupied and used as a hospital, its capacity being 800, and it soon filled up with sick and wounded. It was astonishing and interesting to know the large numbers of the convalescents who were taken from the hospitals by citizens to private homes. They were visited daily by the Columbus ladies, and their condition was closely observed. Some families took as high as five or six. From two to six, as a rule, were taken and kept until they were sufficiently recovered to report for duty.

My health failed, and I was excused from duty for about two weeks. Rev. G. T. Stainback, D.D., pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, took me to his house, where I was treated with all the tenderness and kindness possible. While there, Brother Gaston, one of Dr. Stainback's members, living six miles in the country, took me to his house. There I recuperated rapidly, and at the close of a week's time I returned to my office in the hospital. On my return I was told that the Rev. Philip Neely, a noted Methodist divine, would preach in the Methodist Church the next day (Sunday) at 11 o'clock. I was anxious to go, but had no right to go without permission from the post surgeon, Dr. Prim. He ranked as a brigadier general, and appeared very dignified and haughty. Some of the boys said they would as soon tackle a circular-saw as to approach Dr. Prim. I was undecided until the second bell rang, when I quietly closed my door and went to preaching.

Church News

By Rev. A. J. Gearheard.

Smith & Lamar, Agents of the M. E. Church, South, have completed arrangements to open a branch office in Richmond, Va.

The reform Church of America has recently published its 1912 year-book in which it claims 65,675 families as its immediate field.

The Y. M. C. A. will, from now on, attempt to do Association work on board the American warships. This should be a fruitful field for service.

The Holston Conference held 474 revival meetings last year, reported 12,983 conversions and 7,778 accessions to the Church. This is getting results worth reporting.

The net gain of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 1911 was 32,116, which brings its total membership up to 3,518,099. It gained 52,098 scholars in the Sunday school, but lost 20,786 members from the Epworth League.

The American Bible Society issued 3,231,722 volumes of the Scriptures during the past year. It publishes the Bible in more than 100 languages and sells the Gospels at 2c per copy, the New Testament at 5c per copy and the Bible at 17c per copy.

A Methodist Mission will soon be in operation in Jerusalem. The late Bishop Newman and wife gave a building valued at $20,000 and an endowment of $63,000 for its maintenance. It appears as if the Mohammedans will soon lose their strong grip on the Holy City.

During the year the Moravians gave an average of $10 per member to the cause of missions. There are but 40,000 members of the Moravian Church, but it is setting an example to the larger churches which, if followed, would mean the rapid evangelization of the world.

The program for the second annual Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, which meets in Toronto, Canada, during this week, is strong in everything that makes for a great Council. Drs. Smith, Chappell and Hamill of the M. E. Church, South, are among the speakers.

Dr. John T. Gracey, founder and president since its organization of the International Missionary Union, died at Clifton Springs, New York, Jan. 5. He began his ministry in the M. E. Church, South, in 1850 and served two years. He then joined the M. E. Church and continued in its ministry until his death. He ranked as one of the strongest forces in the missionary world.

The Nez Perce Indians, living near Ft. Lapwai, Idaho, are said to be the most advanced of all the tribes in America. Recently a number of them requested that they be received into the Southern Methodist Church from the Presbyterian Church, of which they were members. The class has grown rapidly and now numbers 70.

Sunday, February 4, is named as Ecumenical service day and all Methodist pastors are requested to read to their congregations the message addressed to Methodists of all the world from the Ecumenical Conference recently held in Toronto, Canada. Copies of this address have been mailed, as near as possible, to all pastors in each branch of Methodism.

The coming of Mr. Ballington Booth to New Orleans is of more than ordinary importance. She is now on her trip through the Southern States inspecting prisons and looking to the gaining of reform legislation for the benefit of prisoners' families. The Hope Halls, of which she is the dominant spirit, one of which is in Louisiana, has graduated 8,000 men since their erection.

A new feature in Institutional Church methods is the lunch club for business women. Clubs are organized, members paying 25c per month dues, and lunches are prepared for the members at a rate somewhat cheaper than is furnished by restaurants. The principal gain, however, is in a social way, the club becoming to the working women a rest room as well as a place to satisfy hunger.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Education, which is composed of Bishop E. E. Hoss, Dr. W. F. Tillett, Dr. J. W. Blackard, Dr. J. S. French, and the Secretary of Education, met Wednesday afternoon in the office of the Board at the Publishing House. All the members of the Committee were present. The time for holding the annual meeting of the Board of Education was fixed for April 2. The meeting will be held in Nashville. Arrangements were made to hold an Educational Conference for the entire Church some time during the year. This Conference will probably be held some time in June in connection with the Biblical Institute of the Vanderbilt University. The Secretary of Education was instructed to pay the appropriations made by the Board last April in full; also to pay to the Vanderbilt University for the use of the Biblical Department for the current year $8,880.

The Year Book of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church of New York City sets forth, within the compass of more than 200 pages, a full statement of the activities of this large parish, of which the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks is rector. One obtains an excellent idea of the scope of the institutional work when it is found that the paid workers of the parish number 272, in addition to 485 volunteer workers. The list of the paid workers is as follows: Clergy, 8; deaconesses, 2; lay reader, 1; organists, 3; assistant organists, 3; choir members, 78; choir mothers, 2; physician, 1; parish visitors, 5; patrons, 2; dentists, 2; druggists, 1; nurses, 6; registrars, 2; housekeepers, 2; superintendents and assistants, 6; kindergartners, 9; attendants (kindergarten), 2; instructors and teachers in clubs, 35; librarians, 3; sextons and assistants, 5; secretaries and clerks, 10; bookkeepers, 2; pianists, 5; custodians, 3; directress, 1; telephone operators, 2; elevator men, 3; printers, 4; carpenters, 2; watchman, 1; janitor, 1; engineers, firemen, etc., 5; laundresses, 8; porters and cleaners, 16; window cleaners, 2; gardeners, 2; farm hands, 3; cooks and helpers, 7; waitresses, 3; chambermaids, 7; useful men, 4; physical directors, 3; total, 272.

MORE AGGRESSIVE WORK NEEDED.

(The following remarks advocating more aggressive Sunday school work were made at the late session of the Mississippi Conference by Rev. W. Fred Long, the Mississippi State Secretary of the Interdenominational Association. This Conference authorized the Sunday School Board to employ a missionary to look after the undeveloped territory within its bounds.—The Editor.)

"In the recent International Sunday School Convention at San Francisco this definition was given of the home mission task:

(a) To establish the Christian Church, proclaim the Christian gospel, and win disciples to Christ, throughout the entire population.

(b) To shape personal character and social relationships to public institutions by the law of Christ.

If our Church is to grow in numbers, usefulness, and efficiency, and to do its part toward the attainment of this ideal, we must reach, teach and train the many at our very doors. Some one has said that twenty million of our population attend religious services regularly, twenty million irregularly, and fifty million never darken a church door. With the population increasing every decade as 10 to 80, and our church membership as 3 to 100, we begin to see the urgent need.

One way in which these conditions can be helped is by this Conference putting a Sunday school missionary or field secretary into the field whose business it shall be to visit all waste places and establish new schools, incidentally encouraging those already at work by holding institutes and keeping them in touch with the big things that are being done by our denomination and all other agencies.

Our own State is no exception when it comes to the matter of need. I reported at San Francisco that the Sunday School enrollment was only 18 per cent, while 82 per cent of our population were out, and this compared favorably with other States—in fact, less than one dozen States made a better showing. We have some very destitute missionary territory. In one county this year were discovered eleven Methodist churches without a Sunday school. In another county the presiding elder said he had five churches on one circuit that had no school, and I doubt not that in many places could have been found ten people, the requisite number to organize a new school.

If I could get the ears of our Bishops, our General Sunday School Board, and the powers that be, I would suggest a vigorous campaign of Sunday school extension all along the line, beginning with a general secretary, with headquarters at Nashville, who is an organizer and who would assist in putting out Sunday school missionaries in each Conference, carrying the organization down through the districts until every place had a school and every boy and girl was reached, and every Sunday school board had its eyes open to the harvest.

Seventy-five per cent of the churches now in existence are the result of a Sunday school first being planted. I clipped the following from one of the periodicals that comes to my desk, which shows what our sister Church is doing:

"The Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church has completed its second full fiscal year of service. In a recent appeal made to the Church, the following statistics are given: The Board is now supporting twenty-six Sunday school missionaries, whereas two years ago there were none in the field. Its missionaries have organized 878 new schools, and out of these nearly two hundred churches have grown."

SOME WORDS OF EXHORTATION.

To the Pastors, Epworth League Presidents and Sunday School Superintendents of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: The fourth Sunday of this month, Jan. 28, is our Hospital Day, by order of our Annual Conference. Let all of us observe the day with becoming loyalty to our Church and interest in this great work of benevolence.

We should count it a great privilege to aid in building the hospital in Memphis. When it is completed, and the sick and afflicted are being cared for, we shall be glad that we had a worthy share in this blessed work for our Lord. Remember his words: "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Please send your offering to Mr. J. R. Pepper, treasurer, Memphis, Tenn.

May you have a profitable service.

I am fraternally,
J. R. JONES.
Jackson, Miss.

Secular News and Comment

Ex-Governor J. K. Vardaman was chosen as United States Senator from Mississippi by the State Legislature last week.

The immigration statistics for the past year show a decrease of 300,000 immigrants from Europe and an increase of 109,000 emigrants to Europe. This decrease is among the Greek and Italian laborers.

Cincinnati is to soon begin the construction of a five million dollar union station for steam and electric cars. It will take five years to construct the building which, when completed, will be one of the most modern in the world.

Dr. John Grier Hibben has recently been chosen as the fourteenth president of Princeton University to succeed Governor Woodrow Wilson, who resigned last October. Dr. Hibben is a native of Illinois, and is the son of a clergyman.

Some of the vaults that were buried in the ruins of the Equitable Life Building in New York City have been opened and the securities contained therein were not injured. A vault that stood the test of such a fire can truly be called fire-proof.

Isaac Delgado, the New Orleans philanthropist who recently died, left $100,000 to the Charity Hospital under certain conditions, $100,000 to the Eye, Ear Nose and Throat Hospital, without condition, and $500,000 for the construction of a Trades School for Boys.

New York City is attempting to do away with all forms of fortune-telling and eliminate from her population the so-called second-sight people. Pursuant to this plan, the police department is raiding every house operated by the occult scientists and taking the "professors" into the toils.

Hon. Earl Brewer was inaugurated Governor of Mississippi last week and now holds the reins in that State. That his administration may be one in which the interests of the people are carefully looked after, is certainly to be hoped. His many friends are confident that he will make a notable record as chief executive.

Andrew Carnegie has expressed the opinion recently that the day of competition is over. He claims that the time has come when prices on all necessities will be fixed by associations, corporations or the government. He denies that the law of supply and demand will have a great deal to do with the future prices of articles of consumption.

The president of the Commercial Travelers' National League, Mr. Dow, of Syracuse, N. Y., is authority for the declaration that after February 1 no member of the union will give tips to restaurant or hotel waiters. He rightly claims that this form of charity belittles the manhood of the waiters themselves, besides being a dead expense to the man who has already paid for courteous treatment.

A leading judge of Louisiana has recently voiced the statement that only five out of every thousand commit crimes. The use of the word "only" indicates that the judge is optimistic concerning the goodness of this generation. We favor optimism whenever the facts warrant it; but when one man out of every 250 is recognized as a criminal, we are disposed to draw the corners of our mouth and say it is appalling.

In 1910 there were 305,000 American Indians exclusive of those who live in Alaska. In 1890 there were 243,000, and in 1900 there were 270,000. It is often said that the Indian is dying out, but the figures do not sustain that statement. He is growing in intelligence, morality and business sagacity. In Oklahoma there are 117,000 Indians, and among them are to be found some of the best specimens of citizenship and manhood of the State. The Indian may yet become a great power in the world.

Governor Hooper of Tennessee recently spent three days studying the needs of the convicts. As a result he announces that stripes will be abandoned and a school will be opened in the penitentiary. He holds that the memory of stripes is degrading and that the object of the State in incarcerating a man in the penitentiary is lost if he is finally released in a more depraved condition than when he entered. He also advocates many other wise and needed reforms.

The secular papers are filled with reports that Postmaster General Hitchcock is backing a movement looking towards the government ownership of all telegraph lines and stations. Objection to the proposed change is based on the supposition that the telegraph operators and managers would become a great army of political "healers," as many of the postoffice employees are alleged to be to-day. Whatever the dangers along this line may be, we are inclined to look with favor on the proposed innovation.

London, with a population of 7,000,000, reported but nineteen cases of murder last year. Of this number, five of the murderers committed suicide, four were never apprehended and all the others were either executed or committed to an insane asylum. During the same time Chicago, with but 2,135,283 population, reported 202 murders, with only one of the murderers executed, fifteen sent to the penitentiary and all the others set free. In more ways than one, the United States might sit at the feet of the Mother Country and learn the lessons of civilization.

Morse, the defaulting banker who has been confined in the Federal prison at Atlanta, Ga., has at last been released, his sentence having been commuted by President Taft. He is alleged to be in bad health and his life is despaired of by his wife and physicians. A skeptical public is disposed to hold that a man who steals tens of thousands and suffers because he was caught is no more worthy of leniency than is the man who steals a few dollars. Truly Mrs. Morse, his loving wife, suffered chagrin because of her husband's downfall, but no more than does Mrs. X, whose husband is not a banker and who is taken into the toils of the law.

That Governor Lee Cruce is Governor of Oklahoma was evidenced last Friday when he ordered out the State militia to enforce his orders moving the county records of Delaware County from Grove to Jay. Certain politicians decided to stop the records at New Jay, a suburb of Jay, and appealed to Chief Justice Turner for a restraining order. It was granted and the enraged Governor notified the Chief Justice that he was Commander-in-Chief of the State militia and Governor of the State, and if the courts intended to interfere with him in the carrying out of the laws of the State it would have to send a larger force on the field. The records moved on without further delay.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE EVANGELISM.

Our Conference Evangelist and the chairman of the Board of Missions were ready to start to the Mid-winter Institute and Leaders' Conference in Nashville, when certain conditions led them to be of the same mind that it was an opportune time to begin a revival in Trinity Church, Ruston.

Following the closing of the Student Y. M. C. A. Conference on Sunday, Dec. 31, we began the meeting on Monday and continued it for ten days.

Although many of our most prominent men were too busy closing out the business of the old year and beginning that of the new to be able to attend regularly, yet the interest was good from the beginning and the attendance was growing constantly, when the weather became so inclement as to seriously hinder the work. However, those who were able to attend regularly were greatly helped by the services. It was gratifying to note that Brother Turner had so far recovered from his recent illness as to grow stronger and gain weight every day with the strenuous work of constant preaching.

I take this opportunity to call attention to three strong points in Turner's work.

First, his preaching ability. During the entire ten days each sermon seemed to be the one exactly suited to the occasion. The sermon itself was always a simple, yet powerful presentation of the gospel, revealing expository ability and couched in a ready flow of good English.

Secondly, his methods. Nothing sensational is attempted, but a strong, earnest appeal is made to the intellect and conscience of men and women.

Thirdly, and most important of all, his spirituality. Every effort, either in sermon, exhortation, or prayer, is with a consciousness of the presence, power and love of God.

We are fortunate in having such a man in the evangelistic work of our Conference under the appointment and direction of the Church. I most heartily commend him to any pastor and people needing evangelistic assistance.

Let every pastor who desires to have Brother Turner in a meeting please notify the writer at once, stating preference of time, so that we may arrange his slate.

The Board of Missions has undertaken to establish an evangelistic fund, which must be sufficient to pay the evangelist's salary and railroad fare. Everything collected by the evangelist will go into this fund; but as we expect to use him at some weak places that may not pay enough to cover their part of these expenses, we desire every pastor who has evangelistic gifts to give ten days to a revival somewhere and to send everything above expenses that is collected for his services to the treasurer of our Board for this fund.

Several have already given their name for a ten-days' meeting on this plan. Let any other who will do so send name at once. A list of these names will appear in the Advocate and whenever a pastor writes for the services of Brother Turner, let him name as second choice any one of the list, and if the evangelist cannot go, we may be able to give him the other choice.

Yours for success in the work,

WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

SOMETHING EVERY PREACHER SHOULD KNOW.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION OF THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

For One Year (regular subscription rate)....$1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)

Eight Months 1.00
To Preachers 1.00
To widows of preachers 1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription to cover expense of remitting, etc., provided they remit by money order, or New York exchange, or stamps, or registered letter. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or stamps, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

DR. YUONG J. ALLEN.

By Rev. Theo. Copeland.

The heroes of the nineteenth century, with but few exceptions, had their training and their triumphs in the mission fields of the Orient and the islands of the Pacific Ocean. No wheeling squadrons or thundering battalions of war were required to achieve their victories; no captive kings nor spoils of conquered nations were displayed to grace their triumphal processions.

It would involve a long list to mention even the names of the illustrious men who, armed with the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, went forth to conquer and regenerate a resisting world. Carey and Chamberlain and Bishop Thoburn in India; Judson in Burmah; Moffatt and Livingstone in Africa; Morrison and Allen and Hudson Taylor in China; Paton in the New Hebrides; Williams in the South Seas; Allen Gardner in the Land of Fire—these and many others witnessed the power of the gospel to regenerate men and uplift society and revolutionize nations.

Among the distinguished men whom I have mentioned, Dr. Allen easily takes a conspicuous place. It is true that he did not, like Livingstone, urge his adventurous way across the Dark Continent, penetrating jungles and forests and crossing lakes and rivers that he might open Africa to civilization and Christian effort; he did not, like John G. Paton, encounter cruel cannibals who wage perilous warfare with the monsters of the sea, and who feast on human flesh and gloat over human suffering; he did not, like Hudson Taylor, lift the banner of the Cross in the far interior of China and inaugurate a great missionary movement in the inland provinces; but he accomplished a work of equal importance to the well-being of the great empire for which he labored nearly half a century; he identified himself with the social, religious, and literary phases of his adopted people, and labored untiringly to lift China from ignorance and superstition to a favorable position in the comity of nations. Writing for the Review of Missions in 1899, Dr. Allen said: "We must teach and train; we must capture the tongues of the nations and make them vocal with the gospel; we must capture the schools of the nations, and teach them that to fear God and keep His commandments is the whole duty of man; we must capture the literature of the nation and transform them by giving them the Bible and the truth as it is in Jesus Christ—the truth which sets free, gives dominion over nature, suppresses heathenism, and makes Christian progress and civilization a universal possibility and blessing." In 1902 we find in the same Review these words from his pen: "I am sorely moved for China, and as deeply concerned for my native land, lest that equal-handed Providence, so conspicuous in history, should fail of due recognition and response at this time when China and America are, as it were, in mutual need of each other."

Not having a list of Dr. Allen's literary productions in the Chinese tongue, I cannot speak at great length on this important part of the subject. He was a voluminous writer, and his literature covered many fields of vital interest. In a letter to the Woman's Missionary Advocate several years ago, he stated that his book on "Woman in All Lands," comprising 42,000 volumes, was then passing through the press. We learn from this letter that the Chinese Society for the Diffusion of Christian knowledge issued the same year of his books fully 100,000 volumes.

These citations will show that his works are in great demand. It is indeed doubtful whether other foreigners have been held in such high esteem as Dr. Allen. He has stood before kings. His counsel has been sought in the highest political and literary circles; and no man has done more than he to lift China to her present hopeful outlook.

Dr. Allen's address before our General Conference, at Birmingham, "The Gospel Liberating China," produced a profound impression. It shows perfect familiarity with the conditions prevailing in that struggling empire, and evinces profound sympathy for that nation which is rapidly emerging from the long night of superstition. During Dr. Allen's last visit to America, he was interviewed by President Roosevelt on the subject of Chinese immigration, a fact which proves that his opinion about international affairs was worthy of the highest consideration.

His patriarchal appearance, his ripe scholarship, his godly counsel, his evangelistic piety have left an indelible impression on the hearts and minds of the multitudes among whom he toiled for his Master. His missionary labors in the foreign field reflected signal honor on the church which he so ably represented; while in his death the whole Christian world sustains an irreparable loss.

St. Louis, Mo.

WE MUST BUILD A GREAT METHODIST HOSPITAL.

The tardiness of our church in undertaking the hospital work is embarrassing and discrediting us at more than one point. Many unacquainted with the facts say that we are merely enterprising the work because we are not willing that the Baptists shall outdo us in this direction. Hence, in the estimate of these, another has taken our crown, and we are esteemed but imitators of our Baptist friends. The truth is, we led them in the agitation and inspired them with the thought, and it was only when, some years ago, our effort seemed aborted they, seeing the wisdom and possibilities of the movement, entered upon the work.

Again, in the absence of hospitals of our own, many of our pastors and members are dependent on the charity of others for their hospital treatment. Within the last two years at least three of our Methodist pastors and more than twenty members of our Methodist preachers' families have had to be cared for in the charity ward of the Roman Catholic Hospital in Memphis. This was indeed generous and beautiful in our Catholic friends, and we can but be sincerely grateful; but it was inexcusable, shameful for us. Our membership is too numerous and too prosperous for such conditions to render anything but discredit upon us. Just in proportion as it is creditable and praiseworthy in others to do this work, is it discreditable and blamable for us to neglect it.

We should certainly provide hospital facilities for our own people. Those who are able to pay all charges will esteem beyond price the privilege of congenial surroundings in an institution of their own church. And surely, if there be any Christian spirit in the church, if any brotherhood, it should be manifested in ample provision to care for its own pastors and members who, when sick or injured, are unable to meet the expense themselves.

Besides this, we have a duty to the unfortunate who are not members of our church. If the religion of Jesus enjoins any obligation it is that of relieving the distressed and helping the helpless. It is this—not the reign of the emotions, not fidelity to ritual, not the worship of legalism, not orthodoxy of belief—this, the relief of the distressed and the helping of the helpless, which Christ has himself declared is to be the ultimate test at the judgment.

Our only chance to carry the Gospel to many of both the rich and the poor will be won by ministering to their diseased bodies. This was Jesus' way, and the church always loses by straying from it. While our skilled physicians and attendants are helping the patient back to health, our faithful ministers will have a splendid vantage from which to impart and press the sweet old Gospel truth. We expect the Hospital to be one of the greatest soul-saving agencies of the Church.

Our Methodist Hospital will be an emphatic but unboasting proclamation of our sympathy and love. It will say to the afflicted: "We want to relieve you. See how we love you, and have prepared to help you. We are ready for you, and waiting. Come, give us the chance to nurse you back to health." And many will come to find health and salvation who else had soon fallen into the grave and, perhaps, eternal doom.

That church which comforts sorrow, supplies want, relieves distress and offers care and healing to the sick and wounded is the church which is going to win the love and loyalty of mankind in the coming years. It is the test by which the denominations shall be tried, and by which they shall stand or fall. The church which has no enterprise and institutions actively engaged in saving men from their present physical hell of misfortune and agony will rightly find no hearing when it seeks to warn them against a spiritual hell which is remote and invisible.

The North Mississippi Conference will of course bear in mind that this enterprise had its origin in the hearts of their good people. Their Home Mission Society urged the building of a Methodist Hospital years ago. Mr. J. H. Sherard, an honored layman, often delegate to the Annual Conference, saw the need and began agitating some eight or ten years since. It was his persistence in pressing the claim which has brought us to the present organized and determined effort. Surely North Mississippi will stand by its men and women and its institution and allow no Conference to outdo it in interest and liberality.

And I would love for my Mississippi Conference to show that no hearts are tenderer, none more prompt to respond to the cries of human distress than theirs. With a splendid sympathy for their suffering fellows, and with full consecration to the redemptive purposes of the loving Christ, and with the exemplary loyalty to the benevolent and Spirit-prompted enterprises of their great church, may they match the best in appreciation and liberality.

Every Methodist in the bounds of the four conferences should have as large a share as possible in the offerings for this Hospital. If one will give to any cause, he will give to relieve the sick and injured. Besides, no one knows how soon he may desperately need the Hospital to snatch himself, or one far dearer, from death and the grave. Any Methodist can give one dollar, and some should delight to give tens of thousands.

And so, on Hospital Rally Day, Jan. 28, "with a strong pull, and a pull all together," let us set the cause of our Methodist Hospital well on its way, and forward so many and such liberal offerings to our treasurer, Mr. John R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn., that the Commissioners can at once begin the work of construction.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

"G. W. HUDDLESTON,

OUR BABY.

Who is the king who has no crown,
Though he is dressed in a velvet gown?
Ever since first to town he came
Everyone's loved him,—what's his name?
This is his majesty, and his suite
All in a court dress nice and neat.
Whenever to hold his court he goes,
They follow his ten wee toddling toes.
His sceptre's a rattle, I must own;
Mother's lap is his nicest throne;
His army's tin and his navy's wood;
His subjects love him, he's so good!
Where is his kingdom? Don't you know?
Why, in the hearts that love him so.
Though he is only a baby small,
He is a king, so say we all.

—F. Gray Severne.

A BOY IN BLOSSOM.

"Oh, grandpa," said Charlie, "see how white the apple trees are with blossoms."

"Yes," replied grandpa; "if the tree keeps its promises there will be plenty of apples, but if it is like some boys I know, there may not be any."

"What do you mean by keeping its promises?" Charlie inquired.

"Why," returned grandpa, "blossoms are only the tree's promises, just as the promises little boys make sometimes are only blossoms. Sometimes the frost nips these blossoms, both on the tree and in the boy."

"I see," Charlie remarked; "then you think when I promise to be a better boy, I am only in blossom. But I'll show you that the frost can't nip my blossoms."—The Young Evangelist.

A HAT AND A HEART.

Lola walked slowly down the street on her way to Sunday school. Usually she ran or skipped, but to-day all her other little friends were far ahead of her. The last bell had rung, and she was sure to be late unless she hurried, but that did not seem to make any difference to her.

Would you like to know what was the matter? Why, just this: Lola had on a new hat!

A beautiful hat it was, too; made of something soft and fluffy, just the color of the sky in the middle of the day. It was trimmed with a wreath of tiny pink roses. Yes, it was a wonderful hat, and Lola's little face looked like a flower under it, with soft little golden curls clustering around. Lola knew this as well as anyone else, for she had looked into the mirror just before she had left home. She thought she must be the prettiest little girl in all the town. She was thinking as she walked along how the other children would look at her, and wish they were as pretty as she was.

After a while she reached the church and found the children had already gone to the primary class, of which she was a member. Lola did not mind this much, because she knew the children would look at her all the harder if she came in late.

But Lola was mistaken. When she opened the classroom door she found Miss Evans teaching the class, and the children listening to her with all their might. Though one or two glanced around when the door squeaked, they did not stop to notice Lola's hat.

Lola took her seat near the front, by a poorly dressed little girl who belonged to the class. I am afraid Lola rather drew her white dress away, as if she did not want Mildred to touch it with her plain little calico skirt.

What was the teacher saying? She had hardly looked at Lola when she came in, but Lola was eyeing her with all her might now.

"Children," she said, "your Golden Text to-day is: 'Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart.' That means that God doesn't mind what kind of clothes you wear, whether they are plain or very fine, because he searches your hearts and sees whether they are kind and good and pure and sweet. Suppose there should be a little girl in this class whose heart was all filled with ugly thoughts, so that she was vain and proud, do you think even a fine dress or hat could hide it from God? No, indeed; he looks right on the heart, and sees whether it is good or evil."

Lola's face was very red. Had the teacher meant to be talking about her? Lola thought she must have been, because she had been thinking ugly, selfish thoughts all the way to Sunday school. But the teacher was looking far off, not at any little girl in particular.

Lola had not forgotten her part, but she was, oh, so ashamed of having been so vain about it, because she knew that God was looking right into her heart, and the hat didn't matter to him.

Then she slipped up close to Mildred and gave her hand a big squeeze, and just then Miss Evans looked down and smiled at her!—The Child's Gem.

THE NEW BOY'S MOTTO.

After Halstead Murray and Roger Barnes left school they each applied for a place in the First National Bank in Hughestown, the small city where they lived. Roger got the place and came around to tell Halstead about it. "Sorry for you, old fellow," he said cheerfully; "but there was only one place, you see, and I had the pull. You know Mr. Stevens is one of the directors, and my uncle worked for him for years. Uncle Sam said a good word for me, and there I am."

Mr. Murray was blacking his shoes when Halstead told him about Roger's visit. He finished the side of the shoe he was rubbing, and then, as he dipped his brush in the blacking box again, he asked with a quizzical smile, "What did you say to that?"

"Why," Hal laughed a little, "I said I was glad for him. That was all. There seemed to be nothing else to say."

"That's right," said the father, as he fell to rubbing the second shoe. "We'll have to try to catch hold of some other rope, boy."

But no other opening appeared, and Halstead was feeling rather blue when he received a card asking him to call at the bank one day. He went promptly, and came back with the great news that Roger had left and he was engaged in Roger's place.

A week afterward he found his Cousin Clara at the table when he came home, a little late, to dinner. "How's banking?" she began.

"I can only tell you about ice banks," returned Hal, cutting his beef soberly. "I'm an ice chopper, ma'am. Been at it all morning."

Clara looked puzzled. "Why, your mother said you'd gone into the First National. What do you mean?"

"I'm hardly in," he said. "I'm rather an outside clearing-house. It has stormed nearly all the time for a week, you know, and my part of the banking business is to keep the bank steps and sidewalks cleared."

Clara smiled. "I see," she said, "beginning at the lowest round, and all that sort of thing. Too low down for Roger, wasn't it?"

"Roger says," replied Hal, "that he told Mr. Peters that he could shovel snow anywhere. He came here to learn banking."

"How about you?" Clara persisted.

Halstead hesitated. Then he opened his watch at the back and passed it across the table. Engraved on the inner cover were the words, "Obey orders." Father and mother had that put on when they gave me the watch, two years ago," he said.—Zion's Herald.

THE BOY CHOPIN.

Frederic Francis Chopin was a bright, happy, little lad, overflowing with fun and spirits, but, while still a mere baby, if he heard music, everything else was forgotten and he would listen eagerly, his brown eyes slowly filling with tears, not of unhappiness, but of pleasure so exquisite that there seemed no other way of expressing it.

Almost as soon as he could walk, he would climb up on a stool before the piano and try to make music for himself. His parents seemed to take it as a matter of course that their son should inherit their love of music, and one of the best masters in Warsaw was engaged to give him piano lessons, which he shared with his older sister.

Little Frederic not only made surprising progress, leaving his clever sister far behind, but soon the tiny hands sought and found lovely new melodies and chords, and he would beg his teacher to write them down for him. As he grew older, he would "make up stories on the piano," as he called it. All his life, even after his fame became world-wide, he exercised this wonderful gift of improvising, and many who were privileged to hear him have said that, beautiful as his written music is, only those who sat near him in the twilight and listened in rapt silence to the divine sounds which the slender fingers sent pulsating through the stillness, knew the greatness of his genius.—St. Nicholas.

THE BEATEN GOLD OF GOD'S PROMISES.

Spurgeon says in one of his sermons: "One promise of God is like a piece of gold; the Christian is the gold beater, and he can hammer that promise out for whole weeks. I can say myself, I have lived on one promise for weeks, and want no other. I want just simply to hammer that promise out into gold leaf and plate my whole existence with joy from it."

As usual with the great, rugged preacher, this figure is one that everybody can understand. And how accurate it conveys the truth. God's promises are pure gold. They can be beaten out until they cover every experience of life. Somehow they never seem to obtain their full worth until they have been hammered long and hard on the anvil of life by the blows of testing experiences. The beating of sorrow comes upon us. To the Christian it touches the gold of God's promise before ever it strikes his spirit. And then the promises of Divine comfort and strength are laid upon us in shining and yielding strength. It is new life to our sorrowing spirits. We cannot see the way to go forward; the pathway wanders and the reach of it cannot be seen. Then the promises of God grow splendid, and we see where we ought to walk. So in every experience of our mortal life. There is many a trial; but, oh, the beaten gold of God's promises! He keeps them every one.—Zion's Herald.

Editorial.

A GOSPEL OF HOPE.

The gospel of Christ is a gospel of hope. Nowhere in it is there a note of despair or pessimism. On the contrary, an unfailing spirit of optimism stands out conspicuously on nearly every page. To be sure, it has its dark and depressing scenes, but brighter ones soon rise upon the vision and make them fade away. Over against Gethsemane and Calvary stand the empty tomb and the ascension from the slopes of Olivet. The inspired writers of the New Testament wrote no Illads of Jeremiad. They believed in the final victory of good over evil, and the ultimate redemption of human society and the earth upon which the race exists. They taught that "earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal;" that man sustained no loss in the fall of the first Adam which is not fully repaired in the triumph of the second Adam. They wept not over the Paradise lost, because they were thrilled and inspired by the coming beauties and glories of Paradise restored.

Nor was theirs a gospel of hope for only society in general. It also comes with a cheering message for every individual on the planet. Though teaching without palliation the turpitude and inexcusableness of sin, it speaks to every transgressor of the possibility of forgiveness and deliverance from the dominance of evil within. It cries, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world!" "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." There is doubtless such a thing as the last call of the Holy Spirit, but it does not speedily come. The gate of mercy is not soon shut. Because one has tried and failed in the Christian life is no reason why one should despair and continue in an evil course. Even to those who have repeatedly fallen God's helping hand is still outstretched. Our Lord will take hold of every person crippled and scarred by sin and make him stand erect in newness of life and strength, if only there be penitence and faith in the heart.

"Go, sin no more." These are the Savior's words. The past is past. True life is here and now. With seal of God's forgiveness on thy brow Greet life's new morning, happy as the birds That lift their songs when sunshine fills the air; For God is love, and love is everywhere!"

VERY MUCH OUT OF PLACE.

We have little desire to stir up a controversy, bent as we are upon doing what we can to awaken a revival spirit throughout the Church (to which peace and harmony are essential); but we cannot refrain from saying that we think the following utterance contained in the December number of The Monthly Bulletin, published by the Woman's Home Mission Society, is very much out of place: "Every large body of Methodists grants legislative recognition in its church councils to its women such as is granted to the laymen, except the M. E. Church, South, and the various branches of negro Methodism."

Personally we have no objection to having our Church grouped with the negro bodies, as we have not the slightest prejudice against our brother in black; but apparently the purpose of this classification is to try to reflect upon the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and this we think is in bad taste for a publication that claims to be the organ of one of the societies of the Church. These advocates of woman's rights carried their cause before the last General Conference, where they were shown every courtesy and their leader was allowed to speak in its behalf; but it was voted down by an overwhelming majority. Prior to this the College of Bishops, after carefully considering the scheme, had pronounced against it with practical unanimity. If these sisters (whom we believe to be only a small minority of the women of the Church) feel that they must carry on their campaign for the rights of the laity, we sincerely hope that they will conduct it on a high plane, and in an independent manner, not seeking to use the machinery of the Church for such a purpose.

It is not a brilliant argument to contend that the Southern Methodist Church ought to do a thing simply because other bodies have done it. Our Church has a number of features which are distinctive, and which, in our judgment, are superior to the regulations of the other Methodisms. At any rate, our communion is outgrowing any of them, and that speaks well for it. Possibly, if they had more of our conservatism and would get rid of some of their innovations, they also would make more satisfactory progress.

WILL REMAIN UNDER THE PROHIBITION BANNER.

The outlook for the prohibition cause is very bright in Mississippi. The State mass meeting in the city of Jackson on January 9 was a large and enthusiastic gathering. There were three sessions held; one in the morning, presided over by Mr. L. P. Brown, of Meridian; one in the afternoon, presided over by President J. W. Provine, of Mississippi College, and the other in the evening with President D. C. Hull, of Millsaps College, in the chair. At the first session there was a debate between the students of Millsaps and Mississippi Colleges, the question being, "Resolved, That prohibition in Mississippi should be by statutory legislation rather than by popular vote." The discussion was pronounced highly creditable. At the other meetings a number of forceful addresses were made. The ablest leaders in the Legislature seem to have committed themselves thoroughly to the maintenance of the present prohibition laws. Governor Brewer in his admirable inaugural address, declared unequivocally for statutory prohibition and recommended the enactment of more strenuous legislation for its better enforcement. Evidently, there is not the slightest prospect of Mississippi joining the column of States in which the legalized sale of intoxicants is allowed.

"LOUISIANA METHODISM."

Under the above caption the Central Christian Advocate (Methodist Episcopal) published in Kansas City, Mo., recently contained an article written by Dr. J. W. Lively in which appeared the following paragraph:

"To this day there are whole parishes in Louisiana with forty and fifty thousand souls without a Protestant preacher or church or worship among the whites. In 1880 in the 13 cotton States there were 3,343,514 voters 21 years old, and 1,250,000 of them could not read their ballot, more than one-third. There has been great progress, but in 1900 46 per cent of the people were illiterate in the State of Louisiana."

This is an amazing statement to be published in a great paper such as is the Central. We who live in Louisiana may well understand why the Northern Church is pouring its money into the South and crowding its preachers into this territory when its organs are circulating such a statement as to the conditions here. We do not know of a single parish in the State that is without Protestant houses of worship. Our own Church covers the entire State, including every parish. The Baptists are numerous among the whites, and in Southern Louisiana, where the Catholics are strongest, the Presbyterians are active in every parish.

Why should the educational status of the State be judged by a census taken twelve years ago? It is doubtful whether any State in the Union has made more advancement than Louisiana along educational lines within the past six years. This is not a heathen country. We are not neglecting this field. On the contrary, our Church is spending tens of thousands of dollars in order to carry the gospel to those who need it in our own State. We raise a protest against such an erroneous and misleading article being circulated among people who have no other means by which to learn the truth than through their Church papers.

Just notice, please, the outrageous recklessness and falsity of some of the statements contained in the above quotation from the Central Advocate. Take, for instance, the following: "There is to this day whole parishes in Louisiana with forty to fifty thousand souls without a Protestant preacher or church or worship among the whites." There are but five parishes in the State in which the population reaches or exceeds 40,000. In Caddo, we have Shreveport with its four flourishing churches and Centenary College. In Calcasieu we have Lake Charles with two church buildings, besides six regular pastors in the parish outside of Lake Charles. In Rapides is located Alexandria with its beautiful church building and at least five pastors working in the parish. In St. Landry is Opelousas, where the Louisiana Conference was organized, and then we come to Orleans in which is located New Orleans. Thus it is easily seen that the writer was grossly ignorant of the State concerning which he was attempting to inform his readers.

CONCERNING THE TER-CENTENARY BIBLE.

We regret to state that there has been unusual delay in filling orders for the special Ter-centenary Bible which we have been advertising for $1.35. This Bible is such a bargain at this price that there has been an overwhelming demand for it from all parts of the country, and the publishers, the John C. Winston Company, have not been able to make them in sufficient quantities to supply their customers promptly. Our contract with them called for the mailing of the books from the place of their publication in Philadelphia, and every order that we have received has gone forward at once and the delay has been due to no fault of ours. We ask our friends to exercise a little patience, and we think the books will soon be delivered. Should they not, we will refund the money on every order sent us. We sincerely regret this unavoidable delay, and our customers may rest assured that not one of them will be allowed to sustain any loss.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

A mission Sunday school was organized last week at Gretna, La.

The congregations at preaching and prayer meeting are increasing under the pastorate of Rev. John W. Ramsey at Utica, Miss.

Rev. C. J. Nugent of the Kentucky Conference, who is in the city visiting his niece, was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office last week.

Prof. McNeace, of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, was booked to speak at the Salvation Army service in Jackson last Sunday evening.

The New Orleans pastors held a live session last Monday morning at First Church, after which they lunched together at one of the leading city restaurants.

The following brethren have our thanks for subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. E. S. Lewis, West Point, Miss.; Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Ackerman, Miss.; Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, Houma, La.

Dr. A. F. Smith's themes at the First Methodist Church in Jackson last Sunday were "Burden-bearing" and "The Prevailing Word." He is in high favor with his flock both as a pastor and preacher.

The State secretaries and International field workers of the International Sunday School Association will begin their annual session in New Orleans next week. They will occupy the pulpits of our churches on Sunday, Feb. 4.

The work is progressing favorably at Franklin, La., under the direction of Rev. L. C. Wilson, who is held in high esteem by his parishioners. There is no bluster in the methods of this quiet toiler, but the results achieved attest his efficiency.

The last issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate contained a striking and most suggestive article on "The McNamars: A Lesson and Opportunity," by Rev. Walter G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La. Brother Harbin writes as well as he speaks. This is saying much.

We received a pleasant and interesting letter from Rev. T. M. Johnson, a superannuate member of the Louisville Conference, in which best wishes for the Advocate and Methodism were included. Brother Johnson has pleasant memories of this part of the field of Methodism.

In a personal note, Rev. M. F. Johnson, formerly a pastor in New Orleans, but now of Berryville, Ark., writes words of kindest greeting to Louisiana Methodists, and announces that he is keeping up with the preachers of this Conference and especially with "Tug" Atkinson and Hampton Singleton.

Dr. S. H. Werlein is reported to be preaching to large audiences at Alexandria, La., and to have made a fine impression both upon his own people and the general public of that prosperous city. He is happy in the selection of his pulpit themes, and is uncommonly impressive in his presentation of them.

Next Sunday is Hospital Day in Mississippi. We trust that it will be observed in every pastoral charge in the State, and that the results will be such as to give this needed enterprise a great forward impulse. All moneys collected for this cause should be promptly forwarded to Mr. J. R. Pepper, Memphis, Tenn.

A forward move worth while, decided upon by the New Orleans pastors, is their plan to go into districts in a body, together with laymen and trained workers, and make a systematic evangelistic canvass from house to house. The field of each church in the city will be visited in this way during the year.

Rev. J. L. Sutton, of Louisiana Avenue Church, has instituted a novel plan for his prayer meeting which promises good results. The Woman's Missionary Society will have full charge one week, and the other meetings will be under the leadership of the Epworth League, the Sunday school and the official board.

Rev. J. G. Snelling reports that the Carrollton Avenue Church of this city has under advisement plans to increase the building equipment of that church. The stewards have advanced the pastor's salary $300 over last year, and every indication points to advancement under the efficient pastorate of Brother Snelling.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, the accomplished pastor of the Parker Memorial Church, this city, is announced to lecture to-morrow night, under the auspices of the Epworth League, for the benefit of a fund which is being raised to purchase a pipe organ. Brother Singleton has the reputation of being a most entertaining platform speaker.

Dr. J. W. Moore has begun a series of sermons to young men at the First Methodist Church of this city. He delivered the first of them last Sunday evening, which was a ringing message concerning the class of men that should be elevated to office. The utterance was a most fitting one to be spoken on the eve of the State election.

We received an announcement of the meeting of the executive committee of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Mississippi Conference which was to meet in Jackson at Capitol Street Church last Friday, but the announcement was dated the 15th of January and did not reach this office until after last week's issue was off the press.

A note from Rev. W. W. Jones, our pastor at Calhoun City, Miss., written on the 19th inst., brings news of the death of Brother Sid Bounds, one of the substantial members of the Bounds Church, whose remains were laid to rest on Sunday, January 14. Brother Jones adds: "We ask that prayers be made for the children as they pass through this trying ordeal."

During the month of December, Rev. P. O. Lowrey traveled 1065 miles in the interest of Sunday school work. He delivered 9 addresses, preached 4 sermons, established 4 teachers' libraries, organized 3 adult Bible classes, 4 home departments, 1 cradle roll and 2 teacher training classes. This looks as if the Louisiana Conference field secretary spent a busy and effective month.

Information has reached us of the destruction by fire of the attractive residence of Mrs. E. T. Clark, at Cleveland, Miss., on the afternoon of January 12. The entire roof was in flames when the fire was discovered, and but little of the contents of the house was saved. The loss was partially covered by insurance. The many friends of Sister Clark will deeply sympathize with her in her misfortune.

It was announced some weeks ago that the Conference Sunday School Board had granted 300 quarterlies to Rev. H. S. Johns for use in the Louisiana State Penitentiary; but a letter from Brother Johns states that before the session of the Conference closed, the Board revoked the order. However, several superintendents have come to his relief. Brother Johns operates fourteen Sunday schools.

A communication to this office from Rev. W. H. Benton, who went from the Louisiana Conference to the Presbyterian Church and is stationed at White Castle, La., states that the Advocate has always been a visitor to his home and shall so continue even though he is affiliated with another Church. Brother Benton is serving a pleasant charge at White Castle and has a delightful home in which to live.

A note from Rev. J. A. Bowen, written on the 15th inst., stated that Sister Bowen was better, and that hope of her recovery was entertained. Mrs. C. A. Bowen was also thought to be improving. Brother Bowen's many friends in Mississippi will be pleased to hear this news; for they deeply sympathize with him and his son in their grievous affliction, and will feel solicitous until they know that all danger is passed.

We acknowledge the reception of the following invitation: "Mr. Charles Clarence McCowen invites you to be present at the marriage of his daughter, Ruby Austin, to Rev. James Orion Ware, of the Mississippi Conference, on Wednesday, January 31, 1912, at 1 o'clock p.m., in the Methodist Church, at Terry, Miss. At home at Sharon, Miss." We extend hearty congratulations, and wish the contracting parties a long life of usefulness and happiness.

Rev. J. W. Faulk, who came to our Church at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference from the Methodist Episcopal Church has reached his charge, the East Feliciana Circuit, and is happily domiciled in the commodious parsonage at Oaknolia. Before Brother Faulk and family arrived, the good people of the circuit stocked the larder with every necessity from butchered whole hogs to shakers of salt, so that not a single worry hindered the pastor from taking up his church work, which he has begun with energy.

We are in receipt of three interesting photographs from Mrs. W. B. Murrah, the accomplished wife of Bishop Murrah, which were taken in the Orient. One shows the Bishop and Mrs. Murrah as mountain climbers, with their guides; another shows them with friends on board the Princess Alice, on Dec. 3, and the third shows them in jinrikishas, moving along the highway. We were much pleased to note the ruddy appearance of these good friends, whom we hope to have back with us in the States in the near future. In common with many others, we miss them not a little.

The editor spent the whole of last week in Mississippi, looking after urgent personal business which had been neglected for many months. This explains why some communications which their authors doubtless expected to appear in this issue have been delayed. It was our pleasure, though suffering from a severe cold, to occupy the pulpit of our church at Lexington on Sunday evening, January 14. While in that city we also had the privilege of baptizing Martha Harris, the sweet babe of Rev. and Mrs. T. H. Lipscomb, at the parsonage.

We received a few days since a card from Bishop and Mrs. W. B. Murrah bringing greetings from Jerusalem. It bears the date of December 30, 1911, and was mailed at the Grand New Hotel, where they were quartered. It is needless to say that we were pleased to hear from these esteemed friends and to know that they are journeying homeward. We pray that a kind Providence may watch over and keep them until they are again beneath the flag of the stars and stripes.

Rev. J. J. Hoffman, of the Helping Hand Mission of this city, entered upon the fifty-second year of his ministry on January 16. He was born June 12, 1842; ordained January 16, 1861, and has been in New Orleans since 1882. We thank Brother Hoffman for kindly greetings on the day of the anniversary of his entrance into the ministry, and we trust that he may be spared to work for the Master for many years yet. He is rendering a noble service in maintaining the mission at 610 Baronne Street, which is one of the most deserving religious enterprises of the Crescent City.

The many friends of Brother and Sister T. S. Randle in Louisiana will be pleased to read the following message from them, sent from Brundage, Texas: "We are 700 miles in Texas, where we have come in search of health, and already our sick ones seem better. We have a good screened tent for the winter, with a comfortable stove under it. Pray that the Lord will provide, and that we may be able to work in his vineyard. We anxiously glean the pages of the Advocate to learn of our friends. Please do not forget the superannuates who are sojourning in another State."

Many of the brethren write that the work of the Church has been greatly hindered in their charges by the inclement weather and bad roads. The Advocate has appreciably felt the effect of the adverse conditions which have prevailed throughout its patronizing territory for the past few weeks. Our receipts for the present month are considerably behind those of January, 1911. We trust that our pastors will do their best to secure the renewals of the clubs which are now expiring at many places and also to introduce the Conference organ into other homes. This is the best time to work to extend the circulation of our church periodicals.

The Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference for the year 1911 are out, and through the kindness of the Conference secretary, Rev. J. R. Countiss, a copy is on our table. It scarcely needs to be said that the work of issuing them has been well done, and that the pamphlet is an attractive one. Brother Countiss has for several years been giving us our printed minutes in a form well-nigh perfect. But, in our judgment, the present edition is the neatest in appearance that we have yet had. One interesting and useful feature added is the Conference Directory of Local Preachers. The mechanical work was done by M. Cowatt-Mercer Printing Company, of Jackson, Tenn.

We desire to state again that copy reaching us after Friday, unless it deals with matters of pressing importance, cannot be printed in the issue of the Advocate which is in process of publication. The main matter of the paper is set up on Thursday and Friday. After Saturday we will undertake to handle only brief notices and news for our "Personal" column. Reports intended for the "Findings from the Field" department will have to wait over a week unless they are in hand by Friday. We respectfully ask our correspondents to note these rules of the office, and govern themselves accordingly. The plan we have adopted is necessary to get the Advocate (which is mailed on Wednesday) out on time.

Under date of January 21, Mrs. R. G. Porter, relict of the late "Gilderoy" Porter, writes as follows from Boyle, Miss.: "God has again called me to pass under the rod. William B. Porter, my second son, who was 42 years of age, died at Shreveport, La., on the 19th inst. His remains will be carried to Starkville, Miss., and laid to rest beside his sainted father whom he honored. I go to Starkville to-day. All these trials are made easier for me because God is good and makes no mistakes, and because I know that I shall soon meet my loved ones in heaven. Pray for me." We deeply sympathize with our esteemed Sister and the others who mourn with her in this hour of bereavement, and pray that divine grace may comfort and sustain them.

We regret to be informed of the death of Mrs. C. E. Gore, who fell on sleep on Sunday, January 7, in the home of her distinguished son, United States Senator T. P. Gore, in Washington City. Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, of Whitworth College, her accomplished daughter, in a personal letter to the editor thus refers to the home-going of the deceased: "A life-long Methodist, a devout Christian, a great soul has passed to her eternal reward. Though stricken and bereft, her children are indeed rich in the precious legacy of her godly life. May a double portion of her noble spirit be preserved on earth through each one of us." We extend heartfelt sympathy to all who are touched by this sorrow, and pray that the divine Comforter may minister to them in this trying hour.

We are indebted to Mr. H. P. Todd, the principal of Stanton College at Natchez, Miss., for the following news item: "The district stewards of the Port Gibson District met in the Crawford Street Church of Vicksburg on the 9th inst., and entered into an organization which is to last for the year, with officers as follows: E. J. Bomar, Vicksburg, chairman; H. P. Todd, Natchez, secretary; M. M. Satterfield, Port Gibson, treasurer. It was the suggestion of Rev. W. H. Huntley, the presiding elder, that the organization be continuous throughout the year. The first work that awaits the stewards (after having made the apportionment of the assessments) is the collection of money to pay the past-due interest on the debt of the district parsonage at Port Gibson, and also as soon as possible a part of the principal. It was found to be very necessary to give prompt attention to caring for the incumbrance on this valuable property of the Church."

Mrs. ANN MILTON (nee Thornhill) was born Sept. 24, 1877 and died at her home in Camden, Miss., July 26, 1911. She was converted and joined the church in early life and lived a consistent Christian throughout her long pilgrimage here on earth. As a devoted daughter she ministered to an aged and infirm father during his last years. She was a mother to the orphan sister left to her care and to the motherless boys who came into her care by her marriage to Mr. S. N. Milton. Devoted to her church, she was ever thoughtful of its interests and those of her pastor and his family. Suffering bravely and patiently through her last illness, she bore, uncomplainingly, the weary days and, though she longed to depart, was willing for God's will to be done. Those who came into her room, where she lay for weary months, went away blessed by her cheery words. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. W. Chisolm, and we laid her away 'neath the flowers she loved to await the glorious morning, when we shall meet beyond the river.

JOHN W. CHISOLM.

Mrs. MARY EUGENIA MEADOR (nee Traylor), was born May 1st, 1870, and passed from earth to heaven October 31st, 1911. When sixteen years of age she united with the Baptist Church. On April 24th, 1890, she was married to Rev. Walton P. Meador, now a local preacher in the Hattiesburg District, Mississippi Conference. Soon after her marriage she united with the Methodist Church which she loved and in which she faithfully served her Master. She leaves behind two brothers, her husband, three boys and one daughter. One boy, Carl, had already preceded her to that "Land of Delight." As a daughter she was exemplary; as a sister, lovable; as a wife, faithful, true and devoted; as a mother we find her in her glory. Sister Meador was one of those rare, sweet spirits whose gentle life ennobled and blessed everyone who came to know her. It was always a genuine pleasure for the writer to be in her home and note how perfectly she performed those queenly functions of wife and mother. Long before she died she suffered much, though her lips kept back from loved ones the extent of her suffering. Patient and resigned, she calmly awaited the end. She told her husband she had turned all her cares and anxieties, with her children and himself, over into the hands of God. Just three days before she died she said to her pastor, Brother Neil, "I am one day nearer home." On Monday, the day before she passed away, she called the children to her, one by one, and gave to each a parting message, then with her hands raised towards heaven said, "I am so happy." That afternoon she said to Brother Thompson, "I am nearing the Beautiful Land." Shortly after three o'clock the next morning, just as those about her finished singing "O Come Angel Band," her sweet spirit passed into that Beautiful Land. In view of her beautiful life and triumphant death it is no wonder her loved ones weep not as those who have no hope, for they know where to find her and expect to meet her in the "Land of the Unsetting Sun."

OSMOND S. LEWIS.

Mrs. MARY HAY was born in Lowndes County, Miss., May 12, 1846. She was the daughter of the late Col. Thomas Cannon, of Verona, and formerly of Columbus, Miss. She was united in marriage to Mr. G. M. Hay, of Verona, Miss., Aug. 24, 1876. She died on Nov. 24, 1911, at her home in Verona. Her husband, Brother G. M. Hay, and a daughter, Miss Maggie Hay, survive her, in deepest sorrow for the passing away of a faithful, devoted wife, and a fond, loving mother. It was a sad message that came to me at Starkville, over the long distance telephone, notifying me of the death of our ascended Sister Hay, and calling me to attend her funeral at Verona. For many years she had been a true and esteemed friend and it had been my pleasure to officiate at the marriage of herself and husband. Funeral services were held on Saturday morning Nov. 25, at the residence of her husband, participated in by the writer and Rev. A. W. Langley, her pastor, Rev. J. T. Cunningham, and Brother Hunter, pastor of the Presbyterian Church. The body was laid to rest in the Verona Cemetery, with a concluding service, in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends, and the benediction by Rev. W. L. Duran of Tupelo. Sister Hay entered the Christian life and joined the Methodist Church in early life, and to the day of her death she adorned, without ostentation, her profession of faith, and made it lovely and attractive in the eyes of others. She was a woman of high ideals, a type of true, refined, and Christian womanhood. She did not wish to live an "aimless life." And as the years came on, the way of usefulness opened before her, and she became a shining example of earnest service, and a consecrated Christian life, in her church, and in the community where she lived. As we looked upon her, as she lay in her casket with folded hands as one in peaceful sleep, one who knew and loved her well, said, "Those hands worked for others." Another high commendation I recall, as spoken by some one, was, "She was the life of the church." The passing away of one of so many excellent traits of character seems a great loss to the church. May the mantels of her useful, godly life, fall on some other one, who shall take up and carry forward her work. Besides her husband and daughter, four sisters live to mourn her loss. May our Father in heaven sustain all these stricken ones, and comfort them with the assured hope of a happy meeting with the loved one in the better world. The uplifting influence of the beautiful noble, Christian life of Sister Hay will long be felt, and will remain as a priceless legacy, not only to her family, but to her church, and to the people among whom she lived.

T. C. WIER.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Adopted by the Ladies' Aid Society, of New Augusta, Miss.:

Whereas, God in his inscrutable providence has called Mrs. KATHERINE CARPENTER from labor to reward, therefore be it resolved by the Methodist Ladies' Aid Society, of New Augusta, Miss.,

First—That in the death of Sister Carpenter this Society has lost one of its most valued members.

Second—That we shall cherish her memory and endeavor to emulate her spirit of devotion to Christ.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the bereaved family with the assurance that the sorrowing husband and motherless children have our deepest sympathy and that we will remember them in our prayers.

Fourth—That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

YOU ARE INVITED

To join the Advocate Piano Club. The plan is sensible, economical and convenient. Club members not only save money on their pianos, but are protected and even insured in every particular so that dissatisfaction is impossible. Study the club plan carefully and you cannot fail to see that it represents an unusual opportunity. Those who have already joined and have received their pianos express themselves as "Delighted with the pianos and the plan."

The club gives you the benefit of the "purchasing power of its one hundred members." This means a saving of about one-third in the purchase price of your piano. Terms are made to suit the convenience of the individual member. The life insurance feature is ideal. It is well worth your while to investigate the club carefully. SPEECHLESS FOR THANKS.

Mena, Ark.—"I find Cardui to be all you represent," writes Mrs. H. B. York, of this city. "I suffered from womanly ailments, for nearly two years, before I tried Cardui. I have been so relieved since taking it. I cannot say enough in its praise. It has done me a world of good, and I recommend Cardui to all women." Cardui is over 50 years old, and the demand is greater to-day than ever. Cardui is the standard, tonic medicine, for women of every age. Would you like to be well and strong? Then take Cardui. Its record shows that it will help you. Begin to-day. Why wait?

Peculiar After Effects of Grip This Year.

Leaves Kidneys in Weakened Condition.

Doctors in all parts of the country have been kept busy with the epidemic of grip which has visited so many homes. The symptoms of grip this year are very distressing and leave the system in a run down condition, particularly the kidneys which seem to suffer most, as every victim complains of lame back and urinary troubles which should not be neglected, as these danger signals often lead to more serious sickness, such as dreaded Bright's Disease. Local druggists report a large sale of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which so many people say soon heals and strengthens the kidneys after an attack of grip. Swamp-Root is a great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, and, being an herbal compound, has a gentle healing effect on the kidneys, which is almost immediately noticed by those who try it. Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., offer to send a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, free by mail, to every sufferer who requests it. A trial will convince any one who may be in need of it. Regular size bottles 50c and $1.00. For sale at all druggists. Be sure to mention this paper.

NOTES FROM RUSTON DISTRICT.

The preachers are all at their posts despite the bad and cold weather, and are starting off very hopeful.....A. W. Turner, Conference evangelist, has just closed a ten-day meeting at Ruston. He delighted the people with his preaching. Because of the inclement weather, the results were not what he and the pastor had hoped for. The general impression is that he is the right man in the right place.The presiding elder is on his fourth year, and, up to date, has filled every appointment in person on time, and is pleased with the prospects for this year.....There was a good congregation at Benton Sunday, the 14th, and every one was uplifted by the able sermon of Rev. R. W. Tucker, the presiding elder.—H. W. Cudd.

DERIDDER CHARGE AND ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT NOTES.

The work is opening up finely and looks well for a successful year. My stewards are doing good work and have already made plans for 1912. The assessment is advanced and is ample for all my needs. The W. H. M. Society is at work and will soon purchase an Individual Communion service. They are even now at work on the Easter program and, with the stewards, are planning to enlarge the Sunday school. We need more room and must have it. The adult class is in excellent shape and with the social feature about to be added, will do much better work. A worker's council will soon be held by the class to bring together its members in order that each may serve the other better. This class will also do work for the Ruston Orphanage. A birth-day box is to be placed in the church for the Orphanage. The teacher-training class began last February and adjourned for Conference and the holidays, but reopened the 15th.

Brother Brisco Carter, the presiding elder, has been with us and made an excellent impression. He reports favorably from the field in this neighborhood, having used my room as a center from which to reach Elizabeth and Oakdale, Merryville, Bon Ami and Carson. A new home is being fitted up for Brother Oaks at Carson, and at Elizabeth for Brother Hoffpauir. Brother Bennett, of the Merryville charge, moves into a more comfortable house next week. All of this part of the State is moving ahead along church lines. We miss Brother Singleton here, but Brother Carter has hold of the situation.—John F. Foster.

NEWTON DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. T. J. O'Neill, the active and efficient presiding elder of Newton District, Mississippi Conference, is in the midst of his first round, looking carefully after every department of the work.....Because of the prevailing inclement weather, some of the preachers were delayed in reaching their appointments, but all are now settled and at work.....Brother E. L. Alford and family are delighted with their return to Pachuta. The assessment for ministerial support on this charge was made the same as last year. Through the wise leadership of Mrs. Alford, Pachuta has one of the best Senior Leagues in the district.....Brother D. E. Vickers, the new pastor at Rose Hill, has made a good beginning. The first quarterly conference for this charge was held in the new church building at Homewood. This new congregation manifested its interest and loyalty by making a liberal assessment for the support of the ministry. Brother Lane, the former pastor, was instrumental in the organization of the congregation and the erection of the building. The beautiful new church at Rose Hill is almost completed. Brother Vickers and family were given a cordial reception.... Brother R. T. Pickett and family reached their new field of labor, Carthage, on Jan. 5, being providentially delayed. They arrived in the river boat Caldwell No. 3. A very interesting crowd of young people assembled at the parsonage on the evening of their arrival and gave them a most cordial greeting and liberal pounding. Brother Pickett said that the latter was severe, but that he was quite willing to risk another. The outlook for the year on this charge is good.....Rev. J. H. Moore has been warmly welcomed by the Walnut Grove circuit. The good people of Walnut Grove filled the parsonage larder to overflowing with substantial expressions of appreciation. Liberal provision was made by the stewards for ministerial support. It is Brother Moore's good fortune to have the association and help of three faithful local preachers, viz: Brothers J. R. Hays, S. A. Ferguson and Cyril E. Cain. The church at Walnut Grove has recently suffered a loss by the death of Mrs. Malissa Miller, widow of the late Dr. Irvin Miller.... The Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose is having a very prosperous session. Several students have come in since Conference. Fifteen ministerial students are in attendance. By every token Brother G. H. Galloway, as president, is the right man in the right place. He is planning for larger and better things. Brother H. C. Norsworthy, the junior preacher, has arrived, and is making Featherstun was given a royal reception by the church at Newton. He and Mrs. Featherstun had been suffering from an attack of malaria, but have about recovered. He held his first service at Newton the fifth Sunday in December. We understand he has made a fine impression on the people there.....Rev. W. A. Hays is delighted with his return to the Bay Springs charge. Liberal provision was made at the first quarterly conference for the pastor's support. Bay Springs has an excellent Sunday school, with Brother W. F. Thompson as superintendent. This school has one of the best organized Bible classes in the district under the faithful leadership of Brother C. E. Boulton, a local preacher. The ladies of the Home Mission Society, of which Mrs. Hays is president, recently gave the pastor and family a liberal pounding, which was highly appreciated. The church at Raleigh, the capital of Smith county, which is now a part of this charge, deserves mention for faithfulness along all lines.....The presiding elder is emphasizing the essential need of spirituality in his work among us. Many of us are praying and believing that this shall be a year of gracious revivals and of general advancement for the cause of Christ in this district.—W. A. H.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

The minister's wife ought to be selected by a committee of the church. She should be warranted never to have headache or neuralgia; she should have nerves of wire and sinews of iron, she should never be tired. She should be cheerful and intellectual, pious and domesticated; she should be able to keep her husband's house, darn his stockings, make his shirts, cook his dinner, and copy his sermons. She should keep up the style of a lady on wages of a day-laborer, and be always at leisure for "good works," and ready to receive morning calls. She should be secretary of the Band of Hope, and president of the missionary society; she should conduct Bible classes and mothers' meetings; should make clothing for the poor, and gruel for the sick; and, finally, she should be pleased with everybody and everything, and never desire any reward beyond the satisfaction of having done her own duty—and other people's too.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

GEORGIA MARBLE SURVIVES SEVEREST TEST.

Mr. O. W. Norcross, of Worcester, Mass., one of the largest contractors and builders in the United States, and a recognized authority, has this to say regarding Georgia Marble.

"In my opinion, the Georgia Marble has no superior as a building material. I have for several years made an exhaustive investigation into buildings, from all sources and information possible, as regards marble. I have carefully examined buildings that have been built and are now in existence, and from this observation and research, have come to the conclusion that a marble of the construction and ingredients of the Georgia Marble, will be a most lasting stone. It is a fact that the nearer any material is of one ingredient the more even it will wear, and of all the marbles that have come under my observation, the Southern marble answers all the requirements for a strong, durable and lasting stone. It is so made up, and so impenetrable to moisture, that while ordinary stones, even granite, would wear with rounded corners, the Georgia Marble will remain with its corners perfect, sharp and clean."

A more severe test of the absorbing qualities of Georgia Marble is to take a small cube, drill a hole in the center, fill it with common writing ink and use it a few months as an ink stand. Such a test has been made, and although this ink stand was in constant use, the marble did not absorb the ink any more than one made of glass. Apply the same test to any other marble, and the ink will be absorbed in a few hours.

Mr. Norcross continues as follows: "It can not be discolored by any ordinary means such as tend to discolor buildings. Near the Ames Building on Bedford Street, Boston, there occurred a large fire; this fire, with the soot, dirt and dust arising from it, discolored the Ames Building, which is built of yellow brick with Georgia Marble trimmings. A few days ago we washed down the front of the Ames Building with nothing but cold water and a stiff brush, without any acid. The building washed down perfectly clean and white, and just as fresh as the day it was put up. I am sure this result can not be obtained with any other building material, not even granite. In Gwilt's Encyclopedia of Architecture there is a description of Parian marble, which outlasted all other marbles. You will notice it is nearly all carbonate of lime; that it is a crystalline formation and translucent. The description of Parian marble here would answer the description of Georgia Marble and in my opinion, the Georgia marble bears a strong resemblance to the Parian marble of ancient times."

The crushing strength of Georgia Marble is upwards of 10,000 pounds and withstands heat to upwards of 1,000 degrees. It can be had in any size, pattern and any shade desired, with prompt deliveries. It is equally as suitable (if not more so) for monumental purposes as it is for buildings. Ask your dealer to show you samples of Cherokee, Creole, Kennesaw and Etowah Georgia Marble, and if he can't supply you, drop a card to the Georgia Marble Co., Tate, Ga., and they will put you in touch with a nearby dealer who can.

Money in your Wood Lot

It is cheaper to make lumber with an "American" Saw Mill than to buy lumber. In that timber on your wood lot are thousands of feet of first-class lumber waiting for you to get a saw mill of your own to take it out. But be sure your mill is an "American," which needs less power to drive it, costs less to run and cuts more lumber than any other mill. And the "American" is so simple that you can run it yourself, using your farm engine for power. Our book—"Making Money Off the Wood Lot"—tells all about farm lumbering. Shall we send you a copy? THE VETERANS MINISTER'S ASSO- CIATION OF THE NORTH MIS- SISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This Association held its second annual meeting Nov. 27, at 3 o'clock p.m., in the Methodist Church at Macon, Mississippi. Rev. G. W. Bachman, vice-president, occupied the chair.

The annual sermon, was preached by Rev. J. W. Boswell, D.D., from Jeremiah vi, 16. The sermon was followed by singing, lead by Brother Bachman, who is ever ready with a song. During the singing, there was a cordial greeting and joyous hand-shaking—a jubilee time among the veterans and other brethren.

A tribute to Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan our first president, who died during the year, was read. A sketch of Rev. J. R. D. King was read also, he, a worthy veteran, having passed to his reward above since our last Conference.

On motion, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Rev. S. M. Thames, president; Rev. G. W. Bachman, vice-president; and T. C. Wier, secretary and treasurer.

At a meeting held Nov. 30 1911, the following Constitution was formally adopted.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

This Association shall be called, and known as "The Veteran Minister's Association of the North Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South.

ARTICLE II.

All superannuated and supernumerary preachers, and all who have been in the traveling connection forty or more years, are to be declared members. And all sons of deceased ministers, who, if living, would be members, are entitled to membership, as the Sons of Veterans.

ARTICLE III.

The design of the Association is to bring its members into closer touch with each other; to strengthen the bonds of Christian fellowship; to give the retired brethren something to look forward to at the Annual Conference and induce them to attend its sessions.

ARTICLE IV.

The meetings are to be held annually in connection with the sessions of the Annual Conference. The secretary may read his report and a sermon will be preached, which may be followed by talks, reminiscential or otherwise, by members of the Association. Business meetings may be held later in the Conference sessions.

ARTICLE V.

The officers of the Association shall be, a president, a vice-president, and a secretary-treasurer.

ARTICLE VI.

The officers shall constitute an executive committee, for the transaction of any business in the interest of the annual sessions, and to arrange the program for the annual meetings. Rev. S. M. Thames, president-elect, occupied the chair when the above Constitution was adopted.

T. C. WIER, Secretary.

LAFAYETTE DISTRICT NOTES.

There is no place in Louisiana where the missionary field is larger nor more promising than in the Lafayette District, of which Rev. R. H. Wynn is the efficient presiding elder. He has the field well in hand, and his force of men are even now accomplishing good. . . . Rev. C. V. Breithaupt is beginning his fourth year of mission work at Houma and in the adjacent territory. In Houma he has a comfortable parsonage valued at $2000, with lots fronting 180 feet on each of two streets; has a good Sunday school, a splendid Woman's Home Mission Society; has now leased a large hall at the expense of the Conference Board of Missions, where he will carry on a number of lines of work. His work is highly thought of by Catholics as well as Protestants; the City Council, largely composed of Catholics, having recently voted to grant him free electric light service during the year. Besides Houma, he has four other preaching points, two of which are organized churches, and all of which have good Sunday schools. In this work he will be assisted by a most consecrated native Frenchman, Anatole Martin, who is a licensed exhorter. . . . The General Board of Missions has made an appropriation for new mission work in Lockport and the lower Lafourche country. Brother R. E. Martin will move to Lockport and undertake this work. He needs the earnest prayers and sympathy of the brethren. . . . Rev. Martin Hebert, who for years has been filled with evangelistic zeal for the salvation of the French speaking people in south Louisiana, has entered upon another year of work on a circuit that includes regular preaching places in four or more parishes. It is expected that his work will be partly self-supporting this year. At Mermentau, where there is a recently organized church, there is a good Sunday school under the superintendence of Prof. R. A. Smith, who was so long identified with religious and educational work in north Louisiana. At this same place, though the membership is small, there is a financial system. . . . The entire district is largely missionary territory, and other points will be entered as rapidly as time and means and men permit.

NOTES FROM GRENADA.

The recent session of the North Mississippi Conference terminated the pastorate of Rev. W. W. Mitchell, who had been with this church four years. He had wrought well and left substantial fruits to show for his labors. During the quadrennium more than $4000 were spent in improvements on the church. An annex costing $2000 and containing Sunday school rooms and study and organ loft was completed and paid for the past year. A pipe organ costing $2200 was to have been installed in November, but owing to a delay at the factory is just now being erected. Brother Mitchell not only looks well after matters financial, but is an excellent preacher, making careful preparation for all his public utterances and delivering his message with earnestness and force. He leaves many friends in Grenada.

. . . . Rev. J. A. Hall, who comes to us from Winona, was already well known to many of the congregation by reason of his four years of ministry in our neighboring town. Perhaps no happier appointment could have been made at the present time. He has captivated all his hearers, made a good impression socially, and has started on his work with glowing prospects of success. The new study is being fitted up, needed furnishings placed in the parsonage, and there is manifest a spirit of enthusiasm in the church that augurs well for the future. The salary was fixed at $1500. . . . Grenada College could scarcely have a more pleasant session. Our teachers are cultured Christian women, taking the warmest interest in the welfare of our students. The students themselves are all church members, but nine, and all Methodists but seven. This gives us absolute freedom in all matters religious. We are of one faith and one mind. Our student body is homogeneous. We are as one family. In addition to our regular chapel exercises, we have the Y. W. C. A., a Foreign Missionary Society, three mission study classes, weekly prayer meeting on Wednesday evenings, and daily morning prayers, all conducted by the girls themselves. A handsome reading room has been furnished and set apart for the use of the students. It is well lighted, banked with flowers and ferns, supplied with wholesome books and leading magazines, and it is a popular place for the girl with a spare half-hour. The scholastic work is extremely satisfactory, most of our students having completed their preparatory work before entering here. . . . My heart is sometimes hungry for the pastorate, but when I look at these fine young girls and know that I have their love and confidence so that they are deeply impressed with the association and teaching that for four or five years will be closer and more continuous than even that of their parents, I rejoice in my work and am content—and more. The young women who are here sheltered in walls erected by the church, trained by teachers largely paid by the Church, and reading the church papers along with other literature, will not be in the way of the pastors when they return to their homes. God bless them and make them a blessing!—J. R. Countiss.

WOMAN PAST HELP.

Chandler, Okla.—In a letter from this place, Mrs. Ella Flowers says, "I hardly know how to thank you for the good that Cardui has done me. Before I tried Cardui, I thought I was past help, but after taking it, I was relieved at once, and gained at least 10 pounds. Everybody says I look so much better. I am still improving greatly." Many women are completely worn-out and discouraged, on account of womanly weakness. Are you? Have you not tried Cardui? It only needs a few doses to convince you that Cardui is just what you need. Try it to-day. It will cure your pains.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

Stops a Cough Quickly --Even Whooping Cough

A Whole Pint of the Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy for 50c. Money Refunded If It Fails.

If you have an obstinate, deep-seated cough, which refuses to be cured, get a 50-cent bottle of Pinex. mix it with home-made sugar syrup and start taking it. Inside of 24 hours your cough will be gone, or very nearly so. Even whooping-cough is quickly conquered in this way.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, gives you a pint—a family supply—of the finest cough remedy that money could buy, at a clear saving of $2. Very easy to prepare—full directions in package.

Pinex soothes and heals the inflamed membranes with remarkable rapidity. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative, and has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. Splendid for croup, asthma, bronchitis, throat tickle, chest pains, etc., and a thoroughly successful remedy for incipient lung troubles.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in gualiacol and other healing pine elements. It has often been imitated, though never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a pint bottle, and it is ready for use.

Anyone who tries Pinex will quickly understand why it is used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

JANUARY 28: ELISHA, THE HE-BREW COMMONER; A LIFE OF SAVING SERVICE.

(2 Kings ii. 19-22; Mark iii. 4.)

Two proverbs at once spring to our notice when we begin to study the career of Elisha. The first of these is, "God buries his workmen, but carries on his work;" the other is, "Mercy rejoices against judgment." These two principles seem to have one of their most emphatic illustrations in that to us strange providence that saw fit to follow the hard and startling mission of the great Tishbite by the gentle and loving ministry of the man from Abelmeholah. For the two men are essentially different in temper, in training, and in the triumph each achieved; and no less different are they in both the form and spirit of their messages to men. The one a denizen of the desert, flashing in upon his fellows with the suddenness and at times the fatality of the lightning's stroke, now dazing men with his weird splendor, or terrifying them by his awful power; the other a dweller in the places where men abound, gently glowing like the genial sunshine, radiating light and warmth and cheer and life to all who rightly relate themselves to him. Elijah we admire; Elisha we love. Elijah was God's answer to a time that needed judgment, and no braver heart ever spoke for righteousness; Elisha was God's answer to the needs of a period of reconstruction. Elijah is the great protestant, rebelling against tyranny and idolatry; Elisha is the great conservator, dedicating his life and genius to a ministry of saving service, and thus winning for himself that great encomium, the prophet of the commonplace. It is from this standpoint that we had better approach this truly great character and in pursuit of this object let us consider first

The Call of a Plowboy.

Certainly our first glimpse of Elisha is commonplace enough. An old field more or less rugged and ragged; twelve yoke of oxen pulling sturdily the rude plows of the time; twelve drivers urging on their beasts, fighting bravely the battle for food—this is all quite humdrum, a queer place for God to be in. It is hard for us even to find him in the furrows of the fields of life. We find toll there, and trouble too, much to disturb and some things to disgust. But who ever today hopes to find God in a corn field or a potato patch? But he was there in that field of Abelmeholah, and his eye was resting on the twelfth plowman. Had it gone down the line and was this boy that brought up the rear his last hope? At any rate, the word had already been passed to Elisha that he should anoint his successor. And who knows the bitter anguish of this stern old prophet's soul—the jolt to the pride of that fiery heart that had made Horeb itself wane before its inherent spiritual grandeur? Who knows the bitterness of the pill he had to take when he was called upon to fling his mantle over the shoulders of this fledgling of the field. From plowboy to prophet's place is quite a stride. And yet for the prophet God needs at this time there are some elements right at hand. Among the first is the fact of companionship. The previous regime had been one of spectacular invasion on the part of the prophet: this one is to be one of quiet persuasion; the call now is for a man who can live among men and in the daily performance of the drudgeries of life by his patient and kindly spirit be a constant reminder and inspiration to men of the everpresent grace and goodness of the living and loving God. And so God wanted the prophet that was at home with the plowmen, and upon Elisha's shoulders falls the mantle that none has borne more willingly nor winningly.

A Ministry of the Commonplace.

Turn we now to a brief consideration of the activity of this prophet of the commonplace. As he was discovered amid such an environment, so his long life and many labors never seem to escape the circumference of the common duties and tolls and tragedies or human life. He has no Carmel experience, no slaughter of foes to triumph in, no dramatic scenes in his life, no spectacular exit from the mortal sphere. All is made up of the small routines of ordinary experience, yet not gray nor dull, but ever glowing in the kindly light of heaven and ever enlivened by the best and sanest sense of earthly joy and good.

It is as unnecessary as it is impossible to narrate all the many incidents that brighten the pages of the prophet's history. Suffice it to summarize some of the salient features illustrated therein:

To begin with, we note the predominantly beneficent character of Elisha's deeds. Whether he is called upon to cure the poisoned waters of a spring or replenish the food supply of a preacher's widow, or give drink to thirsty armies, or feed a starving multitude, or cure a general, heathen though he be, of leprosy, or bring to life a mother's dead boy, or find a lost tool of a bewildered mechanic—no matter where we find Elisha, we find a spirit of individual and social service that marks a great forward movement in the advance of the kingdom.

Again we note, going along with this spirit of sacrificial service, an element of conscious dignity of his office which reminds us at times of the "spirit and power of Elijah," but which is not an element of discord in the character of Elisha, mild though as a rule his manner and method was. At times this flashes out in the curse called down upon those who would deride the prophet's office; it exclaims in the matter of the miracle of drink recorded in 2 Kings iii. 14: "Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look forward toward thee, nor see thee." It is manifested in the absolute lack of concern with which he meets all of Naaman's pomp and pride, simply sending his servant with the abrupt command: "Go take a bath." It meets the hypocrisy of a Gehazi in the rage of righteous indignation and in the scornful satire with which he scourges the villainy of a Jehu. These are the principles not antagonistic, but complementary to the dominant features; they do not mar, but make the total character.—Epworth Era.

Sunday School

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

"In the Master's Country"—(N. Tarbell—50c.) is a helpful and attractive book.

Put the Wesley Class finances on a dignified basis and make men in and outside the class respect the business organization as well as the religious and charity status of the men composing the class.

An Adult Class sent money to some half dozen sick and down and out men, toys to their babies and made them loving and helpful visits. Men, great men, on Christmas Sunday, did all these and more beautiful things for the sake of the babe born in Bethlehem of Judea.

The Kappa Sigma Pi boy movement is really interesting, founded as it is on strictly Bible lines. Vivid life and a little of the brotherhood feature makes it appealing to both boy and teacher. Mr. L. A. Rowley, Toledo, Ohio, will gladly answer any questions in regard to this matter.

The question of finances in the Adult Bible class has become a vital one and there is really no finer way to bring all into this department where what you give is returned unto you in 100 per cent measure, shaken down and overflowing than just here: If every member will promise, the first of the year, to give a stipulated amount (the best able $25, $10, $5 or even $1 a year) in a class with a medium membership, some $300 or $400 can be put in the treasury at once and then the occasional and every Sunday collection be used for the Sunday school running expenses. Thus missionary, banquet, etc., expenses can be met without the mention of money in the class-room and collections will be easy.

Roosevelt says: "To do anything for the average man is necessary to begin before he is a man. The best chances of success lie in working with the boy and not the man." This is what is clever as well as very wise man calls a "waiting opportunity" and opportunity had had, heretofore, a proverbial and rather well-earned reputation for not wasting even a little space after her one knock on the door of a man's opening life. If the boy is a "waiting opportunity" he needs immediate attention, else he'll be soon grown up and so "set in his ways," that it will take a moral volcanic eruption to change him. A stray leaf blown carelessly across a Missouri street fell into the hands of an awkward, ideal-less overgrown boy; it contained the story of Joan of Arc. This fired Mark Twain's ambition, and incited in him the desire not only for literary expression, but to help those oppressed and down-trodden, and his name has been smiled round the world and Joan of Arc immortalized in his great book.

THE BIBLE ETERNAL.

Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton achieved reputation as one of the most penetrating and authoritative literary critics and artists of his day. In concluding a masterly delineation of the literary excellences of the King James Version of the Scriptures, he says:

"A great living savant has characterized the Bible as 'a collection of the rude imaginings of Syria,' 'the worn-out 'old bottle' of Judaism into which the generous 'new wine' of science is being poured.' The great savant was angry when he said so. The 'new wine' of science is a generous vintage, undoubtedly, and deserves all the respect it gets from us; so do those who make it and serve it out—they have so much intelligence; they are so honest and so fearless. But whatever may become of their 'wine' in a few years, when the wine-dealers shall have passed away, when the savant is forgotten as any stargazer of Chaldaea—the 'old bottle' is going to be older yet—the Bible is going to be eternal."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The religious press is one of the most important educational forces in the church. It has two primary functions. As a journal, it records the religious activities of civil society; as an educational agency, it appeals to public opinion from the standpoint of the great invisible law of conscience of right and wrong. The religious press not only plants moral principles, but nourishes the roots of sound public opinion.

The religious press filters theology into the popular mind. This is such a "practical" age that few men in the common walks of life study books of theology. This busy age depends, for the most part, on the religious press for condensed and vital, practical statements of the great doctrines of the Christian system, such as repentance, conversion, regeneration, sanctification, and the witness of the Spirit. The volume of scientific thought, the intricate but influential system of philosophy, the new and exuberant growths of pragmatism, the invasion of a new psychology, all combine to demand the attention and the interpretation of the religious press. There never was a time when the real need of the religious press was really so great, and there never was a time when there was so little popular demand for the religious press. The conditions which have driven the religious press out of the field have left moral desolation. Public opinion has been alienated and exploited and surfeited until it has no patience for solid, thoughtful reading.—California Christian Advocate.

WHEN I HAVE TIME.

When I have time, so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair,
When I have time.

When I have time, the friend I love so well
Shall know no more the weary, toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always;
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise,
When I have time.

When you have time the friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of all your sweet intent,
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content,
When you had time.

Now is the time. Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words, or cheer,
To those around whose lives are now so dear,
They may not meet you in the coming year.
Now is the time.

Editorial

"A ton of dreams will never weigh
Up to an ounce of fact;
A thousand aims fade quite away
Before a single act."

A writer in a current periodical says: "One who thinks for himself imagines that no one ever traveled that road before. But if he takes the trouble to look back, he will find the footprints of others along the way." Quite true. Most so-called originality is merely relative—re-discovering what others before had learned. It is given to but few to be real pioneers in the wide-reaching fields of thoughts.

A contributor to the Baptist Record, the official organ of the Baptists of Mississippi, heads his communication, "To Pastorless Churches." Such an article would be wholly out of place in a Methodist periodical. Unshepherded congregations are unknown among us. In all our territory from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there is no such thing as a "pastorless church." This is a fact which Methodists disaffected with our Church government would do well to reflect upon.

When the shadows gather above the Christian and his earthly pathway looks dark and dreary, it is well for him to think much of what God has prepared for those who love him. Abraham, when a homeless wanderer, "looked for the city which hath foundations;" Moses had "respect unto the recompense of the reward;" Paul, in the darkness of a Roman dungeon, was inspired by the prospect of the crown of righteousness awaiting him at the last day; and of our Lord himself, it is written, "For the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross, despising the shame." For the followers of Christ the future is radiant with promise, and the weary, foot-sore pilgrim may properly comfort himself with the reflection that heaven and home and his Lord and loved ones await him at the journey's end.

"The hope that we shall see that day Should chase our present griefs away."

John the Baptist cried, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Some one has characterized this majestic man, as the great witness, as "a sign-board pointing the people to Christ." And is not this the mission of every true disciple? The Master said to his first followers, "Ye are my witnesses." Having found the Lord, it is our highest duty to help others to find him. One of the crying needs of the Church to-day is for the rank and file of its membership to set themselves to the task of seeking the lost and bringing them to him who alone has the power to save them. Faithful preaching, followed by faithful personal work, will not fail to yield gracious results. The public ministry of the Word is indispensable, but as Bishop Quayle has said, "It is the house-to-house canvass, the still, silent, daily hunt for souls, that brings in the returns."

OUR INVISIBLE CO-WORKER.

It is man's disposition to forget God as a co-worker and to rely upon his own strength in seeking to discharge the tasks devolving upon him. This is unfortunate, because the world's work is too vast and difficult for human instrumentalities alone to accomplish. In the complex affairs of life we can achieve success only as God works with us. The Infinite One is the invisible and silent partner, but he is the chief partner; and the extent to which he is recognized and enlisted is the true measure of achievement in all our moral and religious undertakings. The Master said: "Without me ye can do nothing." And over against this, the greatest of the Apostles said: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Man, toiling alone, though he may imagine he is strong, is weakness itself; but laboring together with God and leaning upon him, man's impotence is re-enforced by omnipotence.

Even in the physical world we can achieve only as we have the gracious assistance of the divine hand. The husbandman may upturn the soil and sow the seed, but what would that amount to without the moisture and the sunshine? It was God who hung in the heavens the great luminary that gives light and heat to the earth, and who keeps perpetually burning its inexhaustible fires. It is in obedience to the voice of Deity that the clouds gather on the horizon, march their battalions through the skies, and, amid the thunder and lightning, send down the early and the latter rain. The life-germ itself that springs from beneath the sod, that waves in the verdant stalk, and that finally produces the hundred-fold harvest to requite the laborer's toil, is the gift of our benevolent but unseen Creator. God not only made all things, but by him all things consist, all things are upheld. It is quite as much a miracle to maintain the universe, as it was to bring it into being. Were God to withhold his conserving power, universal ruin would swiftly follow. Our planet, instead of being a mighty cradle of life, would become a vast sepulcher of the dead—unless it, too, with the race should perish. The prophecy of the great English bard, spoken through the lips of Prospero, would possibly be fulfilled—

"The cloud-tapped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which inherit it, shall dissolve;
And, like an insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind."

But it is not only in the physical world that man is dependent upon God for his life and achievements; he is equally dependent upon him in the realm of the moral and spiritual. No truth is more plainly taught in Holy Writ than that it is only as we abide in Christ that we can live spiritually and bear fruit to the honor and glory of our Lord. And when we seek to bless and uplift others we are effective in the work only as the Holy Spirit dwells in us and co-operates with us. Without his presence and power, no human agency is adequate to the task of soul-winning. Learning, eloquence, personal effort, and the dispensing of philanthropy are all alike unavailing. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but God alone can give the increase. The two essential requisites of success in laboring to extend the Kingdom are to find the Lord, and then to keep ever in harmony and touch with him. The dying Wesley was altogether right, when in reflecting upon the possessions of the infant Church that he had founded, he exclaimed, "The best of all, God is with us!"

This leads us to ask the question, Is not the Church depending too little upon God in her plans and operations to-day? Are not the strength and resources of her silent and invisible Partner taken too little into account in striving to carry forward her widely extended battle lines? To be sure, she should press into service every available human agency and strive to improve and perfect her methods of work; but it is folly itself to forget that her main reliance is the power of him who said, "On this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. This liability to forget God and depend upon other things is a far graver danger than many imagine. In the physical realm God co-operates with man, whether his assistance is sought or not. The sun shines alike on the growing crop of the good man and the bad man; it rains upon the maturing harvests of both the just and the unjust. But in the spiritual realm it is not so. There God works only with those who feel the need of him and look constantly to him for help. Those who are negligent of him and who proceed without him, he leaves to their own puny strength. This is the explanation of the Pauline philosophy, "When I am weak, then am I strong." When the Church is in conscious touch with her ascended Lord, she is invincible; but when that contact is broken, though she may have worldly wealth, prestige and influence, defeat and disaster await her. It is not States alone which are menaced by large material prosperity. The lesson is written plainly upon the pages of history that the day of ease and peace and plenty is the day of peril in Zion. At this time when there is so much glitter and show in the religious world, we may well meditate upon the significant words of Kipling:

"The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart:
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet
Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

The expression, "an aristocracy of efficiency," sounds well, but a far better thing is the aristocracy of service. A man may have capacity and yet fail to turn it to account. The Master pointed out the only path to true greatness when he said: "And whosoever would be chief among you, let him be your servant."

"It is hard for men to learn by the experience of others. They insist on going through the sorrowful experience themselves. But lessons learned from experience are God's plan for softening our hearts into sympathy with others."

A YEAR OF RELIGION.

How could the year 1912 be made more memorable than in devoting it to the welfare of souls? A year given to hungering after the transcendental world, to much prayer, to experience meetings on the part of all Christians, particularly those of our household, would mean a new world. If the year 1912 could be famed for its prayers, for its realizations of a present Christ, for the passion for going out for souls for whom the Savior shed his blood, what would it not mean for our homes, our laws, our colleges, our missions, our land, the world? The great need this new year is the religion of the soul.—Central Christian Advocate.

WESLEY'S METHODS AND PREACHING.

The great revival was by this time in full progress, and even at this early stage two concurrent and parallel lines of work are visible in it. One is aggressive and consists of a great chain of preaching services stretching through the whole of Wesley's lifetime, and covering three kingdoms. The other is conservative, and is represented by the tiny societies which were formed everywhere, and within whose sheltering curves the new converts were gathered.

Wesley's supreme instrument was preaching. He used other forces, he built schools, he organized societies, he published books, he waged great controversies, he was tireless in correspondence and conversation. But not literature, or controversy, or personal influence is Wesley's trusted and most effective instrument. First and last the movement Wesley represents is the revival on an unprecedented scale, and with unprecedented effects, of the office and work of the preacher. "It pleased God," wrote Paul, as the spokesman of the earliest Christian generation, "by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." And in Wesley's movement Christianity simply reverted to its first and greatest instrument of power.

But the preaching of the new movement, as we have seen, broke away from traditional forms. It was open-air preaching, not imprisoned in stone walls. It was itinerant preaching, not confined to fixed spots. It took three kingdoms for its field. It turned aside from the drowsy hand-fuls in the churches, and sought with eager pity the forgotten multitudes outside them, fast drifting into a worse heresim than that which lay on the British soil before Augustine landed. Instead of the pulpit the preachers of the great revival took the hill-side, the market-place, the village green, the stone city lane; wherever men would listen there they delivered their message.

And the new conditions created new methods. The decorous platitudes of drowsy divines, mumbled to nodding congregations, gave place to the living speech of living men; of men with a message, who felt themselves to be the direct spokesmen of the Spirit of God. If Wesley and his comrades had not been thrust out of the churches, the essential genius of the movement, the nature of the work to be done, the methods necessary for its accomplishment, would have taken them out. The ancient channels through which truth ran were narrow at best, and they had become fatally clogged. No current could stir in them. New channels must be opened; new forces called into exercise; new classes reached. So at its very first step the great revival breaks out of existing ecclesiastical boundaries. It betakes itself to the busy street, the wind-swept moors, wherever men and women for whom a Christ died could be gathered. This was preaching as the first Christian century knew it.

And Wesley quickly became the commanding figure in the new crusade. He lacked some of Whitefield's special gifts as an orator, yet he somehow was as successful in open-air preaching as even his great comrade; and he brought to the work more orderly plans, and a more concentrated purpose, than even Whitefield.

What was the secret of Wesley's power as a preacher? In many respects it might be imagined that he was the last man to sway an eighteenth-century crowd. He was a gentleman by birth and habit, a scholar by training, a man of fine and almost fastidious taste, with an Englishman's easy dislike of emotion, and a High Churchman's hatred of irregularity. He had little imagination and no descriptive power. He told no anecdotes, as a rule, and certainly fired off no jests. What fitness had he to talk to peasants, to miners, to the rabble of the city, to the slow-thinking farmer drawn from his plough-tail?

Yet he stood up, a little, trim, symmetrical figure; his smooth black hair exactly parted; his complexion clear and pure as that of a girl; his hazel eyes flashing like points of steel. And beneath his words the crowd was melted and subdued until it resembled a routed army shaken with fear and broken with emotion; men and women not seldom falling to the ground in a passion of distress. His voice had no trumpet notes; but it was clear as a silver flute, and ran across the wandering crowd to its farthest verge.

There was undoubtedly something of prophetic-like force in Wesley's preaching. He drew his inspiration from far-off realms. His printed sermons are only the bones of his spoken discourses, and they are commonly as dry as bones, though they have something of a Mastodon-like scale. But his spiritual insight was hardly less than terrible. He seemed to see into men's souls; to put his finger upon the hidden sin, the unconfessed fear. He had the power of making each feel as though he talked to him alone. And there was something in his discourse—a note in his voice, a flash in his eye—that thrilled the crowd with awe, awe that not seldom deepened into dread. The mood of the speaker was one of perfect calmness. But it was the calm of power, of certainty, of an authority which ran back into the spiritual world. Nelson gives perhaps the best picture of Wesley as a preacher. He says:

"Mr. Whitefield was to me as a man who could play well on an instrument, for his preaching was pleasant to me, and I loved the man; so that if any one offered to disturb him, I was ready to fight for him. But I did not understand him. I was like a wandering bird cast out of its nest until John Wesley came to preach his first sermon at Moorefields. . . . As soon as he got upon the stand, he stroked his hair and turned his face toward where I stood, and, I thought, fixed his eyes upon me. His countenance fixed such an awful dread upon me, before I heard him speak, that it made my heart beat like the pendulum of a clock; and when he did speak I thought the whole discourse was aimed at me. When he had done I said, 'This man can tell the secrets of my heart; he hath not left me there; for he hath showed me the remedy, even the blood of Jesus. I thought he spoke to no one but me, and I durst not look up, for I imagined all the people were looking at me. . . . But before Mr Wesley concluded his sermon he cried out, "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God for he will abundantly pardon." I said, "If this be true, I will turn to God to-day."'

Who can wonder that a preacher with this strange power could shake the hearts of multitudes, and stamp himself upon the imagination of the three kingdoms? . . . The truth is, Wesley saw with Dante-like vision, and had the power to make others see that supreme fact of the spiritual world, the close relation in which the human soul stands to God; how near God is to man; in what relation man's sin stands to God's purity; man's need to God's pity, and all man's acts to God's judgment. So from the dim, remote, far-off spaces of the heavens, God appeared to Wesley's hearers, a Figure loving and awful, and above all, at the very touch.—Dr. W. H. Fitchett, in Wesley and His Century.

EDITING AND MANAGING A CHURCH PAPER.

The writer has had nearly three years' experience in editing and managing a Church paper. If every preacher could have as much as three years in the duties and responsibilities of running a Church paper it would bring a great change upon our Zion in regard to the circulation of Church literature. One of the most illuminating articles we have ever seen in print was the nineteen years' experience of Mr. Frank Leslie who has been connected with the publication of the Alabama Christian Advocate. He certainly throws on the lights and shadows of the Church paper business. This proposition of the publication of Church papers has to be met and settled very soon in our Church. It is the most important arm of our service. If you were to take the instrumentalities we now employ, and begin to eliminate them one by one, the Church paper would be among the last to be disposed of.

Indispensable.

It is indispensable in our Christian work, and in our organized Church work. There is no other way as effective as it is in putting any religious cause before the people, and yet we are more inconsistent in our treatment of this great agency than in anything else connected with our Church work. If we are providing for a school, we have text books and books of reference, in the hands of every student or pupil; if we provide for a Sunday school, we put a lesson quarterly and a Sunday school paper into the hands of every person connected with it; if we hold a church service, we put a hymn book in the hands of every worshiper; if the Board of Stewards is alive and up-to-date, it puts an envelope in the hands of every contributor; but when it comes to the Church paper, only one family in seven has a Church paper in the home! We undertake to say that the pastors and officers of a church can better do without song books, insurance, Sunday school papers, and many other things combined, than to be without the Church paper.

Economy.

It would be the greatest economic movement our Church leaders could engage in, to put the Church periodicals in the hands of all of our people. It would at once swell all our collections, put a new spirit into our people, assure the success of all our education and missionary enterprises, and promote a spiritual revival throughout our whole connection.

Our brethren of the Laymen's Movement are trying to get a list of all the lay leaders of Southern Methodism. How will they appeal to them after they get their names? They will have to go to the trouble and expense of writing to many of them, whereas if they all took the Church paper one message in each conference territory would reach them all the same week.

A general in command of an army would be foolish to be content with no way to reach six out of seven of his soldiers. All our appeals, messages, reports, communications, accounts of great gatherings, plans for forward movements, only reach one family in seven connected with our Church. Yet the Church paper is more effective with those it reaches, than is preaching or pastoral visiting, because it possesses more variety and works with more frequency and regularity than is possible with any other agency. The paper has a variety of talent in its productions, and covers a field wider than is possible for any one man to be and to do. No pastor could speak with so many tongues every week as the paper can, and it makes a visit to every home on its list every week.

To the Pastors.

You say you desire the prosperity of your pastoral charge. It is hard for you to make others believe that, when you fail to employ one of the most effective agencies and helpers known to the pastor, the Church paper. If you had a Church paper in every home, it would make all your arguments, pleas, announcements regarding plans and enterprises, fifty-two times a year in every family, and make some of them stronger than you could.

To the Officers of the Church.

Brethren, do you not think it is as essential to have the Church paper in every family, as it is to have a pastor in the pulpit, a janitor for the church, an envelope and hymn book for every member? The paper could make your pleas for larger liberality, more loyalty, more co-operation, much better than you can. It is always at it, and with many tongues. You may think you have many problems, but the one great pressing problem is the enlightening and arousing of our people, and the best possible agency with which to do these things is the Church paper.

To discourage, even to literally wear out and kill the editors and managers of our Church papers, is not so disastrous as to leave our people without literature. Bishop Kilgo said he would take the Church paper to acquaint his children with the names of the saints of the Church, if for no other reason.—Dr. E. G. Mann, in the Central Methodist Advocate.

THE REV. CLARENCE V. T. RICHESON AND EVIL THINKING.

By Rev. J. H. Bell.

The awful plight in which the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson finds himself, a self-confessed murderer, is only another demonstration of the truthfulness of the psychological principle, that we become like unto that about which we habitually think. Richeson may have been a hypocrite; he may have been a wolf in sheep's clothing and may have been depraved all his life; but I believe that he entered the ministry with an honest purpose to do the will of God, finally becoming a victim of his evil thoughts. Instead of being master of his mind, he allowed his mind to master him. One day an evil thought crept in and found room in his brain, then, doubtless, good and evil had a great battle for supremacy. Evil thoughts, reinforced by passion, drove out all the good and bound the soul of the man with the shackles of sin. Blinded by evil passion, a thousand wicked thoughts then probably took possession of his soul, and thus he was led on, not only to rob an innocent young woman of her most precious jewel and finally to send the soul of his victim into the presence of God, possibly unprepared, but to sink his own soul into the depth of despair.

From this terrible tragedy we may get an object lesson, namely: that evil thoughts, allowed to make their abode in the brain, will ultimately destroy character, and may lead the individual to commit grave crimes against the laws of man and God.

If this be true, and it is, then there is nothing that we should seek with greater earnestness than the discipline of the mind and the training of the heart. The Jews 3000 years ago grasped the significance of this fact when they made as the central code of their law these words: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy mind." And the Lord Jesus Christ spoke exactly the same truth when He said: "This is the first and greatest commandment."

Some modern writers say that thoughts are things; that they are forces, the most powerful and vital in the universe; that they have form, substance and power. One writer declares that we shall ultimately find, as we are beginning to see, that practically all disease has its origin in perverted mental thought. Anger, hatred, jealousy, each have their peculiar poisoning effect. If that be so, if you hate a person, you really suffer more than the person hated. Lecturing on the microbes of disease, a learned doctor said: "This is the age of microbes." He further said that "certain forms of bacteria will settle upon a certain organ and will secrete a poison which will become the basis of disease. Now, if I may use the illustration, in precisely the same way do evil thoughts affect the life in which they are allowed to dwell. You cannot harbor an evil thought without its becoming a parasite. Every doctor and trained nurse recognizes the power of thought upon the patient's recovery or otherwise. It is the recognition of this fact that lies at the base of Christian Science. It is part of the teaching of the New Testament and of modern psychology, and a teaching, I fear, that the Christian Church has too much neglected. We are beginning to see that thought has a great influence upon our moral health and character. What is permitted to dwell in your mind eventually affects character as an act, and it is because of this that the care of the mind means so much to us.

Really we are not defeated when we have sinned. The point of our defeat is where we allowed the sinful thought to enter our mind and stay there. Our sin is only the outward and visible expression of the defeat that has taken place in our souls, maybe hours or days or weeks ago. Richeson did not lose the battle when he broke the laws of society, or when he murdered that young woman. The battle was lost to him months before, when he allowed an evil suggestion to take possession of him. Just where Richeson lost his grip on himself, other men have lost or are losing the mastery of their souls.

What pity that ministers of the gospel should be included in this vast number. It is a great tragedy when any man loses his spiritual balance. But when a man clothed with the authority of the Church to proclaim God's word, yields to lust, it is enough, if it were possible, to cause the angels to drape the throne of God with mourning and make the devil in hell leap with joy. And again, it is a great pity that the Church and the ministry should suffer because of the downfall of a preacher. The irreligious and anti-religious will draw an indictment against the Church and the ministry from the facts revealed in the Richeson case. The devils in hell will have it as a sweet morsel.

Listen, my brother preacher: let us take a lesson from this and remember that evil thoughts will ruin us, as well as any other man. How many preachers of your own observation have been victims of evil thinking. It is not necessary that a preacher be charged with immorality before he loses his influence and power to preach. Therefore, our Lord says: (Matt. 16:41): "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation, the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." When we pursue the pages of history, sacred or profane, we find that so many even good and strong men have had their lives weakened, if not ruined, by the influence of evil thoughts. Therefore, it behooves us all to heed the counsel of Paul to the Corinthians: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong."

In his morning talks, at the North Mississippi Conference just held at Macon, among other things, Bishop Candler said, in substance, that one of the greatest tragedies enacted in human experience, is a preacher standing before his people, "dead," stripped of all his power to proclaim the gospel. What an awful spectacle was this man Richeson, standing before his people with these evil thoughts in his mind. Yet this tragedy is no more repulsive to the Lord, than it would be for you or me to poison our souls with anger, hatred, jealousy, malice, enviousness, lust, or a thousand other things that I might mention, and then undertake to preach. We cannot win souls for Jesus as long as we harbor evil thoughts, nor can we lead others to think on the things that are honest and just, until we are masters of our own thoughts.

Was it not Luther who said: "You cannot prevent a bird from flying over head, but you can prevent it from alighting and building its nest in your hair." Yes, we can do that. We cannot prevent the evil thought from coming, but we can refuse it house room. It is the type of thought you permit to dwell in your mind that transforms your soul. Therefore, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

Poor Richeson, (if I may pity him) is the victim of an evil thought, that poisoned his soul, destroyed his character and made him a fiend. He may pay the penalty in the electric chair for his shocking crime, but he will still live to be judged for the horrible deeds done in his body.

Finally, my brethren, let us continue to watch as well as pray and flee from an evil thought as we would from a poisonous reptile.

The last time Lord Rosebery went to see Mr. Gladstone, in his illness, the last words of the great statesman were these: "Rosebery, mind your soul, mind your soul." And may the Lord help us so to do. For He has said: "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

Black Hawk, Miss.

PERSONAL EVANGELISM.

Rev. Jno. A. Rice, D. D., of Texas, says that sixty men in his congregation are pledged to personal evangelism. Another pastor reports every member of his official board pledged to the same thing. We congratulate these fortunate pastors, and the laymen who have thus taken up personal work for the Master. This is the only way possible to bring the unsaved of our country to Christ, to bring the unsaved of all nations to him. The regular preaching of pastors, and the special work of evangelists will be efficient but not sufficient. It is a physical impossibility for the preachers to reach all the unsaved millions of souls. We need to increase the working force of the Church of God. * * * Brethren of the ministry, look carefully among your people for personal workers. The harvest is ripe. We should have services in all our churches in the country and towns every Sunday, and we need hundreds of people to be on the lookout for souls privately, as well as speaking to them in public.—Central Methodist Advocate.

THE TROUBLE WITH PRECIOUS.

In a small cabin near Grenada College there lives with his family a strapping six foot Negro whose cognomen is Cain. His mother gave him the euphonious, but to me impossible, praenomen—Precious Cain. Recently the aforesaid Precious has been seriously ill. Passing the cabin, I inquired of his wife the nature of his illness. She replied, "I dunno, sir, but de doctor say he got indigestion o' de brain."

This discovery may not be in line with medical science, but I am sure that every pedagogue in the land will hail it with great joy. We have thought perhaps certain of our pupils were born tired and had a relapse, that they were in the incipient stages of sleeping sickness, or had become infected with the hook-worm disease, but now we need no longer be in doubt—they have indigestion of the brain. Long live the doctor who can cure it, and may his prescription become known to all of us who have undertaken to teach.

J. R. COUNTISS.

A HOPEFUL HEART.

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
O'er rough or smooth, the journey will be joy.
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure, and a crown.
My heart will keep the courage of the quest.
And hope the road's last turn will be the best.

At Fulton, Ky., where Dr. W. T. Bolling is pastor, an interesting revival is being conducted by Dr. J. L. Weber of Jackson, Tenn.

Bishop F. M. Bristol was operated on for appendicitis at Callao, Peru, a few days since. The outlook for his recovery is thought to be favorable.

The Trinity M. E. Church, South, at Los Angeles, of which Rev. R. P. Howell is pastor, is planning to erect a new house of worship to cost $200,000.

Bishop W. F. McDowell is writing a series of "Letters to Men" in the Adult Bible Class Monthly of his Church. Whether he uses his pen or tongue, this chief pastor always give a message that is worth considering.

After a stirring sermon by Rev. George R. Stuart in the Chattanooga Auditorium on a recent Sunday afternoon, it is said that two hundred men stood up for prayer, and that seventy-five made a public profession of faith.

The Baptists of Mississippi are reported to have raised for missions last year $37,575. They have been asked this year to raise at least $38,000, and some of their leaders are urging that an effort be made to reach the $40,000 mark.

In response to an invitation from the City Church Extension Board, Bishop Candier recently spent a Sabbath in Chattanooga, where he rendered valuable service. Methodism seems to be forging forward in that important center.

Bishop J. M. Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is reported to be gaining in physical vigor. The autobiography of this noble veteran, which has been appearing in the Western Christian Advocate for several months, will be re-published in the Northwestern Advocate.

The Baptists (North) have succeeded in raising $200,000 to meet an offer of $50,000 for the establishment of an endowment fund for aged and infirm ministers. Though well to the front in many kinds of Christian work, the Baptists have lagged in the tasks of parsonage-building and providing for their worn-out preachers.

In a recent communication to the Texas Christian Advocate, Prof. W. R. Webb of Bell Buckle, Tenn., says: "If I were called upon to designate the most useful, the most learned, the most devout minister of my acquaintance, I would name Dr. Tillett." This is high praise for the distinguished Dean of the Vanderbilt Theological faculty.

It is stated that the Christian Endeavor Society has received more than 1,000,000 new members within the past two years. Nearly 25,000 of this organization are said to belong to the Tenth Legion, i. e., they are titans. The movement for the closing of postoffices on Sunday and for the suppression of prize fight cinematographs are reported to have been started by the Endeavorers.

The Midland Methodist says: "Dr. T. W. Lewis has made good at First Church, Memphis. He preaches to great congregations what many call great sermons. Dr. Lewis is the 'marrying preacher' of the Memphis Conference. There is scarcely an issue of the Commercial Appeal that does not contain the notice of a marriage ceremony performed by him."

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is now twenty-five years old. It began in a tent, but now has advantageous quarters, its present assets amounting to about $750,000. The attendance of students upon it last year was in excess of 700, and the graduating class numbered 112. Along with other agencies that he created, this noble institution is helping to perpetuate the influence of the great evangelist.

After a year of notably successful work, Rev.

Edward F. Ley has retired from the tripod of the Florida Christian Advocate. He has been succeeded by Rev. D. B. Sweat, who has made a good beginning. We wish for the new editor a useful career in the field of journalism. We scarcely dare to wish him a happy one. There are too many thorns in the editorial path for that. But they are not unmingled with flowers.

The Roman Catholic Church is represented as being opposed to the placing of Bibles in the Hotels of the United States by the Gideons. The San Francisco Monitor, which is anti-Protestant, thus refers to this work: "The idea is all right, but the books are not. They are spurious editions of the Holy Scriptures. Throw them out." The Romish Church was probably never more wide awake and aggressive in America than it is to-day.

A church built of tin cans is something new under the sun. This unique structure is at Vaughan, New Mexico. Wood is very scarce thereabout, but near-by is a quarry, where a great deal of powder is used for blasting. Not being able to provide any other kind of building material for the needed house of worship, the powder cans were carefully saved until there were enough on hand to construct the walls. This is an admirable illustration of the old aphorism, "Where there is a will, there is a way."

The Conference collections for foreign missions have, within recent years, steadily advanced in the Virginia Conference as is shown by the following figures: 1907, $25,000; 1908, $34,000; 1909, $51,000; 1910, $57,000; and it is thought that this year the amount may reach $65,000. This Conference supports a missionary secretary, who gives his entire time to the work. Mr. Southgate, a young Norfolk commission merchant who is said to do a $10,000,000 business annually, is the lay leader. This busy man is reported to have made the following record during the past year: miles traveled, 7,317; addresses made in churches, 64; pieces of literature mailed, 5,801. Evidently Mr. Southgate does not consider his office a merely nominal one.

An English couple, both rampant supporters of the woman suffrage movement, reported to the Rev. Hugh Chapman, chaplain of the Royal Savoy, to be married a few days since, and demanded that the word "obey" should be omitted from the ceremony. But having previously consulted eminent counsel, the minister informed them that under British law such an omission would invalidate the marriage. They then waived their objection and were made man and wife. But we dare say that Cupid's triumph will be of brief duration. When the suffragettes are aroused, they generally wage a warfare that is Punic in its continuity. Britain's time-honored coronation oath recently underwent modification, and it is likely that a similar fate will soon overtake the historic marriage service of the Established Church.

NOTES FROM THE NEWTON DISTRICT.

On Jan. 13 and 14 I was in Laurel, Miss. I found it no trouble to keep cool, for I think the thermometer went lower Saturday morning, the 13th, than it has been since February, 1899. Some progress is being made on the new church building at First Church, but it is not rising rapidly because of the inclement weather. I was greeted by a large and appreciative audience Sunday morning, and the report of the stewards to the quarterly conference revealed that they are inaugurating a better financial system than they have had before. The Sunday school prospers. There were 123 present Sunday morning. The Epworth Leagues are very active. In addition to the local work they are doing, which is extensive, they are doing special work for the Cuban Mission.

Doctor and Sister Weems report that the people have expressed their delight at their return in many substantial ways.

At Kingston, I found Brother Golden and his official board planning wisely for the work of the new year. Last year they paid off all of the outstanding debt on the parsonage, paid more on the benevolences of the church than ever before, and lacked but little paying the pastor's salary in full.

Brother McClellan and his board of stewards at Sixth Street are planning to make this the best year in the history of Sixth Street, hitherto. The Senior Epworth League of this church has assumed the foreign mission assessment of the church.

Monday morning, the 15th inst., I had the privilege of baptizing Clara and Lois McClellan (Clara, the 2-year-old, and Lois, the 4-months-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. F. McClellan). May a kind Providence watch over the lives of these little girls, and develop in them faith like unto that which dwelt in the grandmother of Timothy and make them powerful among the forces of the heavenly kingdom.

T. J. O'NEIL, P. E.

PRECIOUSNESS OF THE SOUL.

It was one of Mr. Moody's very often wise and beautiful remarks that God's business is not to be done wholesale. Christ's greatest utterances were delivered to congregations of one or two. Christ's business is not to be done wholesale. And you never do Christ's business in this world unless you are able to think of a human soul as so precious that it would be worth sacrificing anything to save that single person. When you see a very beautiful soul, and when you come into close contact with one that is really cleansed and strong and loving and helpful, then you form some idea of what a human being is.—R. F. Horton, D.D.

"THE PREACHERS' LIBRARY."

In October last year we advertised to give free 12 back copies of the Preachers' Library with each year's subscription. We found such a demand for the back copies that our supply soon ran out. We decided to complete all of our back issues and print and bind them in a large double-column completely indexed book. We began the work and seeing it would make such a large book, we decided to make two large books. The first one is now printed and bound, containing about 300 sermon outlines by scores of the leading preachers of the world. They are Revival and Special Sermons. We are arranging the copy for the second large book. We give these two books free with a year's subscription to the Preachers' Library. The Preachers' Library contains an average of more than 35 choice Revival sermons and sermon outlines each month. Send us $1 for a year's subscription to the Preachers' Library and you will receive the two books free and a copy of the Preachers' Library each month for a year. If you are not pleased, we will refund your $1.

The one large book of sermons now ready will be mailed you as soon as we receive your order. In all, during the year, you receive some 1500 sermons and outline sermons. They are the cream of Revival and Special Sermons of modern times by the world's greatest preachers. Address The Co-Operative Publishing Co., East St. Louis, Ill.

The wealth of the Rothchilds is put at $2,000,000,000. This is four times that of the Rockefellers. At 4 per cent the yearly income from the present Rothchild fortune would be $80,000,000.

The women of Virginia have just lost a long, hard fight for the ballot before the State Legislature, now in session at Richmond. They announce that the fight is but begun, and that they will be better organized and meet the issue with increased strength before the next legislature.

The Census Bureau has issued a report showing how many bales of cotton were ginned during the year ending January 16. The total is 14,510,676. Of this amount, Mississippi reports 1,057,094 bales, and Louisiana 357,393. Texas ranks first with 3,964,264 bales, and Georgia a close second with 2,657,639.

On January 22 the United Mine Workers in session at Indianapolis, Ind., voted to alter their constitution in such a way as to make it possible for them to go on record as favoring the Socialist party. This is but one of the series of the many victories the Socialists are winning among the laboring classes.

Perhaps one of the greatest engineering feats of modern times is the building of the Florida East Coast Railroad. The entire length of the road over the sea is 156 miles. At one place it spans the ocean for seven miles. The seven mile viaduct has 136 arches, and will stand as a marvel to engineers for years to come.

Six States grant women the privilege of voting for President of the United States. These are California, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Washington and Wyoming. In the six States there are nearly a million women eligible to the ballot. Thus woman will have some little say as to who shall be the next President of the United States.

James T. Harrahan, former president of the Illinois Central Railroad was killed in a wreck on that road in Illinois last week. He was a self-made man and was easily one of the foremost men in railroad circles. It was a tragic death, considering that he died at the hands of the institution that he lived to make. Harrahan, La., at which place are located the Illinois Central shops, was named in his honor.

Hon. Charles J. Bonaparte, President Roosevelt's attorney general, together with other prominent men, has petitioned Congress to pass a law making illegal the use of the phrase "so help me God" in all oaths, and offering as a substitute, "In the presence of Almighty God, I do solemnly promise." Senator Burton presented the memorial to the Senate, and introduced a bill to put it into effect. We can readily see why the great Solons see the incongruity of appending a prayer to the character of oaths that are assumed in our courts in this age.

Dr. Cook, the erstwhile North Pole discoverer attempted to lecture in Richmond, Va., recently and met a North-pole freeze out. The audience was not. The profit on the lecture was not, and now the society under whose management the lecture was given is begging the city to refund the money it paid for use of the hall. "You can humbug all the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, but you can't humbug all the people all the time," is a proverb that Dr. Cook should ponder.

On January 25 the New York State parole board granted a release to Edward E. Grimmell, a man who was serving a nine-year sentence for burglary. In March, 1911, physicians operated on Grimmell, altering the shape of his skull as a test of the theory that criminals can be cured by an operation. The man claims that since the operation all the impulses of his life have been changed, and that he now feels a deep desire to be a gentleman and an honest citizen. He claims that all criminal desires have been taken away.

At the recent primary held in Louisiana, the following State officers were nominated: Jos. Ransdell, United States Senator; T. C. Barret, Lieutenant Governor; A. E. Hebert, Secretary of State; Paul Capdevielle, Auditor; Mr. Smith, Treasurer; R. G. Pleasant, Attorney General; Fred Grace, Registrar of the Land office, and E. O. Bruner, Commissioner of Agriculture. Hon. J. T. Michel and J. Y. Sanders have declined to enter a second primary and Judge L. E. Hall thus becomes the nominee for Governor and Hon. R. F. Broussard the nominee for United States Senator for the 1915 term.

On January 23 a mob of 100 men broke into the jail at Hamilton, Ga., and took four negroes out and hung them to trees three miles from town. After the victims were suspended from the trees more than 300 shots were fired into their lifeless bodies. The crime of which the negroes were accused is said to have been the murder of one white man, who received but one bullet wound. The victims are represented as merely suspects, and one of them was a woman. There is said to be a bare possibility that one of the accused negroes is a murderer—all may be accomplices; but one thing is certain, and that is, every one of the 100 men in the mob is guilty of the high crime of taking human life. When will our fair Southland take steps to wash her hands of such lawlessness by making examples of those who participate in mobs?

MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S CITY MISSION BOARD.

On Wednesday, January 24, the Woman's City Mission Board held an interesting meeting at St. Mark's Hall, with Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, the newly-elected president, in the chair. Among those present were Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and the three ministers leading in the new missionary movement in the city—Dr. J. M. Moore, Rev. C. C. Selecman, and Rev. W. E. Thomas. The session was also favored with the attendance of two most welcome visitors: Mrs. Christian Keener, and Mrs. Nellie Nugent Somerville of Greenville, Miss., who is widely known as a leader in mission work.

The main feature of the meeting was the account given of their work by the officers and employees of the Board. Particularly interesting was that of Mrs. John B. Parker, who affirmed that, though there is still room for great improvement in the operations of the Board, there is reason for encouragement because of what has been accomplished. She said there are 360 members of the Missionary Societies in New Orleans, out of an estimated church membership of 1305 women; that First Church leads with a membership of 70, and that 93 members take the Missionary Voice, the Rayne Memorial organization subscribing for the largest number. The following statistics were announced: Number of leaflets distributed, 1835; visits to sick and strangers, 1623 (of which First Church recorded 1042, an average of fourteen for the year for each member of its Society); amount sent to the Conference treasurer, $378.24; contributed to the local work, $1937.82, or an average of $5.30 a member (Parker Memorial Church leading with an average of $12); raised for assisting the needy, $238.87, an average of 46 cents a member. The City Mission Board expended for all purposes, $635.95, an average of $1.76 per member.

Miss Ragland, the head deaconess of St. Mark's Hall reported increased attendance upon the various services and classes, and a deepening interest in the work. Mrs. Meekins, the city misslonary, declared that the Mary Werlein Mission has taken on new life under the present scheme of operation. She commended Dr. George S. Brown who has kindly treated the poor of the mission, and stated that she had furnished about 400 meals and had given away considerable clothing. She also expressed a wish for some pocket Testaments for free distribution, and Dr. Moore promised to try to procure them. At the suggestion of Dr. Moore it was decided to have a pound party for St. Mark's Hall, and the President appointed Mrs. Carre, Mrs. Edward Aivis, and Mrs. Walter Willis to arrange for it. It was announced that a visit from Miss Belle Bennett and Mrs. R. W. MacDonell is expected some time in February. The meeting closed with a few appropriate remarks by Dr. J. M. Henry, who spoke encouragingly of what has been achieved and of the outlook for the future.

THE COURTESY OF FRENCH CHILDREN.

I found an appeal to the chivalry, to the grace of manner, to courtesy, never made in vain in France from the top to the bottom of society. One day, while making some sketches in the street, I was surrounded by a number of interested children; they kept dancing in front of me in their enthusiasm, getting finally very much in my way. I addressed a little fellow, who seemed to be a ringleader, saying, "Hélas! ou est votre politesse Française?" (Alas! where is your French politeness?)

He looked at me, then, with a mocking little grin, he planted himself in front of me, flapping his arms in a clever way like wings, shrilly shouting "O, Yankee doodle doo!" I was thoroughly surprised and amused when he dramatically pulled his cap over his eyes, pulled up his cape collar, and folded his arms, becoming an absurd but unmistakable image of the Little Corporal, as with bent brows he addressed his comrades: "Boys, she is right. Fall in line! Face! March! Fall back!"

The French do know how to be polite. The boys all marched behind me, and not once did one boy again forget and obstruct the view.—Annie Fields Alden, in Harper's Bazar.

Eight Months 1.00
To Preachers 1.00
To widows of preachers 1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription to cover expense of remitting, etc., provided they remit by money order, or New York exchange, or stamps, or registered letter. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or stamps, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

Concerning Missions

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The executive committee of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference met in the Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., Friday, January 19. Mrs. Holloman, the president conducted a short devotional service, reading Galatians vi. Mrs. W. M. Williams, from our Methodist Orphanage led in prayer. Mrs. B. F. Lewis, our corresponding secretary, read a letter from Mrs. A. C. Yeager, the district secretary from the Natchez district, who has recently moved to Water Valley. In this letter she consents to hold the office until the annual meeting, when a new district secretary may be elected.

A very important communication was then read from Mrs. MacDowell, the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Council, asking that the Woman's Home Mission Society of Southern Methodism take charge of the Mexican school at Laredo, Texas. This work had been previously enterprised by the Woman's Foreign Mission Society and was under the charge of Miss Holding. If each Conference would give one third of its half of dues, the work could then be carried on by the Woman's Home Mission Society.

After duly considering our financial condition, and in view of the fact that many urgent demands are being made upon us at present, and in view of the fact that this Conference is very anxious to establish a scholarship, we entertained a motion which was carried that we do not concur in this suggestion concerning the support of the Laredo school.

A petition from the Seashore district praying the Woman's Council to grant the 1912 week of prayer money to that district to be invested in permanent missionary property in Gulfport and Biloxi was heard and heartily endorsed.....A resolution was adopted in response to an appeal from Rev. H. M. Ellis, naming Mrs. C. R. McQueen a member of the proposed Methodist Hospital Commission. The resolution made clear that the Society could not assume any financial responsibility, since the movement did not originate with them.

The ladies of Capitol Street Church served a delightful luncheon to the Delegates, and made the noon hour one of happy social intercourse.

At 2:30 p. m., a joint meeting of the Executive Committees of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Mississippi Conference was held to make plans for our joint annual meeting. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Lipscomb. Mrs. Holloman was elected president.

The subject of the time and place of our annual meeting was first taken up. Two invitations had been received—one from Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, and the other from the Capitol Street Church, Jackson. Although the invitation from Hattiesburg was fully appreciated, on account of Jackson being more easily accessible to all, the motion that we accept the invitation from Capitol Street Church was almost unanimously carried. April 27 to May 1, was fixed as the time for this meeting. The subject of the basis of representation at this union meeting next came under discussion. A motion was made that whether the societies in a church were united or not, one delegate should be sent from each department of the work. This motion was carried.

A resolution was passed that the proceedings of this meeting be embodied in a letter, which shall be sent out by the Conference corresponding secretaries of each society to their auxiliaries, giving full instructions as to the basis of representation, and asking that the representative be instructed how to vote in regard to the matter of union.

The program for our annual meeting was next taken up. Sunday at 11 a. m., annual sermon (probably by Dr. Rollins). Sunday afternoon is to be devoted to the children's and young people's work. Sunday night some representative from the Woman's Council will present the great missionary work including both home and foreign departments. Monday and Tuesday will be devoted chiefly to transaction of business. Monday night the subject will be Home Work, and the meeting will be adjourned by some worker in the field. Tuesday night will be given to the Foreign Work, and some foreign missionary will be present to speak on the needs of the foreign field.

REMINISCENT.

I left my business that Sunday morning without permission, with the hope of hearing Dr. Neely preach, but heard a substitute and was disappointed. I left the church and made a "bee line" for my neglected books. When I reached the hospital, I found the "fat was in the fire," and was sputtering. Soon after I went to church a sad father and mother came in quest of a son; not knowing whether he was dead, or living. I was gone, and no one else claimed familiarity with the books, so they awaited my return. A young man of the hospital crew told the post surgeon and others who were discussing me, that he was sure I had gone to preaching. He said he knew that I was a church-going young man. Dr. Prim gave me one of the lectures of my life. He said, calling my name: "I love to go to preaching in time of peace as well as any man, but in time of war I never think of such a thing." He was very emphatic and had a voice like a mate on a big Mississippi steamer. I replied meekly: "Doctor, the difference between us is that I like to attend church in time of war as well as in time of peace, and do attend at every opportunity." Those who heard the conversation said, afterwards, that they looked for me to be sent to the guard house for punishment, but that was the end of it. After dinner I resumed my place, and was ready to respond to any and every call that might be made.

That same afternoon, two or three nice looking disciples of Aesculapius passed through my office on their way to an upper room. One of them touched me, and said: "Come up in a few minutes, and see an amputation." I soon followed, but was too late. I found the young man's leg lying on the floor. I approached the bed to take a look at the suffering one, but he did not look to be suffering. The chief practical surgeon in that hospital was Doctor Paul F. Eve of Nashville, Tenn. He was said to be the author of a standard volume on surgery. As an author, he was powerful, but his personal appearance was almost contemptible. He was very slender, of bloodless complexion, no appearance of beard, light hair, pale blue eyes and a feminine voice. Yet that effeminate little man could cut the flesh and saw the bones of unfortunate men, as demurely and easily as need be. I was told that Dr. Eve was a Christian gentleman. He was very abstemious in his habits. He used no tobacco, no intoxicating liquors, and, best of all, he was a man of prayer and consecration to God. With the coming of hot weather, sickness increased, and our hospital was the recipient each day of new patients. There was a marked increase in mortality. How it came about I never knew, but just at this time I began to receive calls to visit the sick and the dying. Why call on me? I had been licensed to preach in my own State, before the Civil War broke out; but owing to bitter opposition on the part of my wicked, aristocratic family connections, I decided that when I got off among strangers I would be incognito, but not so. I saw one or two chaplains in camp, but in the hospitals there seemed to be none. City ministers would visit the sick, but they were not employed, and could not be depended on. I kept up with my official work, so that I might attend my suffering fellow soldiers when called upon. There were two brothers, named Doc and John Anglin who, I believe, were from Holly Springs. Doc was taken very sick in camp and was brought to the hospital. I placed his name in the register and, in two or three days, John came and requested me to visit Doc who, he thought was much worse. I was at his side in a few minutes, and judged by his looks that the grim monster had come. He was perfectly conscious and composed. The "Golden Dawn" volume says: "The dying never weep." He told me he had tried to be a Christian, and that he was resigned. Two or three convalescents were present and I prayed, the boys all kneeling. When we arose, Doc said: "I am going boys, good-by to all of you!" And he was dead.

CHRISTIANITY AND DEMOCRACY.

The New York American, John Temple Graves (probably) wrote the editorial, says that in considering the revolutions and government changes in many of the old countries in comparatively recent years, we have let go unnoticed to a great degree the causes. It isn't a bad idea to assume that the work of Christian missionaries has been the indirect cause of much of the new-found enthusiasm for a democracy in China. The missionaries of course have not imparted the gospel of revolution; but the doctrine they have taught has caused the Chinaman to see a new light and think more for himself.

Light is the only thing on earth, which a government like the Manchus gave China, cannot withstand. The world is getting better and with it comes freer and better government. Whenever a people find out that they are being imposed on by a crowd of men, they usually start something, and without much ceremony either. China informed itself, learned that it wasn't getting what we call in this country a square deal, and it made a change.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Whitworth College, BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

THE THREE WISE MONKEYS.

Did you ever hear the little tale
Of the wise little monkeys three?
They sat on the ground
With their arms around
Each other as nice as could be.

The first, no evil could he say;
The second, none could see;
The third was as free
As a monkey could be
From gossip and scandal was he.

One had his hand upon his mouth,
The other covered up his eyes;
And the other his ears,
And it really appears
That they were wondrous wise.

So now, my children, give good heed
To this tale of the monkeys three.
Guard ears, mouth, and eyes,
And be just as wise
And happy as you can be.

CHARACTER POTS.

I had sometimes caught a glimpse of the small scullery maid at my boarding house; but one day, slipping into the kitchen for a cup of hot water, I had a queer bit of chat with her. She was scouring granite pots with a vim and vigor that were bound to bring results, and all the while her face was as shining as her finished work.

"Do you like them, Alice?" I asked.

"No, I hate them," she replied emphatically.

"What makes you smile so over them then?" I asked curiously.

"Because they're 'character pots,'" the child replied at once.

"What?" I inquired, thinking I had misunderstood.

"'Character pots,' miss. You see I used to only half clean them. I often cried over them, but Miss Mary told me as how, if I made them real shiny, they'd help to build my character. And ever since then I've tried hard, miss; and, O, it's been so much easier since I've knowed they was 'character pots.'"

I said a word or two of encouragement, and went on my way, knowing that I had been rubbing up against a real heroine. Everyday life is brimful of disagreeable duties. Why not turn them every one into "character pots?"—East and West.

A LITTLE HEROINE.

Down in Reeds, a way station on the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis railroad, only a few miles from Owensboro is a little girl only 8 years of age, who is not only entitled to a Carnegie hero medal, but is entitled to a donation from the Carnegie hero gift fund. The mother and father of this little girl are both ill of typhoid fever. Neither could wait on the other. The 8-year-old child was the only nurse for her parents, and loyally and faithfully she was doing the work. She was not only the nurse, but she was also the cook and the housekeeper. The task was one so great as to make the strongest-hearted adult shrink, but this little girl went about it joyfully. When neighbors discovered the condition of the afflicted family they went to the rescue of the little heroine. They relieved her of her household duties, provided attendants for the mother and father, and the little one now has no responsibility except that of rendering any assistance to the nurses which may add to the comforts of her parents, both of whom are critically ill. For a whole week this child bore the trials of nurse and housekeeper in the sadly afflicted home. No wonder that Christ took a little child in His arms and said: "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Owensboro (Ky.) Inquirer.

WHAT MONEY COULD NOT BUY.

"How long do we stop here, conductor?"

"About an hour, I am afraid, sir; the freight ahead is pretty badly wrecked, and it will take some time to clear the track."

The passengers grumbled, and talked about "double tracks," as delayed passengers mostly do, but John Pendleton thought it was fun to stop out in the deep woods for an hour. John, being a city boy, thought the woods a fine place.

"Please let me go out, papa," said John; "I want to play wild Indian a while."

"Don't get out of the sound of my war whoop, then," said his father; "mind now; keep close to the car."

It was more fun because it was getting dark rapidly; and it was easier to pretend that Indians were hidden behind the trees, and panthers and wolves lurking in the shadows. But in a few minutes John was back at the car window.

"Father," he said, "I can see a little cabin through the trees; they have just lighted a lamp in it; may I run over to it? I want to see who lives there."

His father consulted his watch. "I can give you thirty minutes," he said; "here, take my watch along, and don't be a minute later than half an hour in getting back."

John dropped the watch in his pocket and sped away through the trees. When he reached the door of the log cabin, he stopped a minute. What excuse had he for knocking at the door?

"I'm real, sure enough thirsty," said the breathless runner. "I'll ask for a drink of water." He rapped loudly.

"Come in," said a voice in tones of surprise, and he opened the door. There was only one person in the cabin, a black boy about John's size, and he was laid up in bed.

It did not take our young traveler long to get his drink, nor to find out that the boy's name was "Jake," that his father was a wood chopper, and that he himself had had his leg broken by falling trees some weeks before.

"Daddy generally gits home by this time," said Jake, "but I reckon he's gone to de sto' to git some victuals. Mammy she cooks for de Harrison's 'bout mile from here, and she don't git home till arter supper."

"You must be awfully lonely," said John.

"I ain't mind it so much in day time," said Jake, "but that one hour arter it gits dark is wus 'an all de res'."

John felt his heart swell with pity for the poor, bed-ridden boy. What could he do for him? He had only a few minutes to spend; he had no money in his pocket, but he took out a handsome knife, and his silk pocket handkerchief.

"Here, Jake," he said, "keep these to remember me by."

As he passed them over to the bed, the shadow from the little lamp Jake had lighted threw a great picture of his hand on the wall.

"O look here!" cried John, "do you know how to make a wolf's head? Put your two hands together, so, thumbs up; now curl the three fingers of your left hand a little (only a little), and stretch your fourth finger wide; now, move it up and down—see?"

The lame boy burst into a merry laugh, as the shadow of a wolf's head, with a moving jaw, fell upon the white wall.

"Here's another," said John, eagerly, "but it is harder to do. Put your right hand over the left, leaving the first and fourth finger tips up for ears, second and third fingers bent this way for a snout; two fingers of left hand for lower jaw, thumb and other fingers for legs—there!"

Another peal of laughter greeted the shadow of a pig sitting upright.

"Now I must run," said John; "I wish I had some money to give you—"

"Lord love you, young master," said a voice at the door, "you is done give po' Jake what money couldn't buy, dat is a good, hearty laugh."

Jake's father looked ready to cry with pleasure, and as John bounded away, he left the lame boy eagerly showing him his new amusement.

"I envy you that chance, my boy," said John's father, as the train moved on, "of lightening that poor creature's weary load."

"Father," said John, softly, "maybe that is what God stopped the train for."

"It would be just like Him," answered his father in the same tone.—Parish Visitor.

HELP URGENTLY NEEDED.

To our Methodist People in Louisiana.

We now have seventy-four children in our Orphanage at Ruston. Practically all the available space in the building is filled until the Superintendent and his family can move out. We have been compelled to refuse to take over thirty children since Conference, and some of them most desperate cases. Unless some generous-hearted Christian will furnish us the means with which to erect another building, we will soon reach our full capacity.

Since Conference we have received practically no support. This has been the severest winter ever known in this section of the State. Our fuel bill has been very heavy. Other expenses have been more than usual. With seventy-four children to feed, clothe and provide for it means no small expenditure. We will owe over $600.00 at the close of the month of January, and have less than $150.00 to meet these bills of our current expenses. We must have help if we are to carry on this work and care for these children.

I appeal to our preachers to present this need to their congregations without delay, and to all our people for immediate help. In the name of our blessed Lord, and for the relief of His most helpless children, I appeal to you in this time of our great need. Please send your contributions at once.

Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

EFFECT OF MAN'S LULLABIES.

Eddie's Aunt Emma, who had been traveling in Europe, was expected to reach the house at midnight, and Eddie begged to be allowed to stay up to greet her. But his mother refused to give consent. "No," she said, decidedly, "It would be five long hours after your bedtime, and you couldn't possibly stay awake as long as that."

"O yes I can," Eddie wailed; "I can if papa will sing lullabies to me."—Woman's Home Companion.

Editorial.

HOW THEY MANAGE IT.

The exchange of ministers between the United States and England is still going on. It has been announced recently that Dr. L. G. Broughton the distinguished Baptist preacher of Atlanta, Ga., has resigned his pastorate in that city to accept a call to the Christ Congregational Church, of London, which was formerly served by Dr. F. B. Meyer. This is one of the famous congregations of the great British metropolis, its house of worship being located on the Westminster Bridge Road, not far from the Houses of Parliament. Its tall and graceful tower is a memorial to Abraham Lincoln.

In this day of increasing fraternity it is not unusual for preachers who belong to other denominations to be called to Congregational Churches, and this sometimes leads to interesting expedients to avoid friction over doctrinal differences. The Church News Association thus describes the method adopted to overcome the difficulty relative to the mode of baptism, when Dr. Meyer, who like Dr. Broughton, is a Baptist, took charge of this church: "A baptistry was built in the chapel and here Mr. Meyer immersed such as desired to enter church membership by that form. An assistant minister, who was a Congregationalist, sprinkled those in the church those who desired that form of baptism. The baptistry being still in place in the chapel, the Atlanta Baptist is expected to enter into the same arrangement that was found to work well under the preceding pastorate."

This plan of allowing the candidate to elect his own mode of baptism is that which the Methodists have followed ever since the establishment of their Church, and it is interesting to note that others are beginning to bring it into requisition. This is only another illustration of how Methodist teaching and practices are winning their way toward a more general acceptance as the years pass and the spirit of secretarianism decreases. It has been said of late that the various denominations are being injured by an invasion of Unitarian ideas. With a much greater show of truth, we think it may be said that they are being broadened and helped by an invasion of Methodist ideas.

DR. CARROLL'S CHURCH STATISTICS.

In the New York Christian Advocate of January 25, Dr. H. K. Carroll gives his customary annual summary of church statistics. It is to be regretted that it is impossible to secure data concerning the relative strength and growth of the Churches which can be affirmed to be positively correct; but, though absolute accuracy cannot be claimed for them, such tables, if care has been taken in gathering the figures, are sufficiently reliable to indicate the religious trend of the times and prove quite instructive. Of Dr. Carroll's fitness for such a task, we do not need to write. He was in charge of the Government Census of the Churches in 1890, prepared an annual exhibit of church statistics for The Independent for a number of years, and was the statistical secretary at the recent Ecumenical Methodist Conference at Toronto. Indeed, as a statistician he easily ranks among the first in the nation.

Dr. Carroll first discusses the aggregate growth of all the Christian Churches in the United States. He says: "The increase for the year is somewhat greater than that of 1910, in churches and communicants, being just under 600,000 members and a little over 2800 churches. The increase is less than one and seven-tenth per cent, which cannot be considered at all satisfactory. The greater part of the population, even after deducting infants and young children, are not numbered as members or communicants, and are, therefore, proper subjects of the evangelistic appeal which the Churches are supposed to make with sincerity and fervor. The body of ministers, whose work is to secure converts, is increasing, there are more churches as centers of evangelistic activity, and the number of devout men and women to co-operate in saving work is presumably not decreasing—why are the results not larger?"

The gains of some of the larger denominations are given as follows: The Methodist Episcopal Church, 47,960, a little less than one and a half per cent; M. E. Church, South, 41,305, a little less than two and two-tenths per cent; Baptist (North), estimated, 713, scarcely any increase at all; Baptist (South), estimated, 21,658, less than one per cent; Presbyterian (North), 11,596, less than one per cent; Presbyterian (South), 5254, one and eight-tenths per cent; Protestant Episcopal, 18,540, about two per cent; Lutheran, 46,411, more than two per cent; Disciples (Campbellites) not reporting; Roman Catholic, 131,000, a little more than one per cent.

The seven leading denominational families are set down in the following order: Roman Catholic, 12,575,085; Methodist, 6,819,660; Baptist, 5,634,565; Lutheran, 2,289,397; Presbyterian, 1,944,181; Disciples, 1,464,774; Protestant Episcopal, 956,930. The Methodist bodies taken together, show a larger growth than any other denomination, and the Lutherans next.

BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

At its recent session the Louisiana Conference voted to issue $25,000 worth of bonds to cover the outstanding indebtedness of Mansfield Female College, and guaranteed the payment of the interest on the loan. Rev. N. E. Joyner was appointed Conference Secretary of Education, and the task of floating the bonds was committed to his hands. With characteristic energy, he did not rest until his work was well under way.

Last week a deal was closed by which the Hibernia Bank and Trust Company of New Orleans, purchased the entire issue of the bonds at par, and the money is now on deposit to the credit of Mansfield College. These bonds are secured by the Mansfield College property alone. When the matter of securing the loan was under discussion on the floor of the Conference, grave fears were expressed that all the property of the Conference would become involved in default of the payment of the bonds. All fears on this point may be allayed as the mortgage was placed with a clause inserted making it plain that the Mansfield College property, with the moral endorsement of the Conference, is the loan's only security.

Mansfield College is once more on its feet, with the greatest opening for a successful future in its history. Every dollar of outstanding indebtedness, aside from the bonds, will be paid. The college is now on a self-supporting basis, with a strong faculty and a large and increasing enrollment of the cream of Louisiana's Methodist girlhood. The curriculum is being strengthened, and even now a Mansfield normal diploma is of equal grade, and has equal recognition throughout the State, with diplomas from the State Normal College at Natchitoches.

The college property is worth $75,000, has been improved since Christmas by having a natural gas heating apparatus installed; and, considering the modern equipment of her classic buildings, the scenic beauty of her campus and her capable faculty and choice student body, this institution may be classed to-day as one of Louisiana Methodism's choice possession—one whose interests she may well spend herself to promote.

Possibly one of the most hopeful signs for the future success of Mansfield College is the fact that it is under the management of the Church in every detail. The Methodist who sends his daughter to Mansfield is paying the profit on her schooling to the Church, and not to any man or set of men. The faculty and all the assistants, as well as the expense of maintaining the buildings, are paid by the Church, and all money paid in in tuition, fees, board, and so on, goes into the treasury, and any surplus that may accrue will be applied to promote the future interests of the school. Let the Methodists of Louisiana now be thoroughly loyal to this worthy institution, and aid in carrying it forward to larger things.

If every pastor in Louisiana will exercise his best energies to raise the educational assessment in full this year, the cause of education will be given a great impetus in the Conference. The assessment is $7500, and the Board of Education needs every cent of it in order to hold firmly the ground that has already been gained, and keep open the way for further progress. At last, the friends of Mansfield College see dawning an era of prosperity for this school, which has made a remarkable record, notwithstanding the fact that it has suffered so severely from depleted finances.

HELP US, BRETHREN.

Many of our club lists sent in a year ago are now expiring, and we earnestly request the pastors in the various charges to seek to renew them. It is a matter of importance both to the Advocate and the Church that, if possible, these subscribers shall be retained. One of the most pressing duties of the hour is that of informing and indoctrinating our people, and by no other agency can this work be accomplished so well as through the church press. It is our purpose to conduct this year the most vigorous campaign to extend the circulation of the Advocate that, perhaps, has ever been carried on in the history of our Conference organ, and we desire the hearty co-operation of all our preachers and lay workers in this undertaking. We call special attention to the discussion by Dr. E. G. B. Mann setting forth the claims of the church paper, which we publish in this issue. It is a vigorous handling of a live question. Again, we venture to remind our friends that this is the best season to work for the Advocate. Other matters will be largely engrossing their time and attention a little later.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson has begun the discussion of a new church building at Crowley, La.

J. D. Boggs, who is now pastor at Dumas, Miss., has been heavily pounded by his good people.

Mrs. Robert Somerville, of Greenville, Miss., was the guest of Mrs. Christian Keener of this city last week.

Rev. George Manott, agent for the American Bible Society in South Louisiana, has moved from New Iberia to New Orleans.

Rev. J. L. Lay of the Simsboro, La., charge has our thanks for a nice list of new subscribers. He says his people must take the Advocate.

In a communication from one of the energetic laymen of Ripley, Miss., we learn that Rev. J. H. Mitchell has made a splendid impression both in and out of the pulpit.

H. B. Perritt, the pastor at Hammond, La., is delighted with the prospect there for a good year. He believes in circulating the church papers as one way of spreading the gospel.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey spent last week working in the interest of our New Orleans Sunday schools. He preached at Louisiana Avenue Church last Sunday morning, and at Gretna Sunday night.

On January 11 we made Rev. S. D. Howard say that the ladies of Baker presented him with a tailor-made suit of clothes, when we should have said the ladies of the Baker charge.

The outlook for the Lord's work was never more promising at Brandon, Miss. Rev. Osmond Lewis was returned for a second year's work there and has the field well organized.

Rev. J. J. Golden, of Laurel, Miss., is conducting a revival at the Port Gibson Female College for the benefit of the faculty and students. The meeting began Monday night, January 29.

Rev. J. A. Goad is moving off nicely on the New Albany Circuit, having already secured the Advocate list and begun a campaign to increase its circulation. He has a splendid people on his circuit.

The Mississippi State Sunday School Convention will be held at Jackson, April 3, 4 and 5. Dr. Hamill, Dr. Marion Lawrance, Prof. E. O. Excell and many other distinguished workers are expected to be present.

The vesper service of the Young Women's Christian Association last Sunday afternoon was conducted by Dr. J. W. Moore, the pastor of the First Methodist Church, of New Orleans. The hour was a profitable one.

Rev. A. G. Shankle was indisposed last week, but was able to be in his pulpit on last Sunday. He will have with him at the evening service next Sunday, Mrs. Bailington Booth, the head of the Volunteers of America.

Mrs. J. J. Akers, the mother of Mrs. E. H. Cunningham, the wife of Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of the North Mississippi Conference, died recently. The sorrowing ones have our sincerest sympathy in this hour of grief.

Rev. F. L. Crowson writes to us from Chaires, Fla., to which place he has recently moved from Sopschoppy, Fla., that all is well with him. He adds that he loves a progressiveness that destroys not the "old Land Marks."

Benjamin Rudder, commonly known as the father of Texas Avenue Church, Shreveport, La., died recently. He was one of the leading laymen of Shreveport, and his death is a great loss to the Texas Avenue congregation.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., found upon arriving as pastor of the Carriere (Miss.) charge, that not a copy of the Advocate was taken. He has already placed seven subscriptions, and expresses the hope of soon having a copy in every home on his charge.

The revival meeting now in progress at Mary Werlein Mission, this city, is growing in interest. The preaching is being done by Rev. C. C. Seelman, Rev. W. E. Thomas and Dr. Moore. They report a number of conversions and an increasing attendance.

A little unusual at this season is the basket-dinner-on-the-ground plan for the quarterly conference, but such was the program at the Muddy Springs (Miss.) Church when the presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, held the first quarterly conference there last Sunday.

Rev. W. E. Dickens, who is serving his third year as pastor of the Shiloh charge at Pelahatchie, Miss., is starting off the year under favorable conditions. He has our sincerest thanks for taking up among the first things the task of looking after the interests of the Advocate.

Dr. W. F. McMurtry, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, was expected to spend Monday of this week in Vicksburg, Miss. The purpose of his visit is to look the field over, with perhaps a view of lending a helping hand to the Washington Street Church of that city.

Dr. Moore is formulating his plans for a revival at First Church, New Orleans, during the Lenten season, and is endeavoring to get a strong man to assist him. He has some hope of having Bishop Mouzon with him during Easter week.

Mrs. Blanche Thibodeaux, of St. Patrick, La., in renewing her subscription added fifty cents to be applied to our "Help Fund." She also said: "I think the Advocate gets better every week; I could not do without it." We highly appreciate this act of kindness and these encouraging words.

The church at Myrtle, Miss., has paid off the debt of $136, which was against their building, since Conference. Rev. E. H. Cunningham, the efficient pastor denies being responsible for this forward move, but one thing is evident, and that is, that the Master's work is in good hands at Myrtle.

Rev. W. W. Jones, who serves a new charge having as a center, Calhoun City, Miss., and covering much of the territory formerly included in the Pittsboro charge, has made a fine beginning. He has in hand a list of the Advocate readers and is looking after the interests of the Conference organ.

Since the beginning of the Conference year the pastors in New Orleans have received fifty-one members into the church. Of this number, Rev. H. R. Singleton of Parker Memorial leads, having received twenty. All the pastors have made some progress, and but one reports no new members thus far.

Rev. J. R. Jones, the capable presiding elder of the Capital District of Mississippi, writes: "The work has started off well up this way." Brother Jones is in his fourth year, and has made a great record during his incumbency in his present office. He possesses in a marked degree the elements of leadership.

We were pleased to receive a note from Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., a few days since, which contained some encouraging words. This faithful layman has been actively engaged in the service of the Church for a long time, and is widely known for his good works. He lets no opportunity pass to lend a helping hand to the Advocate.

The New Orleans pastors held their regular meeting Monday morning, and spent most of the hour discussing the subject of a standard of ethics for New Orleans pastors. Rev. C. A. Battle led the discussion and about all the preachers expressed an opinion. The meeting was decidedly interesting. Rev. P. O. Lowrey and Rev. George Manott were present as visitors.

Rev. L. W. Cain, who at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference was appointed district missionary evangelist for the Corinth District, requests us to state that he will reside at Baldwyn, Miss., where correspondents may address him. Brother Cain is a most efficient worker in revival meetings, and the pastors in his section of the Conference should keep him busy.

Mrs. J. K. Dunn, of McComb, Miss., the accomplished treasurer of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference, in remitting for her subscription a few days since, enclosed an additional dollar for our "Help Fund." This will send the Advocate for twelve months into some poor home into which it would not otherwise go. Money thus applied is certain to prove a blessing.

Rev. John G. Sloan, of Houghton, La., has made a successful canvass in the interest of the Conference organ, and forwarded us a list of eight renewals and four new subscribers. It is needless to say that we heartily thank him for this service, as well as for his commendation of the Advocate. We trust that our paper may effectively re-enforce him in his work for the Master in his important field.

From Pontotoc, Miss., on January 18, Rev. W. D. Wendel writes as follows: "We graded our Sunday school last night at our teachers' meeting. We have here a modern $20,000 church, with all the up-to-date accessories. Brother Boone, our superintendent here, and I have just returned from the district stewards' meeting at Okolona. We are all charmed with our new presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Cunningham."

The Galloway Memorial Class, of Houston, Miss., held a reception in the Sunday school rooms of our church in that city, on Tuesday evening, January 16, complimentary to Mr. E. E. French, of Nashville, Tenn. Mr. French delivered an interesting address in the main auditorium at 7 p.m. to a delighted audience. Brother Neblett's Sunday school is well organized, and is accomplishing a great work.

In a business note to the Advocate office, Dr. C. W. Campbell, of Meridian, Miss., adds: "All the preachers in this city are at their posts and seem to have their work fully in hand. The prospect is bright for a successful and glorious year." Our pulpits in this Queen City of East Mississippi are ably manned, and it does not surprise us to be informed that gratifying results are attending the labors of so capable a band of pastors.

All the city pulpits will be filled next Sunday by the visiting delegates to the National Sunday School Association Executive Committee meeting which will hold its session here next week. A rally will be held in First Church Sunday afternoon, and on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings, mass meetings will be held in the different churches. A large and profitable session is anticipated by those who have the program in hand.

Rev. M. L. Burton, of Gulfport, Miss., delighted the heart of the publisher on the 23rd ult. with a club of 11 subscribers to the Advocate. He sent exchange for the entire list, charging no commission and stating that the manager might place the amount to which he would have been entitled to the credit of the "Help Fund," if he wished to do so. Brother Burton is in high favor with his flock at Gulfport, where he is doing an excellent work.

Under date of January 23, Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., writes: "We let the contract for our new brick church last night to Messrs. Thomas & Beall. When completed and furnished, it will cost about $15,000. Mr. John Galsford, of Memphis, Tenn., is the architect." We congratulate Brother Randolph and his enterprising flock upon this forward movement, which will make Como one of the most desirable charges in the North Mississippi Conference.

We regret to hear that Rev. G. W. McLain, who is serving the Bellefontaine work (North Mississippi) has been seriously indisposed for several days. His illness has caused him to miss some of his appointments, and it is thought that it will be a week or two yet before he will be able to resume his pastoral labors. It grieves him not to be able to be present at all the regular services of the charge, but he hopes to make up for lost time as soon as he has recovered his health, which he trusts that he may speedily do.

Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, our pastor at Mooreville, Miss., writes: "Our new presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, held our first quarterly conference on January 20, preaching sermons which furnished a feast for the soul. Death has called two of our best men away: Brother John Wheeler, and Brother James R. Gunter, a steward who was ever faithful to duty. Both the pastor and church will miss them." We regret to be informed of the decease of these worthy brethren, and pray God's blessings upon their bereaved loved ones.

Information has reached us of the serious illness of Miss Sue Jones, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ike Jones, of Black Hawk, Miss., who is reported to be suffering from a pulmonary trouble. We are informed that she expects, as soon as she has sufficiently recovered to stand the long trip, to go to Arizona, where it is hoped the climate will prove of great benefit to her. We sympathize with this anxious household in this hour of trouble, and pray that God may watch over the stricken one and have her in his gracious keeping.

Our energetic young friend, Rev. R. I. Collins, recently favored us with a list of six subscribers to the Advocate, and states that he hopes to send us as many as 25. Brother Collins has entered upon his second year on the Cockrum charge (North Mississippi), and is much in love with his flock. He says: "We have a pleasant people to serve, and they have been good to us during the winter, sending us backbones, sausages, and looking after us in a good old-fashioned way." Brother Collins ought not to tantalize a lean and hungry editor by telling how bountifully his table has been supplied with tempting things to eat.

A Woman's International Missionary Union, embracing the various Protestant denominations of the city, was organized at the Trinity Parish House last Friday night. The following officers were elected: Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, president; Mrs. Henry Leverich, first vice-president; Mrs. J. J. Zigler, second vice-president; Mrs. A. L. Rau, third vice-president; Mrs. J. L. Many, fourth vice-president; Miss Sudie Juden, recording secretary; Mrs. George S. Brown, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Charles S. Rice, treasurer; Mrs. J. M. Gwinn, secretary of literature. The object of the organization is to promote the cause of missions, charity and Christian work.

Rev. R. H. Kleiser, of Binnsville, Miss., has been much hindered in his work since Conference by excessive rains and impassable roads. Not until Sunday, the 21st ult., was he able to fill any of his appointments; but on that occasion he had a fine congregation, and he thinks the outlook is quite encouraging for a good year. Especially is he hopeful of rounding out his quadrennium with a sweeping revival. He states that he has spent three years largely in fighting blind tigers and other forms of lawlessness, and that he thinks the time is now propitious for a season of spiritual refreshing. We hope that our brother may realize fully his desire to see a general work of grace wrought among his people.

Under date of January 29, Rev. W. H. Huntley writes as follows from Vicksburg, Miss.: "The brethren and friends of Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Vanhook will learn with sorrow of the death yesterday (Sunday) morning, at the Silver City parsonage, of Eleanor, their first-born daughter. She had been ill with pneumonia for ten days, and the organically delicate heart ceased beating at 10 o'clock a.m. Earlier in the day, Brother Vanhook had gone to his appointment, leaving apparently hopeful conditions at home. The father, with the remains of the sweet girl, passed through this city this morning en route to Meridian. It was the privilege of the writer to be with him during the time that he was here. Will sympathetic hearts, touched by the news of this sore bereavement, remember this stricken household in their prayers."

The Central Methodist Advocate of January 18, contained a notice of the death of Mrs. C. F. Evans, the wife of Dr. C. F. Evans, which occurred at their home in Lexington, Ky., on Monday morning, January 15, after a serious illness of only a few days. Prior to this attack Sister Evans had been in poor health for several months, but recently she had seemed to be gaining in strength and hope of her recovery had been entertained. Her decease is represented as having been somewhat unexpected. The remains were interred in the Lexington cemetery, the obsequies being conducted by Dr. E. L. Southgate and Dr. John R. Deering. Mrs. Evans is the mother of Rev. W. G. Evans, of Hammond, La., formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference. Dr. Evans will have the deep sympathy of his many friends in Mississippi and Louisiana in his sore bereavement.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

Dec. 31, during the closing hours of 1911, WINNIE DAVIS SHERFIELD was summoned to begin the New Year in the "mansion" prepared for her by her Heavenly Father. Suffering, borne with Christian fortitude, patience which never failed, and hopefulness that brightened the family, made the little invalid very dear to every one who knew her. She was 11 years and 5 months old. Although suffering from the dread disease, tuberculosis, she strove to be in her accustomed place at Sunday school and preaching at Fountain Head Church, where she had been a member for four years. Her mother died some years ago, but the loss was never fully realized by her, as her loving relatives, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Blount, cared for her so tenderly. Nothing that could be done to stay the disease was left undone. Brother Burks, her pastor, held the funeral service at Fountain Head Church, where the precious body was laid to rest. To the sorrowing father and relatives we can only say, remember the promise left you that he will swallow up death in victory. Having been her pastor for three years, I knew her to be a happy, bright little Christian. J. W. RAPER.

After a painful illness of some weeks, Mrs. MARY ELLEN TINSLEY (nee Crowther) passed away at her home at Ponta, Miss., Sept. 14, 1911. In close attendance upon her, during those last trying days, were the four daughters who survive her, Miss Willie, the only single daughter, being constantly at her side. Those who cared most for her, aided by efficient service from skilled physicians, did all that was possible to make those last hours easier, but no human hand could keep her longer in this world where, for many years, she had been severely tested in the school of physical pain. She had long been familiar with the inconvenience of an invalid life, and she endured her last days patiently and trustfully, even though they were her most painful; for knowing Him whom she believed, and being fully persuaded that he was able to keep that which she had committed unto him, she was resigned. In early womanhood at the hour of conversion, her experience was clear and vivid. Throughout the years, that followed she maintained an unwavering trust in Christ, her Lord, trusting him alike through sunshine and shadow. As a mother, she knew what it was to give up her dearest treasure, three of the little ones committed to her care having been taken away in early childhood. Her husband, too, Mr. H. G. Tinsley, well known and appreciated by many, preceded her in death nearly three years. Her trusting, clinging nature led her to bear hard upon her Lord when the shadows came. She loved him, and loved his people, conversation with them being esteemed one of her greatest pleasures. Friendship and human companionship meant much to her, and it was good to know that many of those whom she counted dearest could be with her during those last sad days of pain. The numbers present when the last sad rites were held in the Magnolia cemetery, Meridian, Miss., bore testimony to the esteem in which she was held. A brief summary of her life is as follows: Born in Kemper County, Miss., April 26, 1836; married to Mr. H. G. Tinsley, Jan. 26, 1861; converted and joined the Methodist Church at Linnwood, Miss., in 1865; died at Ponta, September 14, 1911; aged seventy-five years.

ROSY AS A GIRL.

Summit, N. C.—In a letter received from this place, Mr. J. W. Church, the notary public, says: "My wife had been ailing for nearly 12 years, from female ailments, and at times, was unable to leave the house. She suffered agony with her side and back. We tried physicians for years, without relief. After these treatments all failed, she took Cardui, and gained in weight at once. Now she is red and rosy as a school girl." Cardui, as a tonic for women, has brought remarkable results. It relieves pain and misery and is the ideal tonic for young and old. Try it. At druggists.

ANNUAL MEETING OF CHAIRMEN OF SUNDAY SCHOOL BOARDS.

In addition to the editorial which appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate the week following the adjournment of this very pleasant and important meeting early in January, in the city of New Orleans, by request of the chairman of the meeting, the following resolutions are given to the public:

"We congratulate the Church on the continued and notable improvement in the body of our Sunday school literature, both as to its variety and adaptability, and we especially commend the Sunday School Supply Department and its helpfulness to our Sunday school workers.

"We urge the employment of capable and acceptable field secretaries by all Conferences or groups of Conferences as soon as such step is favorable; and while our aim is to bring about the support of such secretaries in the same way as with the secretaries of other boards, by means of the regular assessments, we urge that for the present emergency their support be secured through and from the Sunday schools in such way as is allowed by the law of the Church.

"Whenever the chairman of a Conference Sunday School Board is not a member of an Annual Conference, we urge that he be accorded the privilege of the floor by his Conference upon all matters relating to his board.

"We urge our Sunday school workers to co-operate heartily with the International Sunday School Association and its auxiliary State and other Associations, believing that as a great Church we are under bonds to this most useful interdenominational Sunday school agency consisting of all Protestant evangelical bodies of North America, both because of our Scriptural obligation to help other Churches, and because we have abundant evidence of the practical help the International Association has brought to our own denomination.

"We urge the laying of more and more emphasis and responsibility upon our lay members of Sunday School Boards, believing that our future success will depend largely upon their intelligent activity. As far as possible the lay member in each presiding elder's district should by virtue of that fact, be the Sunday school leader of the district, and should be in close touch with the presiding elder and the schools of the district.

"We believe that our help and sympathy as Sunday school workers of Southern Methodism, in all practicable ways is both due and necessary to the negroes within our Church territory, in building up their Sunday school work. Whenever by conventions or institutes of negroes, or, by reservation of seats where practicable at our own white meetings, we can give them Sunday school help, we ought to do so.

"We urge greater emphasis than ever before in the securing of generous Children's Day offerings, and the use of the official program therefor, in order that the larger work of our Sunday School Board shall be met with larger collections.

"As far as it can possibly be secured by law or custom of Annual Conferences or by enactment of General Conference, we urge that a stated Sunday School Anniversary be provided for at the session of each Annual Conference and that in addition to such addresses as may be made, the annual report of the Sunday School Board shall give a clear and full statement of the progress and conditions of Sunday school work within the Conference.

"Inasmuch as our Church has its own organized Adult Bible class department, we urge our presiding elders, pastors, superintendents and teachers to organize adult classes according to the plan of our Church and enroll them in the Wesley Adult Bible class department, and thus enter into fellowship and partnership with all Southern Methodist classes.

B. F. LEWIS,

Chairman of the Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board.

SHUQUALAK, MISS.

The first quarterly conference for this charge has been held. The presiding elder, J. E. Thomas, preached Sunday at 7 p.m., and Monday at 11 a.m., and presided over the quarterly conference Monday at 1 p.m. Both sermons were good. He was entertained in the elegant home of Dr. J. A. Perry. Our report on the general state of the church showed that, had the net gain in church membership in all the churches in the North Mississippi Conference kept pace with Shuqualak during last year, the Conference would have reported a net gain of 8000 members. Several stations and circuits did much better than we did, but the net gain was only 2000. Many revivals were reported, but it is not always a season for revivals at every church. "By their fruits ye shall know them," says the Master, and not simply by one kind of fruit, even though it be ever so vital and important. A big circuit once reported 250 additions during one year, and, at the same time, nearly starved its pastor, made few improvements on the church property and paid little to missions. The writer took a skim to Cooksville last Sunday, a distance of 16 miles, over the ice and frozen ground, met a good congregation (the cold considered), enjoyed a fine turkey dinner at Dr. Holliday's, secured the report of the stewards and officials, and returned home in time to hear Brother Thomas at 7 p.m. S. W. Adams, one of the stewards from Cooksville, came by way of Macon on train and horseback, but, before he arrived, his congregation had authorized a raise of $25 in the pastor's salary, the whole claim now being $1000. Rev. J. D. Newsom is comfortable in the superannuate's residence at Shuqualak. He and his good wife are regular in their attendance at all church services.—A. H. Williams, P. C.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Mr. L. H. Porter, the superintendent of the Zwolle Sunday school says: "We have installed the Grace Record system and think it is going to do us good. We seem to have started on the new year with an impetus for doing things, and increased interest and enthusiasm has taken hold of us all."

City pastors have found that when boys come from their country homes to town to live that it is almost impossible to reach them unless they have been kept in a Sunday school, before getting out into the world. The forces pulling downward in the city are too many unless they are undergirded with a knowledge of the Bible, reverence for the church, and the fear of the Lord.

Mr. W. E. Hearn, of Cambridge, Maryland, who met with the recent Conference Sunday School Board Chairmen, leads a great Men's Bible class in his church. Last year he had an adult decision day, at which time fifty strong men knelt at the altar seeking to find Him "of whom Moses and the prophets did write." Through the class activities, social and fraternal agencies, they had been led to Bible study and this "quick and powerful" Word proved "able to make them wise unto salvation." The pastor teaches the class, and counts it no vain thing to be able to plant the gospel seed in the hearts of several hundred men on the Sabbath day. How many problems are solved in a work like this!

Not many months ago a drunken woman came into the Franklin (Street) German M. E. Church in New Orleans and said she wanted a Sunday school at Milnersburg, and the workers took this as a Macedonian call, and, led by Mr. Alfred Keller, of the Italian Mission, and Mr. J. N. Myers, teacher of the Men's Bible class, responded. Now they have more than fifty pupils gathered from a territory reaching for a mile and half up and down the lake front, and a Bible has been put into every home, and, in many, family prayer is held. Some of the children are barefooted and poorly clad, and the meeting place is the loft of a fire engine house. At one time they only had two pupils, but the need of the field was the call for zeal. Fidelity to the Lord, and joy and success is their reward. Consecration, fidelity, sole leather, souls, a church!

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

On the first Sabbath in January, the Columbia Sunday school held an installation service, installing all the officers and teachers of the Sunday school, including the officers of the organized classes. It was a pleasant and profitable service. It would do well to have a service of this kind in each church every year.

We print again for the benefit of all concerned, the Standard of Excellence adopted by our General Sunday School Board. We earnestly desire each pastor and Sunday school superintendent who has attained this standard to report to me, so the name of the school can be printed in the Advocate. Your name will be an inspiration to others, so please do not delay. If you do not meet this standard, suppose you try for it, and as soon as you attain it, report.

This Sunday school has also adopted a system of graded mission studies for the year. It is based on the new graded lesson course. For the primaries, and Juniors, there is a course adapted to each year. Beginning with the intermediates, mission study classes are organized, which continue through the school, the books being adapted to the age of the student. We look for large results. Instead of setting aside the collection one Sunday each month for missions, the amount desired is divided into shares, each class taking so many shares as its portion, and raising this stated sum. A missionary program is had every fourth Sunday, participated in by the whole school.

Standard of Excellence.

Cradle roll; Home department; Wesley Adult Bible class; Teacher training course; Graded instruction; Missionary instruction and offering; Definite decision for Christ urged; Annual observance of Children's Day and taking offering as required by the Discipline; The use of our own literature; and A session every Sunday in the year.

Each of the foregoing counts ten. A school meeting all these requirements will be recognized as a Standard Sunday school, and will be entitled, upon application to Mr. E. E. French, superintendent of Sunday school supplies, Nashville, Tenn., to a certificate of recognition issued by authority of the Sunday School Board. Price of certificate, 25 cents.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Brother R. M. Evans is making unusual progress at South Side, Corinth, and will have all his Sunday school plans well formulated after a little while.

Dr. Bolivar T. Jones writes us concerning his good school in Shuqualak and promises further re-organization and progress. He says Children's Day is always looked forward to with pleasure. He anticipates a fine year's work.

Edmund Gosse, Librarian of the House of Lords, said: "When young men ask me for advice in the foundation of a prose style, I have no counsel for them except this, 'Read aloud a portion of the Old and New Testaments, as often as you possibly can.'"

The Gleaners, Judge Lamb's fine class of women, planned the elaborate and beautiful Christmas Sunday school service, which was enjoyed by Mr. Cooper's growing school at Eupora. Judge Lamb delivered a splendid lesson exposition, and the hour was one of great joy and promise.

Rev. J. H. Holder writes that the Sunday school in Okolona has been reorganized and systematized, and the Graded Lessons put in the Elementary Department, and all are much pleased with these upward changes. A new piano will be placed in the Sunday school room in a few days. Mr. E. E. French recently addressed the Sunday school teachers and officers in this place.

Our Publishing House has issued an inspiring leaflet, written by Dr. Hamill on the Pocket Testament League. Their testimonies are splendid for the purposes specified. This is a great and far reaching work, and all adult and teen age classes especially, should introduce and emphasize it immediately. The Sunday school lessons for the year are in the New Testament. This adds double appropriateness to this fine idea of carrying a Testament, marked and well used. The testimonies of many of the men who have been reading their Testaments for several months are arguments sufficiently convincing to require no others. Write for leaflet, and put this splendid plan of increasing Bible study and personal consecration into immediate and working use in your class.

Money in your Wood Lot

It is cheaper to make lumber with an "American" Saw Mill than to buy lumber. In that timber on your wood lot are thousands of feet of first-class lumber waiting for you to get a saw mill of your own to take it out. But be sure your mill is an "American," which needs less power to drive it, costs less to run and cuts more lumber than any other mill. And the "American" is so simple that you can run it yourself, using your farm engine for power. Our book—"Making Money Off the Wood Lot"—tells all about farm lumbering. Shall we send you a copy? A HARMONIOUS MEETING.

The district stewards of the Brook-haven, Miss., district met in the Methodist Church at Brookhaven at 1:45 p.m., January 10, 1912, with Rev. J.
T. Leggett, presiding elder in the chair. Z. Z. Linton was made secretary. The presiding elder's salary was allowed to remain at $2400. A committee of three composed of W.
T. Denman, T. B. Butler and Z. Z.
Linton, was appointed to draft a suggestive apportionment of the assessments for the district. Their report was adopted.

The assessment for the district is $250 in excess of 1911, due largely to the assessment for the expenses of delegates to the General Conference.
The spirit of the meeting throughout was inspiring, and foreshadowed a year's work of progress along every line in spite of the boll weevil scare.

Rev. R. Selby delivered a short address at the close of the meeting in which he said that this was the best district steward's meeting he had ever attended. He offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved; That as preachers and laymen here assembled, we promise, by the help of God, to lay ourselves out to make this year of our lives the very best in advancing the Master's work in the Brookhaven District."

The presiding elder made a short and impressive talk, thanking the stewards for their presence and urging us to keep ever in mind that the financial side is not the most important side of church work, but that he placed the greatest importance on the spiritual work.

We regret that our beloved presiding elder, the Rev. J. T. Leggett, cannot serve us longer than this year; however we are in no wise finding fault with the four-years' limitation clause. We are all sound Methodists and believe in our itinerant system.
The writer cannot decide what the other charges in the district will do when Brother Leggett's term is out and he no longer makes his periodical calls; but as for Fernwood, we are growing rapidly and hope soon to become one of the foremost stations in our district, and we trust that we shall be able to add to the salary and have him with us as pastor for four years. Z. Z. LINTON, Secretary.

THREE ROADS TO RUIN.

Andrew Carnegie says: "There are three dangers in the path to success.
The first is the drinking of liquor, the second is speculation, and the third is 'indorsing.' When I was telegraph operator in Pittsburgh, I knew all the men who speculated. They were not our citizens of best repute; they were regarded with a suspicion. I have lived to see all of them ruined, bankrupt in money and bankrupt in character. There is scarcely an instance of a man who has made a fortune in speculation and kept it. The third danger is the perilous habit of indorsing notes. When a man in debt in-dorses for another, it is not his own credit or his own capital that he risks;
it is the money of his own creditors.
Therefore I say that if you are ever called upon to indorse, never do it unless you have cash means not required for your own debts, and never indorse beyond your means."—New York Christian Advocate.

"It has been declared that 'many people owe the grandeur of their lives to their tremendous difficulties.' Difficulties are stepping-stones to honor, to usefulness and to achievement."—

NOT A DAY IN BED.

Gramling, S. C.—In a letter from Gramling, Mrs. Lula Walden says: "I was so weak before I began taking Cardui, that it tired me to walk just a little. Since taking it, I do all the housework for my family of nine, and have not been in bed a day. Cardui is the greatest remedy for women on earth." Weak women need Cardui. It is the ideal woman's tonic, because it is especially adopted for women's needs. It relieves backache, headache, dragging feelings, and other female misery. Try Cardui. A few doses will show you what it can do for you. It may be just what you want.

Terrible Suffering

Eczema All Over Baby's Body.

"When my baby was four months old his face broke out with eczema, and at sixteen months of age, his face, hands and arms were in a dreadful state. The eczema spread all over his body. We had to put a mask or cloth over his face and tie up his hands. Finally we gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla and in a few months he was entirely cured. Today he is a healthy boy." AN EVIL AND ITS CHIEF CAUSE.

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

In the Advocate of Jan. 18, in your column of "Secular News and Comment," there occurs a news item concerning a movement in the right direction for the eradication of an increasing evil, which is dangerously affecting the life of the nation. I quote the entire paragraph, trusting that it may arrest and hold the thoughtful attention of every reader of the Advocate: "A new law made effective on Jan. 1, in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Vermont requires that parties desiring to secure marriage license must give at least five days public notice of their intention. Failure to give such notice makes illegal the marriage. The object of this law is to do away with elopement and secret marriages. It will further have the tendency to clip the wings of romance and sober the judgment of prospective contracting parties."

This law is needed in the Southern States, since the South is the great matrimonial region of the United States, according to the statisticians of the Census Bureau. A matrimonial table of the country would show Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Florida, and Mississippi in the lead, with an annual marriage rate of more than 450 per 10,000 of the adult unmarried population, and with Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Louisiana close on the heels of this leading group. No doubt this large marriage rate of the South is due to the fact that many young people enter hastily and unadvisedly into the marriage relation. Some safeguard, other than those already provided by our laws, ought to be thrown around this sacred relation to protect the young from themselves, and to minimize the divorce evil.

No statistics are needed to show that the divorce evil is on the increase. Divorces in Europe have nearly doubled in the last twenty years. In our own country divorces for the country as a whole are increasing out of all proportion to the increase in population. Already our divorce rate is higher than that of any other country except Japan. To explain this alarming increase in the divorce rate many and various causes are given, such as drunkenness, desertion, adultery, neglect to provide, etc. But I believe that the most prolific source of the trouble is the ease with which the young, and often mere children, can secure marriage license and find a preacher or "squire" to perform the ceremony. Some preachers, even Methodist preachers, will marry, without question, any eloping couple of children, excusing themselves and salving their consciences by saying, "Well, if I don't do it, somebody else will." It is a well known fact that any country "squire" or city magistrate will say the words to make them man and wife for a dollar. Back of all this is the ease with which marriage license can be secured. Many of the circuit clerks of the various counties in the State stand ready for the paltry sum of three dollars to issue marriage license to all comers—old, middle-aged, and children, and fathers and mothers are perfectly helpless. What can we do when an august officer of the law, to increase his stipend by three dollars, authorizes the marriage of our children? The writer knew one circuit clerk who issued a marriage license with a letter of protest from the father lying before him.

Domestic felicity is being disturbed and the divorce evil is being increased by the ease with which marriage license may be secured. A cry is going up all over the State from the hearts of helpless fathers and mothers for relief from careless clerks and ministers of the gospel. Who will afford the relief? Let the Mississippi Legislature, composed of representatives from all the counties, answer by enactment of a law similar to the one mentioned in the above-quoted paragraph and let the bans be published before the issuance of license.

CENTENARY Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

The beginning of the year 1912, and especially the beginning of the second semester of this session, marks an awakening in the Young Men's Christian Association, of Centenary College which we have every hope will continue and accomplish the end and aim of the Association in college life.

Mr. D. B. Boddie has been elected president, and has gathered around him a cabinet composed of the best men who could be obtained from the entire student body. This cabinet has the support of almost all of the students in the dormitory and a majority of those outside. The devotional committee, with Mr. W. A. Odom as chairman, has been instructed to secure professional and business men to speak on subjects that are interesting and instructive to the students at the Wednesday night meetings.

Last Wednesday night, Attorney E. A. Brown made an interesting talk on "Christianity as Applied to College Life." The subject for discussion at the next meeting is, "The College Man." Judge Murff is expected to be the speaker.

As the object of the Y. M. C. A. is to cultivate the moral, mental and physical man, it is the one organization that has a place for every student, no matter what his inclinations or likes may be. The intention here is to follow out the plan of the national organization and emphasize every side of the work.

LATEST WONDER OF THE AGE.

Religious differences are gradually fading away. Christians are coming closer and closer together. The latest wonder is the breaking down of immersion sectarianism by Mahaffey's book on Baptism. Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balm antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

"FALSE SECURITY OF THE UN-RIGHTEOUS."

Amos ii, 14-16; Gal. vi, 7-8.

In our first reference Amos denounces the Israelites and the nations round about for their sins. He draws a picture of the decay of their national prowess. It is a painful remembrance of departed power. (Read the first and second chapters.)

The Reason for Such a Decay.

On this point we cannot do better than quote from Telford: "Sin had borne this dreadful fruit. All their national valor sprang from confidence in God. They knew that 'the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.' What foe could stand before men who leaned on the arm of God? Lord Bacon says, that 'man, when he resteth and assureth himself upon divine protection and favor, gathers a force and faith which human nature in itself could not obtain.' * * * Sin had sapped their confidence in heaven, and the whole fabric of their national life was tottering to its foundations. They felt the truth of the old words: 'He that offendeth against heaven has none to whom he can pray.' History presents many parallels to this declension. Injustice and sin have shorn great men of their strength, and left them weak in the hour of danger." The effect of this decay was very apparent. Foes, who were held in check only by fear, soon discovered their declension and consequent weakness. Thus we learn that sin is ruin. He who would be secure in this life must be loyal to heaven, and,

"This above all, to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Sowing and Reaping.

It is a very trite saying, but none the less true, that youth is the seed-time for our more mature life, and that our whole life here is the seed-time for eternity. This analogy is very simple, plain, and easily understood. We cannot reap without previous sowing, and we cannot hope to reap where we have not sown. We can only expect a harvest of the same kind of seed we have sown, and we may expect to reap more than we have sown. What are the seeds we are all sowing every day and all the time? Our thoughts, our feelings, our purposes, our plans, our words, our acts, our conduct—these are the seeds we are constantly sowing, and from the kind of seed we sow we shall surely reap an abundant harvest. They who sow to the flesh shall "reap corruption." "That which is defiled, that which is worthless, that which is filthy, that which is abominable, corrupt in body, corrupt in mind, corrupt in associates, all the corrupt deeds of the guilty past, of the unforgiven, unrenovated, human population, concentrated, is amassed for them; a harvest of corruption!" But if we sow to the Spirit we shall reap life everlasting.

The Theme Illustrated.

"It is impossible for a man continuously and successfully to practice a fraud upon his immortality, upon his neighbor, upon his God."—Sam Jones.

"A man expects to reap that which he sows. He expects to reap a crop of the same kind that he has sown. He expects to reap more than he sows. Ignorance of the kind of seed sown will make no difference to the crop."
—Moody.

In discoursing on the principles of the spiritual harvest, F. W. Robertson says: "There are two kinds of good possible to man—the one enjoyed by our animal being, the other by our spirits. There are two kinds of harvests, and the labor which procures the one has no tendency to produce the other. Everything has its price, and the price buys that and nothing else; the soldier pays his price for glory and gets it; the recluse does not. The mistake men make is that they sow for earth, and expect to get spiritual blessings, and vice versa. Christian men complain that the unprincipled get on in life, and that the saints are kept back. But the saints must pay the price; they have as their reward something better for which they do pay. No man can get two harvests for one sowing.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A REMARKABLE HONOR.

In 1840, 7 members of Congress from North Carolina, 94 members of the State Legislature, and the Mayor and 42 leading citizens of Raleigh, N. C., united in presenting a petition to the Director of the Medical Bureau of the United States Navy, which closes with the following words: "While all can testify to the high reputation this medicine sustains in the respective counties we have the honor to represent, many of us know, by happy experience in our own families, its efficacy; therefore, we can with much propriety, and do with great pleasure, give Dr. Gray our names in support of his truly valuable ointment."

For three generations Gray's Ointment has held first place in the treatment of boils, carbuncles, chronic sores, festering cuts and wounds, and in the prevention of blood poisoning. Free sample on request or 25c at your druggist's. Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 807 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Moreover, we must remember that all self-denial develops character; that not only in order to resist temptation to bodily indulgence, but also to strengthen the will, we need to learn a little hardness.—Bishop Hall.

A WORD FROM TEXAS.

Suffer a few words from an old North Mississippi preacher who is now in the great State of Texas, and has been for ten years past.

I have been a reader of the New Orleans Advocate all these years, and would not know how to get along without it. And permit me to say that I think the paper gets better all the time. This may be because the present editor is an old, and especial friend of mine; I knew him before he entered the ministry, and may have had something to do with his going into the work at the time he did. At all events the Church was fortunate in securing him as the editor of the old New Orleans Advocate.

I have started upon my eleventh year in the Texas Conference, and this is my ninth year as presiding elder. Whether this is to my credit or not, I am at a loss to say. I hope the readers of this will not think me egotistic as I give account of myself since I first came to this Conference; for be that far from me. But I thought maybe some of the good friends of other days would be glad to know something about what I have been doing for the past ten years.

My first work in this great Conference was Kosse Circuit, a very nice little appointment of three churches. That was a fine year. The people were very good to us; so much so, that we did not want for any thing, and best of all we had great revivals that year. Fifty-six people were added to the church, most of them grown men and women, and the charge did more that year than it had ever done up to that time. And it has been one of our very best charges ever since.

It was my good fortune to serve Jacksonville Station for fifteen months. This was a delightful place, and, but for the fact that I was appointed by Bishop Murrah, to take charge of the Pittsburg District upon the death of the presiding elder, I should, perhaps, have remained in the Jacksonville Station for four years. At any rate, the fifteen months of my pastorate there was to me a great time. Some of the visible results were 246 additions to the Church; $4500 dollars raised on the church debt; an increase of $300 on the pastor's salary; three young men called to the ministry and many other things which will be revealed in eternity. Those are good people.

I am now on the Breham District, where we have many foreign-born people, and where our Church has a great responsibility; and I pray that this may be a year which shall witness the salvation of many of these people, and bring them into our Church. The year has opened up well.

May I ask an interest in the prayers of all my friends in my old Conference? I love the Texas Conference, and why should I not, since the brethren have been so good to me and mine?

ANYWHERE, ALONE WITH HIM.

Wherever thou art, thou hast near thee an altar and a sacrifice, for thou art thyself priest, altar and sacrifice. Our worship is not external, like that of the Jews. Wherever thou art, thou canst build an altar; it suffices that thou shouldst feel deeply the want of God's help; even if thou canst not bend the knee, strike thy breast or raise thy hands toward heaven. A woman at her spindle can raise her soul to God and cry with her heart to him; a merchant at the market or at the exchange can examine himself and pray with fervor. An artisan at his workshop can pray. God only requires that the heart should be warm and the desire honest.—Saint Chrysostom.

Editorial

The longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it; it will grow sweeter and sweeter; and the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the spirit of Christ.—Romaine.

Silence is sometimes scarcely less censurable than evil speech. To sit calmly by and hear one whom we know to be upright and honorable misrepresented and traduced, without uttering a syllable of remonstrance, lacks much of measuring up to a high ideal of conduct.

The late Hon. John M. Harlan, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, is reported to have left an estate of only $13,000, of which $7200 was in insurance. Poverty is not a thing of which to boast, yet it may evidence the fact that one has a higher purpose in life than the mere acquisition of wealth. This was undeniably true of the distinguished jurist; for, though he had little money, he had lofty ideals, large capacity, and a worthy Christian character. These are far nobler possessions than a material fortune.

In The Outlook of January 27, Mr. Roosevelt writes impressively upon "The Church and the People." He insists that the Church should recognize its mission as being to the great masses of the people, and laments its disposition to retreat from the thickly settled down-town districts in our cities. We think the distinguished ex-President's view is incontrovertible. Where human need is greatest, the forces of Christianity should be most active. A Church that affects to be stylish and exclusive has lost the spirit of the Master and can accomplish but little, if any, good. Jesus died for the entire race, and we represent him properly only when we seek to save the whole world.

We think Bishop Candler is right in affirming that the Church has no graver problems in this age than it had in former ages. We imagine that Paul in Corinth or Athens or Rome had as many difficulties to combat as any Christian pastor in our modern cities. The truth is, there are no new virtues or vices. One of the most unchanging things in existence is human nature. Man to-day in every essential particular is the same that he has been ever since he left the gates of Eden. And the same mighty forces are contending for his salvation or destruction now as in former centuries. If the Gospel could win its way in the opening years of the Christian era, when it had only a few obscure adherents and hostile faiths and entrenched evils showed a frowning front on every side, certainly there is no cause for pessimism or despair in this day. Our adversaries are yet many and powerful, but the Christ who routed them in the past is still our leader, and in his strength we may continue to conquer. If we but go courageously forward in obedience to his commandments, every problem will ultimately be solved.

THE DICKENS CENTENARY.

Yesterday, February 7, marked the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Charles Dickens, and the occasion, very properly, is being celebrated throughout the English-speaking world. One who renders humanity a great service deserves to have his name honored and his memory kept forever green. And this is what Dickens did. The products of his pen are among the priceless possessions of mankind. He was one of the great teachers of his day and generation, and in some of his works struck telling blows against the prevalent evils of his time. In "Nicholas Nickleby," he deals vigorously with the barbarous educational system which then existed in some parts of England; in "Bleak House" the faulty judicial procedure of the country was held mercilessly up to the public gaze, and in "Little Dorrit" the cruel law of imprisonment for debt was exhibited in its true light. Daniel Webster is reported to have said that, by the composition of these books, "Dickens did more for the elevation of the common people of England than did her ministers in Parliament for a hundred years."

But the influence of Dickens was not confined to the British Isles, nor to the period of his own lifetime. It has extended across the subsequent decades and into all the lands of earth. Its circle is wider to-day than ever before, and it continues to increase as the years pass. It would perhaps be wrong to claim the famous novelist as one of the great religious instructors of the centuries; but it must be conceded that his writings are clean and wholesome, and that they teach many valuable lessons. His caricature of the meaner traits of character tends effectively to rebuke and disparage them, while his beautiful setting forth of the nobler graces and virtues cannot but awaken a strong desire to possess them.

The characters created by the imagination of Dickens have as definite a place in human thought as if they had really lived, and few historical personages are more widely known or have the promise of a more lasting remembrance. They typify the different varieties of human nature, and thus serve a useful purpose and excite a perpetual interest. Nearly every community has its Micawber, its Uriah Heep, its Barkis, its Weller, its Quilp, its David, Dora, and Agnes. Because he so faithfully mirrored it upon the printed page, the living world about us tends to conserve and to widen the fame of Charles Dickens.

Of Dickens' genius, it is needless to write. His works speak for themselves. Though his youth was spent in poverty and his opportunities for scholastic training were meager, he quickly won public recognition. Popularity crowned his first ventures into the field of authorship and attended him to the close of his career. He has been honored with a place in Westminster Abbey, where repose the ashes of many of Britain's most illustrious dead. And his position in the literary world is secure. A plebiscite on the question would doubtless accord him the foremost rank among English novelists, if not among the novelists of the world. He did not selfishly seek personal renown, but sought to use his pen for the good of humanity; he was a prodigious toiler and worthily expended both his time and strength. The forty years that have elapsed since he passed into the sphere invisible have not diminished his hold upon the masses of his fellow-men, to whose hearts he is said to have come closer than any other writer since the time of Robert Burns.

We are gratified to note the interest which the people of the United States are taking in this celebration. Dickens twice visited our country, and here his youngest brother, Augustus N. Dickens, came to make his home and spent the latter days of his life. And there are now said to be no less than sixteen members of the Dickens family residing on our soil. But for that matter, the intelligent people of every land are interested in this centenary. For, though born an Englishman, Charles Dickens is a citizen of the world-wide republic of letters. He belongs to all races and climes, and to all ages to the end of time. The immortality of an imperishable service is his, and generations yet unborn will acclaim him their benefactor and hang fresh laurels upon his brow.

LET US PREPARE THE WAY.

Are you preparing for a revival in your charge? If not, why not? Of one thing you may be sure: it will never come unsought. Pentecost did not break forth upon an indifferent and unconcerned company. They had been meeting for ten days in the upper room at Jerusalem. And back of that were the years of constant, faithful work done by the Lord Jesus and John the Baptist. It was upon burdened, anxious, yearning hearts that the Holy Ghost descended on that memorable occasion. And so it has ever been. Every great revival in the history of the Church has had its antecedent period of preparation. The causes may have operated invisibly, but, notwithstanding, they were at work. Caprice and compulsion do not characterize the divine administration in the realm of grace. The law of the spiritual harvest is that sowing must precede reaping. The might of earnestness, if rightly exerted, never fails to prevail with God. The kingdom of heaven is taken by the violent. The asker receives, the seeker finds, and to him who knocks, the door is opened. Oh, let us, each and all, with prayerful lips, right words, busy hands and loving, expectant hearts, strive to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord among us in quickening, saving power. Will you not to-day begin to do what you can?

We once heard a minister define faith as "taking God at his Word." This may not suit the theologians, but it strikes us as a pretty clear definition. At any rate, it is one that the average person can understand, which is more than can be said of some labored attempts to explain faith to which we have listened.

COMING AND GOING.

Out of the dreamless past I came Forth through the gates of pain,
Into the passing present thrust,
Infantile protest vain.
Forward again to the gates of pain
Ever I hurry along,
End, as beginning, preordained,
Journey a sign of song.

Found, when I entered, the unknown Here,
Many a fond carress,
Comfort of manifold love prepared,
Motherly heart to bless.
What shall I lack when I enter There
Thrust through the gates of pain?
Why should I doubt the love that awaits
When I go home again?

WAS CHARLES DICKENS AN IRRELIGIOUS MAN?

A Memorial Leaf to the Centenary Celebration of the Birth of the Great English Author.

By Carl Theodor Wettstein.

On Feb. 7, 1912, the admirers of Charles Dickens will celebrate the centenary of his birth. It is not our purpose here to eulogize nor to criticize him—we leave that to abler pens. Only on one trait of his character, on which opinions seem to be divided, we want to throw a little light—not by giving our own opinion; that would be like talking to the wind; but simply by referring to a few of the great author's own words on a subject on which he has been misjudged by some, and maliciously attacked by others.

Many, even well-intentioned people, have said that Charles Dickens was not a religious man. Of course, when these people read some of Dickens' stories without further thinking about what they are reading, they may receive such an impression. But Charles Dickens explains to these "well-intentioned" persons in his "Preface to the Pickwick Papers" what his motives were when writing these objectionable parts, as follows:

"Lest there should be any well-intentioned persons who do not perceive the difference between religion and the cant of religion, piety and the pretense of piety, a humble reverence for the great truths of Scripture and an audacious and offensive obtrusion of its letter and not its spirit into the meanest affairs of life; to the confusion of ignorant minds, let them understand that it is always the latter and never the former which is satirized here. Further, that the latter is here satirized as being, according to all experience, inconsistent with the former, impossible of union with it, and one of the most evil and mischievous falsehoods existent in society. It may appear unnecessary to offer a word of observation on so plain a head, but it is never out of season to protest against that coarse familiarity with sacred things which is busy on the lip and idle in the heart; or against the confounding of Christianity with any class of persons who have just enough religion to make them hate and not enough to make them love one another."

On the Life and Teachings of the Savior.

On the teachings of Christ he says: "I have always endeavored in my writings to express reverence for the life and teachings of the Savior because I perceive it."

Christ His Savior.

As to his faith in Christ as his Savior he says in his last will and testament: "I recommend my soul to the grace of God through our Savior, Jesus Christ, and I admonish my children humbly to let themselves be guided by the teachings of the New Testament."

What more do these "well-intentioned" persons want than this confession of his faith in Jesus Christ as his Savior? It also shows his high esteem for the Scriptures.

On Prayer.

As to his belief in the efficacy of prayer, he writes in a letter to his son: "Do not neglect the beneficent custom of prayer, morning and night, alone by thyself. I, myself, have always practiced it and have experienced the comfort it brings."

On the New Testament.

In a letter to his son: "I lay a New Testament among your books, because it is the best book the world has ever known, and will know; and because it gives to men that want to be true and dutiful, the very best instruction. I also have requested your brothers to be led by this book, regardless of human interpretations and inventions."

At another time he said: "I don't believe there are many people that humbly revere the New Testament more than I do. If they accuse me in regard to this of the contrary, it is because of my strong opposition to all obtrusive religious confessions, to all attempts to make business out of religion. I consider this as the main obstacle to true Christianity in the world. And the experiences of my life have instilled in my soul a strong aversion to all of those improper quarrellings about the letter that exclude hundreds of thousands from the spirit."

On Religion.

In a letter to his son: "You will remember that, at home, you were never tormented by religious exercises or mere formalities. So much better you will be able to understand it now when I praise to you the truth and beauty of the Christian religion, as Christ himself has brought it to us, and I solemnly assure you that you cannot go astray from the right path if you honor it with humility, but with the full fervor of your soul."

The above words of Charles Dickens should be able to expel forever all doubts of "well-intentioned" persons as to the religious character of the great English author.

Milwaukee, Wis.

A GREAT CAUSE GREATLY NEGLECTED.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

It is greatly to be feared that our preachers and our people are wanting in conviction concerning the importance of the educational work of the Church.

There is less concern about the educational collection than about any other of the general collections, and the deficits upon this collection are larger and more common than are the deficits upon any other. Yet no interest of the Church is more urgent and important than its educational interests.

"This education that forms the common mind," and the Church which fails in its educational work will have the small place in the future of our country. The Churches which in the past neglected this work are to-day suffering most seriously on account of their negligence; but in the future the consequences of such failure in duty will be far more marked than they have been hitherto, and far more ruinous.

Methodism committed itself to educational work from the very beginning, and Edward Everett said: "No Church in the United States has done so much for the education of the people as the Methodist Church." But could Mr. Everett say as much for us to-day? Has not the educational needs of the country outrun our efforts to do our part in meeting those needs? If we fall behind in this great matter, and others do the work, must not our Church suffer most seriously in both reputation and influence? If education is turned over to the secularists, who are seeking to dominate it in our country, will not our civilization be secularized and corrupted? And if so, what immense obstacles will then confront the preaching of the gospel, when our ministry stands before a refined and supercilious secularism, inaccessible to spiritual appeals? In certain classes and in a few communities we meet that sort of thing in spots now. What must be our difficulty when such conditions become general?

Reflection upon present conditions and future prospects should alarm and arouse those among us who are concerned for the success of the Church or the welfare of the country.

In our General Board of Education the educational work of our Church is co-ordinated and solidified. Through it the strength of the whole Church is, or ought to be, delivered upon the weakest points in our line of work. Its interests ought therefore to hold a high place in the attention and care of the pastors of the Churches. Its work is no minor matter. Appeals for the educational assessment ought not to be languid and tepid, but energetic and ardent. In distributing the results of the yearly collections the assessment for education ought to stand as high as that of missions or any other interest.

We cannot afford to allow this great interest to suffer, especially at this momentous point in the educational development of our country. The whole assessment—which is none too large in view of the urgent importance of the matter involved—should be raised in full. To fall below seventy-five per cent of the assessment would be disastrous to the work in hand; and we will fall below that figure if all hands do not aim at the full amount. Many strong charges must raise more than the assessments upon them in order to make up in part for the deficiencies which are certain to arise in weak and backward charges.

Let this great interest receive attention at the very outset of the new year, and the results of the collections made be forwarded without delay to the educational treasurers of the Conferences.

THE TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

Most of our older readers will remember the days when Methodists and Baptists delighted in pummeling each other (theologically), and interested congregations gathered from far and near to hear some preacher tell what he knew about bapto and baptizo. We understand that our Baptist brethren still keep up the traditions of the past in this regard, although, if the editor of the Canadian Baptist is well informed in the matter, some of the Baptist congregations are not receiving the same strong food as of old. But in Methodist centres there has been quite a change, and it is only very occasionally, as far as we can discover, that a Methodist preacher takes off his coat and "wades into" his Baptist brethren.

The points at issue are still unsettled, and theoretically Methodists and Baptists are as far apart as ever. But practically they seem to be getting a little closer. The Christian Century, of Chicago, representing the Disciples of Christ, gives one fact illustrating this. From a certain mission field, which it does not name, it was agreed that the Methodists should withdraw. It seemed desirable that the Methodists in that field should identify themselves with the Disciples, and the question was raised, should the Disciples receive them or not?

The Century referred the question to 126 Disciple ministers, and received 116 answers. Of these 22 were opposed to receiving the Methodists, 78 were in favor of it, although some 8 were fearful of its effect upon the home church, and the other 16 were somewhat non-committal. The Century places itself upon record as wholly favorable to receiving these members from a sister church.

But it goes further than that. It actually proceeds to discuss Alexander Campbell's views upon baptism, and its utterances show that Alexander Campbell's followers have travelled far upon the road toward toleration of the Methodist view. We quote a few paragraphs which seem to justify our view. The editor says:

"Careful reading of Alexander Campbell's utterances on baptism will disclose three assumptions upon which he builds his entire defence of the Baptist dogma. They are:

"1. That a word always retains its root meaning in all its forms and in every context.

"2. That 'baptizo' in the New Testament is a word of specific action.

"3. That scholarship justifies him in translating 'baptizo' by 'immerse' in the New Testament." He then goes on to say that "each of these assumptions is erroneous."

"Mr. Campbell conceived some 'law' to obtain, which held words to a certain logical course of usage. But there is no such 'law.' * * * It was purely capricious that 'bapto' should have come to mean 'dye,' that 'candidatus' should have come to mean an aspirant for public office. This assumption that words retain their root meaning throughout their entire usage is purely fictitious.

"But the most convincing evidence against this assumption of Mr. Campbell is found in the actual use of the word 'baptizo' itself two or three centuries after Christ. As is well known, it was at that time that sprinkling or pouring was introduced as a substitute for immersion in administering baptism. Greek was then the common language of the Church, just as common as in the time of Christ. But this ceremony in which water was poured upon a person was called 'baptisma.'

"Manifestly 'baptizo' did not mean 'immerse' to the Greek-speaking church of the third and fourth centuries. It connoted the rite of induction into the church, a rite whose essential meaning was found elsewhere than in the particular physical act by which it was solemnized."

"We imagine that, if Alexander Campbell could have heard this follower of his thus proceeding to abolish his whole foundation, there would have been rather a lively scene. Something would have been doing about that time.

Probably the hardest blow of all, however, is given to the old Baptist contention when the editor discusses the claim that scholarship is all on the Baptist side. This is what he says:

"There is something very naive and yet very shrewd in the way Mr. Campbell and all Baptist controversialists quote the 'scholarship of the world' on their side. One cannot help wondering how these scholars, the great majority of whom are pro-Baptists, can go right on practising affluence if they are on the Baptist side of the controversy!

"The fact is, that on the vital point of the argument the scholars quoted by Mr. Campbell are not on the Baptist side. Baptist controversialists have a way of overlooking the most important utterances of the authorities they quote. They also have a way of reading their own view into the sentences of these scholars. * * * On the point that 'baptizo' in its characteristic New Testament meaning signifies 'immerse' and should be so translated, these scholars are either silent or opposed."

The candor of these statements is very refreshing. They do not give us anything very new, but it does sound rather pleasant to hear these old Methodist arguments from the mouth of a present-day follower of Alexander Campbell.

Verily the world moves, and if we can only be patient a little while we shall find that time itself has settled some very vexed theological questions in its own way, and that all followers of Jesus Christ are a little closer to each other than seemed possible in former days.—Christian Guardian.

THE "GYPSY" SMITH MEETING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

This remarkable man began a series of meetings at one of the very largest skating rinks in the city, on December 30th. The rink was arranged—so I am informed—to seat 6000, and I do not think the number was exaggerated. From the vast size of the building, one would think that more than that number could be accommodated. At the first service, more than half the seats were full, and there was a decided interest. A revival appears to be a novelty in this big city. In spite of bad weather (for this is the rainy season), there has been a steady increase in the size of the audiences, and on the last nights hundreds could not get into the room, and the door was closed almost half an hour before the time for the sermon to begin. Dr. Dille, one of the famous preachers of the West, said that he had been here and around this section for thirty years, and no such meeting had ever been held here before.

He further said that he had never seen so much interest in church work, and so intense an earnestness about salvation. It could hardly be otherwise, as there is perfect harmony among the ministers of all the churches, and each one appears to be trying to help on the work to the best of his ability. At one of the meetings in Dr. Aked's church, at the noon hour, the Episcopal Bishop made an earnest talk, and gave the movement all the weight of his great office and the sanction of his Church. It was not so much what he said, as his manner that showed where his heart is. Bishop Hughes of the M. E. Church is an active worker and a good speaker. Every one knows exactly where he stands, and his sermons are marked by rare eloquence and power. He is what all Bishops ought to be—a revival Bishop.

It may be of interest to your readers to hear more of the man who can attract such crowds in this city. He is not what is commonly called learned, but has a quaint way of impressing people with old truths. To a Bible student, he could never be called "instructive," but of his earnestness and sincerity, there can be no doubt. At one of the meetings he called on all the Episcopalians to sing the little chorus, "Revive us Again!" He had just been singing it alone, and then with the choir—a splendid one numbering 300. The response was hearty, but feeble, as to numbers. The next request was to the Baptists, and they were strong; so were the Presbyterians. At the end he called on the Methodists. This was our time, and we made use of it. They all seemed to try their best, and the vast building rang with the chorus. I did not think people out on the Western coast could sing, as I had never heard them do so. But this meeting has loosed voices, and they are singing strongly. I always feel hopeful of a singing church. Dr. Aked, the pastor of the First Congregational Church, and probably one of the most famous preachers in the world, is doing yeoman service in this meeting. It is in his church that all the noon meetings are held.

Mr. Smith—"Gipsy," as he loves to be called—has few of the characteristics of the modern evangelist. There is no roughness, no uncouth manners, no "mannerisms." He never tells a questionable story, or uses an illustration that could be made evil. He does not stress the terror of the law, but rather persuades men by the beauty of the Christ life and the perfection of salvation. Some of his sayings are about as follows: "I am not educated, I cannot tell you about higher criticism and theology, but I do know the way to Jesus, and if you will let me I will show you the way." "I am only a poor-gypsy boy who has found the way to Jesus, and I do want you to learn the way." "When I see my people in their wagons, as they go about the country, I am not ashamed of them—I love them and am proud that I am a Gipsy, but I know that but for the grace of God and the goodness of Jesus, I would be there too." On one occasion when he preached about Christ healing the woman sick for twelve years, he said: "The other people thronged Him, but she only touched the hem of his garment: too many people are willing to be amid the throng, but how few really touch Jesus. When you touch Him you will know it at once—He is a live wire."

I could take up more room, and tell you of many things of interest that he said, but enough, lest I make this letter too long. Last night he gave a lecture for work among the Gipsies, the admission being 25 and 50 cents, according to the location of the seats. The hall was full to the doors, and, curiously, the crowd called on the chairman to have a collection taken for the mission. It was taken, and was an exceptionally good one. Out here they say that Secretary McCoy of the Y. M. C. A., who usually makes the financial appeals, is the most "painless extractor of money" known to the West. The meeting is to close to-night, and has been a wonderful awakening of interest, so I am told. I have not heard how many were converted, or how many accessions the churches have had, but if there were none, the very evident interest of a religious character that the meeting has excited will do great good. It has started people to thinking that there may be some use for churches, and that there may be a better way of living than the one they know.

Now just a word about our little Centenary Church—the only representative of the Southern Church in this vast city. At the last Annual Conference, Bro. J. W. Horn was sent as the pastor. He is on the same style as our lamented Bro. A. D. Miller. His manners, style of preaching, general appearance, and even his genial smile, are the same. He is also about as lovable and tender in the family and pastoral relation. I think he will do a good work here, as he is tireless and energetic. Already there is a great increase in the size of the congregations and Sunday school, and the members do not seem so discouraged and depressed as formerly.

We are looking for a great blessing from this meeting and the series that is to follow at the church. Fraternally, J. C. BALLARD.

WISE WORDS FROM BISHOP HOSS.

The following is an extract from Bishop Hoss's great address to the class admitted into full connection at the recent session of the Western North Carolina Conference:

"Yours will be a life of service; you will not get rich. Yet it is the happiest life on earth. The burden of the old preacher is to give up his loved employ. It is sad to drop out of the line and see the procession go by without you. The Church expects you to be good men. This is the prime consideration. No man can preach the Gospel until he first lives it. From the heart the message must come, if it is to touch the hearts of others. Faith in Christ is more than an historical belief. In the inmost heart there must be abiding assurance of His presence and love. There are no limits to the possibilities of the soul's growth, neither in time nor eternity. Christ comes down to our level to take us up to His presence. Nothing is too good to be believed by one who is good enough to be saved by divine grace. The Church expects you to be effective ministers of the Gospel. Never sing, 'O to be nothing.' Make the best of yourselves. The day of the best preachers is not gone. Have a message and the path to the church will be filled. You must be diligent students. No man becomes a great preacher suddenly. Study the Word of God until you master it, by verse, paragraph and by book. In these days there is so much study about the Bible, and the Bible is too often neglected. The Church not only expects you to be good and to preach, but it expects you to be pastors. Among your people, in their homes and places of business, you get some of your best sermons. People will never forget you if you are with them in their hours of grief. And don't forget the 'neglected rich,' and love the little children."

GREAT SUFFERING IN CHINA.

President Taft, chief executive of the American Red Cross, appeals again for help for the famine sufferers of China, declaring that millions of people are facing starvation on account of the crops being destroyed by the floods.

I would be glad to receive any contributions, however small, for these suffering people, and the same will be forwarded immediately to the American Red Cross at Washington, D. C., to be transmitted from there by cable to the seat of suffering.

Church News

The Florida Christian Advocate is now published at Arcadia, instead of Jacksonville.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will meet in Minneapolis next May.

The M. E. Church, South, is expending about $12,000 in Tampa for the evangelization and education of the foreigners in that city.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan recently purchased in London two Bibles for which he paid $48,675. They were, of course, very old and rare editions.

The English Baptists, according to their Year Book for 1912, number 418,603. As compared with the figures of the preceding year, this is a loss of 72 communicants.

It is stated that eighty-seven per cent of the students of Central College, Fayette, Mo., are members of the Church; and that at Howard-Payne the showing is even better.

The Virginia Methodists will hold a great Laymen's Conference at Lynchburg February 14 and 15. Among the noted speakers engaged for the occasion are Bishop A. W. Wilson and Bishop Collins Denny.

Trinity College, Durham, N. C., has property valued at $843,715; an endowment of $441,329; 44 professors, and 638 pupils. Greensboro Female College in the same State has property worth $227,300; an endowment of $100,000; 18 professors, and 224 students.

Ex-Vice President C. W. Fairbanks is president of the Methodist Social Union of Indianapolis. This distinguished American takes an active interest in the affairs of Methodism, as also do Ex-Senator Beveridge and Ex-Governor Frank J. Hanly of the same commonwealth.

It is stated that about 2700 persons professed acceptance of Christ as a result of the Gipsy Smith meeting in San Francisco. It is reported that the evangelist will be asked to return to the city and conduct services during the entire time of the Panama Exposition in 1915.

The Methodists of Toronto, Canada, gave last year to missions $5.67 per capita. The Metropolitan Church, with 962 members, raised $13.08 for every communicant; Central Church, with 799 members, $18.06, and the Sherbourne Street Church, with 1,029 members, $19.56.

The Central Christian Advocate states that a canvass conducted by the Men and Religion Forward Movement in St. Louis, Missouri, shows that there are in that city 458 churches, one to every 1,500 people, while there are 2,250 saloons, one to every 300 of the population.

Dr. William Newman Clark, who was eminent as a theologian and who became Professor of Christian Theology in Colgate University in 1890, died recently at Deland, Fla., where he had gone with his wife to spend the winter. His "Outline of Christian Theology" is regarded by scholars as a really great work.

The corner-stone of the Park Street Methodist Church of Atlanta, Ga., was laid on Saturday, January 20. This structure was started by Dr. J. W. Lee, now of St. Louis, and, when completed, will cost about $50,000, exclusive of the furnishing. The present pastor is the Rev. S. R. Belk, who in a little over a year has had 350 additions, 110 of them on profession of faith.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur, the noted New York Baptist preacher, has been called to succeed Dr. L. G. Broughton as pastor of the famous Baptist Tabernacle in Atlanta, Ga. This is one of the best equipped institutional churches in the United States. Dr. MacArthur is now in England, and it is not yet known whether he will accept the call.

A Christian University is being established in Cairo, Africa, which is the seat of the greatest Mohammedan institution of learning in the world. The Moslem school has been in existence for nine hundred years, and has at present an enrollment of from 10,000 to 12,000 students. In beginning educational work at this great center, the followers of Christ are invading the stronghold of what is, perhaps, Christianity's most formidable foe.

The Salvation Army of Chicago has recently dedicated another of its popular-price hotels, which makes six that it maintains in that city. The one just opened is a six-story building, of steel and concrete construction, and has 611 sleeping rooms. The correspondence and reading rooms are on the first floor. The rates are 15 cents a day and upward. It is said that 300,000 men occupied beds in these hostels during the year 1911.

The Commercial Appeal states that the Memphis Methodist churches pledged $27,000 on Sunday, January 28, to the Tri-State Hospital which is to be erected in that city. The several congregations gave as follows: First Church, $16,471; Madison Heights, $5,000; Second Church, $1,500; Mississippi Avenue, $1,500; Lenox, $1,000; Harris Memorial, $1,000; Annesdale, $200. Bishops Atkins and Kilgo, who were expected to spend the Sabbath in Memphis in the interest of this enterprise, were unable to keep their engagements; but Bishop Hoss was on hand and rendered valuable service to the cause.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Mr. Editor: I thank you for the following statement which appeared in a recent issue of the Advocate:

"The American Bible Society issued 3,231,722 volumes of the Scriptures during the past year. It publishes the Bible in more than 100 languages and sells the Gospels at 2c per copy, the New Testament at 5c per copy, and the Bible at 17c per copy."

Please kindly say in your next issue that anyone can become a member of the Society for life by paying $30. The number of members is limited, and it is quite an honor to be enrolled on the list. A life member is entitled during his lifetime to a certain number of Bibles each year. Also he receives all the publications of the Society free.

The Society keeps a colporter now in New Orleans, Rev. George Manotte, who is located at 1415 Chartres Street, and has a large and complete assortment of all Bibles, Testaments and Gospels issued by the Society in English, French, Spanish, Italian and German.

Many thanks for your kindness.

GEORGE MANOTTE.

NOTICE.

Rev. J. O. Bennett has been released by Bishop Mouzon from his appointment to Jennings, and his address for the present will be Lake Arthur, La. He is very anxious to secure work either in Louisiana or an adjacent State, and is ready to correspond with any presiding elder who needs a man.

I would like to secure the service of an unmarried preacher for Jennings. The charge, together with the appropriation made by the Board of Missions, will probably pay at the rate of fifty dollars per month for the time of service. Rev. M. C. Holt will serve the Jennings congregation together with Jeanerette as best he can until a permanent arrangement is effected.

If he is convicted, and the District Attorney says there is no chance for him to escape, the maximum penalty will be thirty years in the penitentiary and a $10,000 fine.

Andrew McConnell, a journalist and the founder of a so-called electrical healing cult, has been found guilty of the murder of his wife by a New Jersey jury. The world is learning by experience that the man who professes to have an improvement on the old-time religion is a safe man to keep an eye on. These founders of new faiths seldom include high morals in their practice.

AN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE.

A conference of the Secretaries of the Boards of Education of the several denominations of the country was held January 17th in Philadelphia.

Steps were taken to form a permanent organization. The name of the new institution is, "Council of Church Boards of Education." The following are charter members. Rev. Thos. Nicholson, D.D., New York, N. Y.; Rev. E. S. Tead, D.D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. Jos. W. Cochran, D.D., Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Robert Mackenzie, D.D., New York, N. Y.; Rev. F. G. Cotwald, D. D., York, Pa.; Rev. A. J. Turkle, D.D., Pittsburg, Pa.; Rev. H. H. Sweat, D.D., Louisville, Ky.; Rev. Stonewall Anderson, D.D., Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. J. W. Horine, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. C. M. Jacobs, Allentown, Pa.; Rev. W. T. Campbell, D.D., Monmouth, Ill.; President Hill M. Bell, Des Moines, Ia.; Rev. J. G. Gabhard, D.D., New York, N. Y.; Professor Rufus M. Jones, Haverford, Pa.; President R. L. Kelly, Richmond, Va.; Rev. M. T. Morrill, Dayton, Ohio; President Mines Lee Bates, Hiram, Ohio.

There are ten denominations represented in the Council, as follows: Methodist Episcopal Church; Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Presbyterian Church, (North); Presbyterian Church, (South); the Evangelical Lutheran Church; the Disciples of Christ; the Reformed Church; the Society of Friends; the Christian Church, and the United Presbyterian.

Among others, the following resolutions were adopted by the Council:

1. On religious work in State schools:

"That all the denominations represented in this Conference be requested to consider seriously the problems there presented, direct their national representatives to visit these institutions, study the situations at first hand, and inaugurate a serious effort to meet the religious needs of their own students in these state-controlled institutions of higher learning."

2 On publishing the proceedings of the Council:

"That the proceedings of the Council during the year be published, and that the money for the purpose be secured by requesting sufficient pro rata sums from the Boards represented in this Council; that the preparation of this publication be placed in the hands of the Secretary."

3 On time of meeting, 1913:

"That an annual meeting of this Council be held in 1913 on Wednesday, January 15, or, in case this date be found impracticable, upon such a proximate date as may be agreed upon by the Executive Committee."

HOW TO GET THE COLLECTIONS.

Dear Bro. Meek: I feel impelled to write you on the subject of raising the church benevolences. The article may appear untimely in the early part of the year, on first thought; but not so. Our pastors, of course, desire to raise these important assessments, but some of them do not know just how to do it.

There is much in a pastor getting his consent to do it. I am an Arminian in theory and practice. I do not believe that it was irrevocably and irreversibly decreed from eternity that a pastor on a certain charge could raise in a certain year just so much and no more for these worthy causes, do what he might. As regards these things I do not believe any more in absolute and unconditional predestination than I do as to immortal souls.

We read in Genesis that Abraham "went forth to go into the land of Canaan." It is needless to say he got there. So each pastor should say, "I will raise these benevolences," and he will do it nearly every time. This discussion is not academic. I am speaking from experience. I admit there are many things to discourage the preacher; many adverse conditions to overcome. On my first pastorate as well as the late ones, I was confronted by various difficulties: my health was poor; I had my Conference course to bring up; only 50 per cent of the assessments had been paid the year before; there was an increased assessment over the preceding year, and last, but not least, I had a yellow fever epidemic on my hands, with almost a thousand cases of yellow fever. But I had made up my mind to collect these claims and God helped me; and, as a result, I reported over twice as much as was paid the years preceding.

Last year, on the Haynesville work the assessments were more than one-half of the preacher's salary, representing a considerably increased assessment over the year preceding. The benevolences had not been raised in full from the work in some years; I had a five-cent drop in cotton in a strictly cotton country to face; I also had these encouraging words from a fellow preacher: "You will never raise them." But I did, thank God, and more. The Conference claims were overpaid, and, in addition, we paid a special to the Haynesville mission of about $50, and about $150 to the Orphanage.

What I have done, others can do. Say first, "I will." Then raise your assessment for missions in the early part of the year. Preach on missions and giving as a means of grace. When you go on a round of collecting, pray beforehand; pray silently, as you go, and God will give the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

WORK AND WAIT.

To wait and to work, to do his duty and leave the rest to God; to journey through life gathering truth into his heart, and then into the family, the Church, the city; to be its faithful voice—this is the best use a man can make of his mortal days. And should it be your lot to be "voices in the wilderness;" among your children deaf to your cries; among your compatriots insensible to your warnings, console yourselves. Greater than you have suffered the same fate. Unite yourself in spirit to their company and be happy to suffer with them. At least, as you come to understand more and more from day to day, the truth can not perish, and that it is potent even on feeble lips, you will establish in your hearts faith in the world that endures, and you will be less astonished and less disconcerted when you see the face of this world pass away. You will live by the sacred fire cherished in your soul. Let your furrow close, your hope will not perish! Like Moses on Nebo, you will enter into silence, having filled your dying eyes with the spectacle of the promised land.—Charles Wagner, in the "Gospel of life."

COUNTY CAMPAIGN OF EVANGELISM.

By Rev. Walt Holcomb.

Evangelism solves every problem of the Church. Its history proves the statement. We may not always endorse the methods of the evangelist, but we recognize the power of evangelism.

The Church has not given evangelism a fair chance. Other forces have had her hearty cooperation, while evangelism has felt the sting of her criticism. This is a plea for a more concentrated effort for evangelism.

County campaign of evangelism would solve many of the problems now confronting the pastors of our cities, towns and villages. The central places are dying for something to do, while the rural districts are dying because something is not done for them.

The idea is to evangelize the entire county before you quit. It may be done by holding a great union meeting in the most central place in the county. Where there are several towns in the county, the campaign could be started at the most suitable place, and the meetings follow in close succession. The same evangelist could be used in the different sections.

If the county can be organized in advance, the towns and villages can carry on the campaign at the same time. This plan requires the assistance of several co-workers. It has the advantage of the former plans in a greater organization, but is at a disadvantage in that it is more difficult to organize the county beforehand, than after the campaign has started.

One is as effective as the other, and the results are sure and satisfactory. After the larger places have been evangelized the same workers, with the trained forces of the larger towns, could push the work into the remotest sections. The rural places are the most fruitful for evangelistic efforts as they have not been evangelized.

The campaign can be carried on in any county of any State, and at any time. It can be launched on short notice, as the preparation goes on, in all parts of the county, while the central meeting is being held. Always keep in mind that you have a country-wide movement in view, and the plan will naturally work out itself. Pastors and people will fall into line with any sane, safe and sensible effort to save the lost in their community.

The movement is official. The pastors and churches are requested to take the matter under advisement, and after careful and prayerful consideration decide to enter into it.

It is regular. The campaign is of the Church, by the Church and for the Church. Our evangelists are ordained ministers, and some of them officially appointed by their denomination to do evangelistic work.

It is effective. The idea is one that has evolved itself in the process of evangelistic meetings. It has been worked out on the field, and is something more than a theory. The good influences radiate in every direction.

It is successful. We naturally expect results in any kind of church work these days, and the results should be commensurate with the effort put forth. Hundreds of thousands should be added to the churches as a result of such a campaign.

It is permanent. There will be a day or two given to the idea of conserving the results. It is so much easier to make the work lasting when you have evangelized in this thorough and practical way.

Any pastor who would like to see his county brought to God, and his neighbors and friends in the churches, would do well to start such a campaign. If we can help you in any way we shall be glad to do so. If you desire a booklet with the plan outlined and illustrated, address the Bureau of Evangelism, Vanderbilt Building, Nashville, Tenn.

REMINISCENT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

No. 6.

After the Female College commencement in Columbus, about June 25, a number of patients were moved to the college building. I was changed to the college building and employed as a druggist. I also wrote and sent out all requisitions for medicine, liquors and cordials. Of course, these liquors and cordials were bought by the government for the benefit of convalescent soldiers, but I learned that they were consumed in the main by officials. One night I received an order for a quart of whisky. I returned word that the whisky was just out. I received another order immediately for a quart of alcohol. A young physician from Nashville ordered it. I wondered what he wanted with the alcohol. The next morning in visiting the different wards with the doctors, I found the young physician as limp as an empty sack. His handsome complexion was fiery red, and on being questioned as to the cause, he would stammer in an idiotic way, and try to say, "erysipelas."

A number of elegant Christian ladies of the city visited the hospital daily, and they were ready to work or to sing or to pray. When I finished my prescription work in the morning, I joined them, and we worked together. Such solicitude for the lives, comfort and salvation of afflicted men, strangers to them, was an impressive and interesting sight to me. If I had not already been in sympathy with the Southern cause, these ladies would have won me over. One day, before I had finished my work, they found a lieutenant who seemed to be in a dying condition, and they came and told me. They said that the worst was that the poor man was not a Christian. I returned with them, but the man was sinking so fast that we could not converse with him, and he died in a short time. I do not believe that any more beautiful and accomplished young ladies lived anywhere than in Columbus, Mississippi. They wore the most ordinary apparel and toiled for hours each day making haversacks and knapsacks for the boys in gray. They and their mothers were doing home mission work—work for the Master, but perhaps they never regarded it in that light. The Army of the Tennessee, as it was called, was getting farther away from us, and late in the summer our authorities thought it expedient to follow up the army. We had received no patients for some time, and so many had died or been discharged and returned to their posts, that our hospital was almost broken up. General Bragg was in Kentucky, and parts of different regiments, brigades, and divisions assembled at Chattanooga for a few weeks. From there we went to Knoxville, and thence to Clinton on Clinch river. We had no regular supplies, not a grain of salt, nor a tent to shelter us by day or night. The officers were strict, and tried to protect the citizens, but in open daylight soldiers walked into camp with fat hogs on their shoulders.

"Hey! hey! hey! whose hogs ye got?" "You hush up! we wouldn't allow anybody's hogs to bite us. We had to kill them in self defence." I never knew the value of salt until then. We had fasted a day and night, and were eager for some pork to eat with our biscuits made of water and flour, but my first taste of the pork was my last. We had nothing then for three days, except the hard biscuits, and I was offered twenty-five cents each for some of mine, but I had none to sell. On Saturday night, October 24, snow fell, three or four inches in depth, and it turned cold enough to freeze a crust on it. We slept on one blanket, and covered with another that night, in front of a log fire, and the heat melted the snow, and kept us thoroughly wet. The snow did not disappear for about a week, and it was freezing weather each night.

TRUTHFUL OBSERVATIONS.

By Dr. Chas. M. Sheldon.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," a year ago, printed in his church bulletin these truthful observations:

1. We do not have to be perfect before we join the Church.
2. What we can not do alone we can do with God's help.
3. Growth is as natural in the spiritual as in the earthly kingdom.
4. There is a heavenly comfort for every earthly sorrow.
5. A child who joins the Church has a whole life to give in service.
6. Christianity which is not good for every day is not good for any day.
7. Most of our discouragements come to us because we are not daily walking with the heavenly Father.
8. The happiest feelings we ever know are those that come to us along the track of doing something for others.
9. The world belongs to God. We have no right to call its strength, its beauty, or its wealth our own unless we always mean they are ours simply because we are the Father's children.
10. God does not love greatness apart from goodness; and He does not care for power apart from principle.—Central Christian Advocate.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

FIVE LITTLE BROTHERS

Five little brothers set out together
To journey the livelong day;
In a curious carriage all made of leather
They hurried away, away!
One big brother and three quite small,
And one wee fellow, no size at all.

The carriage was dark and none too roomy,
And they could not move about;
The five little brothers grew very gloomy
And the wee one began to pout,
Till the biggest one whispered: "What do you say?
Let's leave the carriage and run away!"

So out they scampered, the five together,
And off and away they sped.
When somebody found the carriage of leather,
Oh, my, how she shook her head!
Twas her little boy's shoe, as every one knows,
And the five little brothers were five little toes.

A SPORT OF THE INFANT JAPANESE GIRL.

Little Japanese girls make a play of one thing that in later years becomes labor—labor of love though it is. As soon as a girl is old enough, perhaps 3 or 4 years, her dolly is tied to her back in the same way that she was fastened to her nurse's back when she was a baby. She carries this about while at play, and as she grows older a larger doll is used until she has grown accustomed to the weight and is able to carry her baby brother or sister, thus relieving her mother, who perhaps works in the rice fields or in a tea garden.—Circle.

"GO ABOUT YOUR BUSINESS."

The old temple clock in London bears a curious inscription, the origin of which is ascribed to a chance remark.

Some 200 years ago a master workman was employed to repair and put in a new face upon the clock. When his work was nearly done he asked the benchers for an appropriate motto to carve upon the base. They promised to think of one. Week after week he came for their decision, but was put off. One day he found them at dinner in the commons.

"What motto shall I put on the clock, your lordship?" he asked of a learned judge.

"Oh, go about your business!" his honor cried angrily.

"And very suitable for a lazy, dawdling gang!" the clockmaker is said to have muttered, as he retreated. It is certain that he carved "Go about your business" on the base.

The lawyers decided that no better warning could be given them at any hour of the day, and there the inscription still remains.—Harper's Weekly.

FOR MOTHER.

He was only a mite of a boy, dirty and ragged, and he had stopped for a little while in one of the city's free play-grounds to watch a game of ball between boys of his own and a rival neighborhood. Tatters and grime were painfully in evidence on every side; but the little fellow attracted the attention of a group of visitors, and one of them, reaching over the child's shoulder as he sat on the ground, gave him a luscious golden pear.

The boy's eyes sparkled, but the eyes were the only thanks as he looked back to see from whence the gift had come and then turned his face away, too shy or too much astonished to speak. But from that time on his attention was divided between the game and his new treasure. He patted the pear; he looked at it; and at last, as if to assure himself that it was as delicious as it appeared, he lifted it to his lips and cautiously bit out a tiny piece near the stem. Then, with a long sigh of satisfaction and assurance he tucked the prize safely inside his dirty blouse.

"Why don't you eat it, Tony?" asked a watchful acquaintance.

"Eat it? Ali meseif? Ain't I savin' it for mother?"

The tone, with its mingling of resentment and loyalty, made further speech unnecessary. Whatever Tony lacked—and it seemed to be nearly everything—he had learned humanity's loftiest lesson. He had another dearer than self, and knew the joy of sacrifice.—Baptist Young People.

IT WAS JUST LIKE HIM.

Jacob Riis, the famous American sociologist, in a recent address to a workingmen's club, praised generosity.

"I see a handful of children here," he said. "May they grow up generous. May none of them grow up into such a man as an old banker whom I know.

"He is a millionaire, and he lives in a palace, but his heart is as hard as steel and as cold as ice.

"One of his men completed, the other day, his twenty-fifth year of service. For twenty-five years this honest man had worked for the banker faithfully. He and his children were poor at the beginning, but where, in the quarter century, the banker had accumulated millions, the faithful middle-aged bookkeeper had only saved a few hundreds. His salary, you see, was only $25 a week.

"He didn't think the banker would remember the twenty-fifth anniversary of his engagement, but the old man did. That morning he handed the bookkeeper a sealed envelope.

"'George,' he said, 'to-day ends the twenty-fifth year of your work for me, and you have worked steadily and well. In this envelope is a memento of the occasion.'

"The bookkeeper opened the envelope, trembling and eager. Within lay his employer's photograph. That was all.

"In the face of a disappointment so bitter the poor fellow could say nothing.

"'Well,' asked the banker, 'what do you think of it?'

"'It's just like you,' said the bookkeeper simply."—The Christian Index.

THE ACORN IN THE JAR.

By Marion Hollowell.

Bobbie and his mother were taking a long walk in the park that afternoon. It was Saturday, and Bobbie was wishing that every day could be a holiday from school. "I just hate school anyway," he stoutly declared, "and I don't believe it does me any good to study the old books and maps and things!"

His mother had scarcely time to begin an explanation of the many benefits of school, when Bobbie ran from the path to pick up a handful of acorns that had fallen from a great oak. They were something new to him, and he was full of questions about oaks and acorns until they reached home.

"And does a big oak tree grow from one of these little acorns?" asked Bobbie.

"Certainly, my dear," said his mother. "Just as a big man grows from a little boy."

A few days later in cleaning up Bobbie's room, his mother came upon a small glass jar with one of the acorns in it. Nothing else was in the jar—just the acorn, and the cover tightly fastened on. She asked him about it when he came from school that night.

"Well, you see," explained Bobbie, carefully, "I want one of those big oak trees, like the one in the park, and so I put the acorn in the jar where it will be safe."

His mother looked at him thoughtfully for a moment and then she took him in her lap. "That is not the way that an oak tree grows from an acorn," she said. "It must first be planted in the warm earth, and then it must have sun and air and rain for many years before it will become such an oak as we saw in the park. That is the law of nature, and in nature it is just the same with a boy as with an acorn."

"What do you mean?" broke in Bobbie.

"I mean that the boy must go to school and learn many things before he can become the right kind of a man," answered his mother. "The boy has to have the years of school, just as the acorn has to have the years of warm earth and sunshine and rain. In both cases it is the law of nature and there is no other way. Do you understand?"

"Yes, I think I do," said Bobbie slowly. "I never thought before that we grow the same way the trees and plants do. I suppose if I didn't study and learn things I would always be like a little boy and not know things like father."

The next morning he carefully planted his acorn in a sunny corner of the garden, and then whistled cheerfully as he started off to school.—Youth's Companion.

A POINT TO BE GUARDED.

The trouble with too many of us is that we look upon our work as the chief thing, when the man we want to reach is the chief consideration. The ideal man is Christlike in the breadth of his sympathies. Christ was interested in all men: the child, the rich Zacchaeus, poor blind Bartimaeus, Simon the Pharisee and Simon the Zealot, the Jew, the Samaritan, and the Syrophenician, all found in Him a friend. The measure of a man is the breadth of his sympathy. Christianity is really the triumph of love, and heart-growth is the essential in Christian life. If in any way our work has blotted out, even partially, the figure of our brother, we have made a bad blunder. Christianity means service, but we must take care lest the service becomes the end and so ceases to be service. The Christian must always retain his humanity, with all its tender relationships. There never was, there never can be, a professional Christianity. When it becomes professional it ceases to be Christianity. The love of men is more than the love of work, and the best Christian work must ever spring from a love for men and a vision of their need.—The Christian Guardian.

HABITS OF STUDY ESSENTIAL.

Never was there a time when the ministry needed men of disciplined minds and wide and varied information so urgently as now. The public schools of the country have brought about a much more general diffusion of knowledge than formerly existed, and the average intelligence of the people is higher to-day than ever before. There is at this time scarcely a community in which there are not young men and women who have had collegiate training. A preacher who cannot speak correct English and who is untaught in the ordinary branches of a popular education, is now at a great discount in the manifold work of the Church. He may accomplish considerable good, but his limitations necessarily very greatly circumscribe his influence.

No man can hope to achieve large things for the Master in this age who does not earnestly seek to equip himself for the tasks that lie out before him. Studiousness is absolutely essential to a successful ministerial career. One who would hold the attention of the people must keep abreast of current thought. He must feed them upon fresh intellectual food—not upon the stale, discarded teachings of the past. To be sure, the essential truths of the gospel are the same that they have ever been, but they must be illustrated and enforced in the terms of modern thinking. The way in which a fact is stated has much to do with the effect that it produces. The shining of a jewel depends not a little upon its setting.

It is a matter of the greatest importance that our preachers should have their hours of daily study and cling tenaciously to them. Other things will constantly tend to interrupt and encroach upon them, but they should be held on to with a firm and unyielding purpose. To let them be broken up, marks the beginning of one's retrogression. Especially do our young ministers in the very commencement of their work need to form studious habits. Their first eight or ten years of service will very largely make or spoil them. Hence, the wisdom of adopting right methods in the outset. To the young men in the itinerancy, we say, Avail yourselves of every opportunity to increase your intellectual strength and resources. If possible, take both a literary and theological course at college. But if this cannot be done, be not discouraged. By assiduous private application, notwithstanding your lack of advantages, you may acquire a large degree of strength and efficiency in your high and holy calling. Some of the foremost ministers in American Methodism had little schooling. However, they were not uneducated, but self-educated men. This was true of Asbury, McKendree, Soule, Bascom, Marvin, and many others whose names are writ large in the annals of the Church. Those who were content to remain in ignorance, while these men sought and procured high equipment for service, achieved nothing worthy of record.

If it be thought that we are laying too much stress upon study and education, let the voice of Wesley, the most discerning church leader of modern times, speak. Writing to one of his associates in the work, he said:

"Your talent in preaching does not increase. It is just the same as it was seven years ago. It is lively, but not deep. There is little variety; there is no compass of thought. Reading only can supply this, with daily meditation and daily prayer. You wrong yourself greatly by omitting this. You can never be a deep preacher without it, any more than you can be a thorough Christian. Oh, begin! Fix some part of every day for private exercises. You may acquire the taste which you have not. What is tedious at first will be afterwards pleasant. Whether you like it or not, read and pray daily. It is for your life! There is no other way; else you will be a trifler all your days, and a petty, superficial preacher. Do justice to your own soul; give it time and means to grow; do not starve yourself any longer."

And at another time Mr. Wesley counseled his helpers as follows:

"Read the most useful books, and that regularly and constantly. Steadily spend all the morning in this employ, or at least five hours in twenty-four. 'But I read only the Bible.' Then you ought to teach others to read only the Bible; and, by parity of reason, to hear only the Bible. But if so, you need preach no more. Just so said George Bell. And what is the fruit? Why, now he neither reads the Bible nor anything else. If you need no book but the Bible, you are got above St. Paul. He wanted others, too. Bring the books, says he, but especially the parchments; those written on parchment. 'But I have no taste for reading.' Contract a taste for it, or return to your trade."

GOOD NEWS FROM OUR MISSION BOARD.

The report of the Treasurer of the General Board of Missions, which has just been given out, shows an increase in the income from the assessments in 1911 over the year preceding of $70,180, and a net increase of the receipts of the Board of $58,715. This is the largest gain in the receipts in twenty years, except in the year 1904-5, when there was an increase of $68,000. The total liabilities of the Board are also $74,854 less than they were in January, 1911. And this decrease of our indebtedness has been accomplished without serious retrenchment on the field, or lessening our missionary activity. On the contrary, the usual number of new enterprises have been inaugurated and seven new missionaries have been sent out. Large investments have been made in Soochow, Hiroshima, and in the Kwansei Gakuin, Candler College, Granberry College, and a new school in Uruguayana; also a hospital has been established at Wonsan, and the average number of churches have been constructed. Our leaders report that the missionary interest throughout the Church is very encouraging, and that everything points to good results during the year 1912.

This is, indeed, gratifying news, and we heartily congratulate Secretary Pinson and his associates upon this admirable showing. An enlarging interest in missions is a most wholesome indication of spiritual health and vitality. A Church that feels the weight of obligation to give the gospel to those who are without it in other lands, is pretty certain to look well after the work at home.

A NOTABLE GATHERING.

The general secretaries and field workers of the International Sunday School Association have been in annual session in New Orleans for several days. Representatives are present from nearly every part of the United States, and much interest has been manifested in the proceedings. The business meetings have been held in the convention hall of the Grunewald Hotel, though a number of public services have been conducted in the churches of the city. Various pulpits in New Orleans and other parts of the State were filled by the visitors last Sunday. We are pleased to have these capable and consecrated workers among us, and we trust that their conference may contribute much to the success of the great cause in the interest of which they are assembled.

IMPORTANT TO ALL.

We are sending this week bills to all of our preachers, traveling and local, who did not renew their subscriptions at the recent sessions of the Annual Conferences. The price of the Advocate to all ministers is $1 per annum, which is about the cost of publication. It is expected, however, that all subscriptions shall be paid for one year in advance. With our current expenses to meet regularly, we cannot conduct the business of the Advocate with a patronage which does not pay until in the fall. A dollar may seem an insignificant sum, but, coming from many sources, small receipts soon form a considerable amount. We greatly appreciate the kindness of our pastors in Louisiana and Mississippi, than whom there are none truer and nobler, and we feel sure that they will appreciate our effort to conduct the affairs of the Conference organ in a safe and business-like manner.

WORLDLY WAYS VS. THE WORD.

We often hear the suggestion that teachers of girls in the Sunday school should interest their pupils and enlarge their classes by teaching handwork in them. We do not question the fact that a live teacher could interest some girls in this way, but is this the object of the Sunday school? Now the suggestion is often made that the best time to assign these lessons and criticize the work done is during the first few minutes of the recitation hour on Sunday morning.

Our early experience with the Sunday school impressed us with the idea that its business is to teach the Word of God. The Sunday school can easily go astray at this point. In the first place, the commandment to keep the Sabbath holy would be seriously strained, if not broken, by such a practice. The example of bringing other than the Word of God into the class recitation as a feature to attract attention is a reflection on the power of the Holy Scriptures to attract, and, furthermore, the few minutes time allotted for class recitation is so short, and the opportunity of reaching a soul at this time so great, that each minute is worth a world for practical use for the Master.

The handwork idea in the Sunday school is paralleled by many other schemes that churches resort to in a vain attempt to make themselves more attractive than the Word of God. Is there a class among us who has forgotten the fact that the "Word is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit and the joints and marrow?" Will fancy work and handwork accomplish such results? We think not; and we further believe that the sooner our churches throw away every semblance of clap-trap methods and ways-of-the-world tactics and depend on the power of God alone through the agencies he has given us, the sooner we will be able to accomplish a great work for the salvation of mankind.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

What says the label on your Advocate? Now is the time to renew your subscription, if you have not already done so.

We received a nice list of renewals and new subscribers from Rev. C. C. Griffin, of Chunkey, Miss., this week, for which he has our thanks.

Rev. J. B. King, of Vaughan, Miss., has our thanks for two renewals this week. He is planning to extend the circulation of the Conference organ in his charge.

"Everything indicates that my fourth year here at Homewood will be the best of all," is the suggestive way in which Rev. W. W. Graves, of Homewood, refers to his work.

Rev. J. W. Cunningham, in a short note to us from Monrovia, Cal., renewing his subscription, adds that the extreme cold of this winter has done some damage to the orange crop.

Rev. A. J. Bonnett, the newly-appointed pastor at Sulphur, La., has been cordially received by the people of both Sulphur and Vinton. The pastor and congregations seem mutually pleased.

Rev. B. T. Crews has begun his work in Rayne, La., with his accustomed zeal and diligence. He has a loyal people to serve, and they are planning to enlarge or remodel the parsonage for his comfort.

Mr. R. M. Weaver and Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., are in the city this week attending the meeting of the secretaries and field workers of the International Sunday School Association.

Rev. K. W. Dodson has begun his third year at New Iberia, La., under favorable circumstances, and his popularity is increasing. The church there is looking forward to good results from his leadership.

Rev. Walter Jones, of Calhoun City, Miss., reports progress in his charge. His first quarterly conference has been held, and his people were well pleased with the presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Cunningham.

In a short, but cheering letter from Brother F. E. Bowman, of Wildwood, La., he says: "The Advocate has brought the message of love, good news and Christian cheer to our home for, lo, these many years."

The work has opened well at Florence, Miss., where Rev. J. S. Purcell is the popular pastor. The services thus far have been well attended and profitable. The ladies have recently put nice new matting on the parsonage floors.

Rev. Louis Hoffpauir, who is serving the Bell City, La., charge for the second year is a very earnest and energetic pastor, and, although he is in the Conference class of the first year, his people report that he is a good preacher.

Rev. Robert Randle has made a good beginning at Cotton Valley, La. He has been somewhat handicapped in his work by bad roads and the inclement weather, but in spite of obstacles good crowds have attended the preaching services.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell, who was returned to Hermanville (Miss.) at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, has been cordially received for another year. He has made his first round of appointments, and was rained out only once.

We make grateful acknowledgement of a fine list of subscribers sent us a few days since by Rev. J. B. Williams, of Lisbon, La. We trust that the circulation of the Advocate among the parishioners of this faithful pastor will prove helpful to the work.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Carriere, Miss., whose determination to place the Advocate in every home on his work has been previously mentioned, sent in four new subscribers this week. This brings his total up to 12 since Conference. Brother Lewis is doing a good work.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Utica, Miss., reports that his first quarterly conference was an encouraging one. Rev. W. H. Huntley, the presiding elder, preached two excellent sermons, and the churches made gratifying reports. The assessment for the support of the pastor was fixed at $1000.

Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., has lately been working in West Virginia. Writing from New Martinsville, under date of January 27, he says: "We are just closing what the citizens say is the best meeting in many years; I have been royally treated by a royal people."

Read Major Millsaps' statement concerning the famine sufferers in China, which we publish in another column. All moneys going into his hands will be receipted for and forwarded promptly. Remittances may also be sent through the New Orleans Christian Advocate, if contributors so desire.

Rev. A. B. Barry, pastor of the Lauderdale (Miss.) charge has recently organized an Epworth League with 28 members. He has also given attention to the Sunday schools of his charge and, incidentally, has not neglected the Advocate. He has been well received, and the work prospers under his guiding hand.

At the Montgomery County Sunday School Convention, which closed a profitable session at Kilmichael, Miss., on January 31, Rev. G. W. Bachman served as president, and Dr. M. Smith as Secretary. Rev. W. Fred Long, the State Field Secretary, was present and delivered a stirring address. The sum of $25 was voted to the State work.

Mr. J. Van Carter, who is secretary of the State Sunday School Association of North Carolina, attended the Secretaries and Field Workers' Association meeting in New Orleans this week. He is not a stranger here, nor in the State, being one of the Louisiana Carters. He spoke at Epworth Church Sunday morning, and at McDonoghville Sunday night.

Mrs. Ballington Booth, who spoke at Rayne Memorial Church last Sunday night and at First Church on Tuesday night, is a most attractive speaker. She has a personal magnetism that is more than human. Her every word, act, and look impresses one with the thought that the dynamic force of her personality is nothing less than the power of the Holy Spirit in her life.

Did you read Superintendent Vaughan's earnest appeal in behalf of our Louisiana Orphanage in last week's issue of the Advocate? If not, by all means look the paper up and do so. But do not stop when you have read it. The situation at this worthy institution calls for prompt and energetic action. We cannot afford to let these children who have been committed to the care of the Church suffer.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., has carefully examined his roll of members, and sent the names of those who live within the bounds of other charges to the pastors in those fields. It is Brother Doss' desire to have none of his members to be strangers in any locality, and he believes that a pastor should be notified when a Methodist comes into his charge, so that he may the quicker find him. The wisdom of Brother Doss' plan is readily understood.

Judge Sam C. Cook, who was elevated to the Supreme Bench of Mississippi, by Governor Brewer a few days since, has for many years been a member of our Church at Clarksdale, Miss. He has had fine training as a judge of the Circuit Court, in which position he has made an enviable record; and his many friends predict for him a brilliant career as a member of the State's highest judicial tribunal.

After an incumbency of twelve years, Dr. P. I. Lipsey has resigned the pastorate of the Baptist Church at Clinton, Miss., to take charge of the Baptist Record at Jackson, which he has purchased. Dr. Lipsey is a graduate of the University of Mississippi and of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., and is one of the strong men of his denomination in this section. We predict for him a successful journalistic career.

Rev. W. W. Hooper, of Oak Ridge, Miss., writes: "I have been warmly received in my new charge. I have perhaps the largest circuit in the Mississippi Conference, and I am buckling on anew the pastoral harness, with a view to laborious service. I am happy at hard work." Brother Hooper has long shown himself to be a workman, that needeth not to be ashamed, and we do not doubt that he will give a good account of himself in his present field.

Rev. J. D. Simpson, our energetic pastor at Pickens, Miss., favored us with a list of four subscribers on Feb. 1. It is characteristic of him to look well after the interests of the Advocate, and we highly appreciate his kindness. Brother Simpson closed a quadrennium of helpful service at Ackerman last December, and is now entering upon his first year in his present field. It does not in the least surprise us to know that he has already made a fine impression.

Rev. Walt Holcomb, the evangelist, of Nashville, Tenn., sends us a short article on "A County Campaign of Evangelism." Mr. Holcomb requests us to say that the Bureau of Evangelism, of which he is secretary, has a tent that is at present in Louisiana, and that if any of the brethren wish to use it in a revival meeting in the spring, they should write to him at Nashville, Tenn. The tent will be shipped to Tennessee later. Mr. Holcomb will hold a meeting at Morganfield, Ky., March 3-17.

Rev. W. W. Holmes writes that he is delighted with his new charge at Monroe, La., to which he was sent at the last session of the Louisiana Conference by Bishop Mouzon. This is not surprising, since it would be difficult to find anywhere a choicer flock than this. The Monroe News-Star states that Brother Holmes is preaching to large and delighted audiences. This journal also contained pretty nearly, if not quite, a full report of the sermon which this gifted pastor preached to his congregation on Sunday, January 28, on "The Preparation for Service." It was in every respect an admirable deliverance.

The Senatobia Democrat (Miss.) of January 25, contained a number of well arranged and interesting Bible questions, designed to promote the study of the Sacred Scriptures. The copy of this paper coming to our office was mailed by Mrs. M. E. Pope, formerly of Senatobia, but now of Itta-Bena, Miss., whom we suppose wrote these suggestive queries. Would it not be well if our interior weeklies were used to a larger extent to awaken an interest in religious subjects upon the part of the general public? We are inclined to think that Sister Pope has set a good example, which many might follow with beneficial results.

The Houston Post (Mississippi) of January 26, contained an interesting account of the marriage of Mr. A. M. Harley, of Houston, and Mrs. Ella Logan Roane of West Point, Miss., which occurred at the residence of the bride in the latter city on January 24, with the Rev. E. S. Lewis officiating. The bride is a woman of large culture and noble Christian character, who is esteemed and loved by all who know her. The groom is the president of the Chickasaw County Bank and one of the leading business men of East Mississippi. Mr. and Mrs. Harley will reside at Houston. We extend congratulations and best wishes.

The General Board of Church Extension is sending out in pamphlet form an address delivered at Montgomery, Alabama, in April, 1887, by Dr. S. A. Steel on the subject of "Church Extension in Relation to the Future South." The occasion which called forth this notable utterance was an anniversary of the Board held in Alabama's capital city. Dr. David Morton had it printed soon after it was spoken, and Dr. McMurry now says: "It is re-issued because of its merit. Few addresses are entitled to such consideration." As a master of public assemblies, Dr. Steel has had few equals in the history of American Methodism.

From a recent number of the Monroe News-Star, we take the following: "The reception, beautifully planned by the Woman's Home Mission Society in honor of Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Holmes, at the home of Rev. and Mrs. S. S. Keener, last evening was notable in the numbers who thronged to meet them and the spirit of rare hospitality and cordiality that prevailed. Fully three hundred citizens, including the ministers of the various churches, greeted Mr. and Mrs. Holmes during the evening, and all who met them carried away pleasant memories of the occasion, and of the new pastor of the M. E. Church, South, and his charming wife."

Through the kindness of Rev. Robert W. Vaughan, the publisher, we have received a copy of the Louisiana Conference Annual for 1911. It is well planned, neatly printed, and presents an attractive appearance. The first page contains an excellent likeness of Bishop Mouzon. The proceedings of the Conference are given with commendable fullness, and the indexes and tables are so arranged that any information desired can be readily obtained. Brother Vaughan has done his work well. Elsewhere in this issue appears a statement from him relative to the distribution of this Annual among the pastors.

Mr. J. M. Stevens, of Hattiesburg, has been made Chancellor of the Eighth Mississippi District. He is a brother of the Hon. H. S. Stevens, with whom he has been associated in the practice of law, and of the late Judge W. F. Stevens, of Carrollton, Miss., who, though stricken down by death before he reached life's meridian, had made a State-wide reputation as a legislator and jurist. Mr. Stevens is only thirty-five years of age; he is a graduate of the University of his State, and is regarded as a sound and able lawyer. The feeling is quite general that Governor Brewer has made no mistake in calling this capable and high-minded young man from the bar to the bench.

Dr. C. F. Evans, of Lexington, Ky., who has been spending some days in the city with friends, has several times dropped into the Advocate office during the past week. At the last session of the Kentucky Conference, because of the illness of his wife, he took a supernumerary relation, though he is still alert and vigorous both mentally and physically. The Doctor was for many years a leading member of the Louisiana Conference, and at one time was Publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. He also rendered efficient service in Mississippi a number of years ago. Dr. Evans left for Hammond in the early part of the week to visit his son, the Rev. W. G. Evans, who resides at that place, but expects to come to New Orleans again and spend a few days before returning to his home in Kentucky.

In the death of Mr. D. H. Jordan which occurred at Black Hawk, Miss., some four weeks ago, our church at that place lost one of its truest and most worthy members. Brother Jordan was more than three score and ten years of age, and for a long time had lived a beautiful life of humility and consecration. His walk and conversation were wholly above reproach, and he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. Harsh and unkind words were never upon his lips, and his gentle, cheerful spirit impressed every one with whom he came in contact. His piety, though unobtrusive, was so manifest that none could doubt it. He had been ill for several months, during which time he suffered greatly, and death was to him a sweet release. His end was peace; and we feel sure that he had "an abundant entrance" into the Father's house. We have had considerable acquaintance with Christian people, and, weighing our words, we affirm that we have known but few who, in our judgment, attained to the spiritual stature of this well-nigh perfect man.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. W. P. LAMB, was born June 20, 1857, and passed to his heavenly reward Dec. 28, 1911. He did not live to old age like some men are permitted to do, but what is vastly better, he lived well during those 54 years God gave him. I know of no man in his section of country who was more highly regarded for his Christian character than Brother Lamb. He was honest and truthful, a good neighbor, a sincere Christian, a kind husband and a loving father. He loved to sing. For many years he was the leader in the service of song at Lebanon, where he held his membership, and where his body awaits the resurrection. He was married Jan. 15, 1889, to Miss Fannie Lotban. Six children came to bless the home and are still with their mother. Brother Lamb joined the Methodist Church when but a boy and his children are walking in his footsteps. His pastor, Rev. G. W. McLain, assisted by Rev. V. J. Bell, held the funeral services of one of the best men in Webster County. Peace to his ashes!
H. S. LEWIS.

Mrs. E. A. R. BROWNE. The Advocate goes to one faithful reader no more. She loved to read it, along with the Bible and other good books, and it is fitting that the death of Mrs. E. A. R. Browne be recorded here. Her long life began and ended in Natchitoches Parish, La. She was born Oct. 1, 1833, and died in Natchitoches, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hargrove, December 9, 1911. She united with the Methodist Church when about thirteen, and throughout her long life was a faithful and consistent member. During her last years she was seldom able to attend upon public worship, and it was then her great pleasure to have her pastor read and pray in her home. Hers was a beautiful life. Quietly she lived as becometh the gospel. In the gathering twilight her steps grew slow and feeble, and her life weary because of the difficulties and sorrows of the way, but her faith grew stronger, and her spirit leaped within to be gone before into the heavenly country which she saw from afar. She was ready and anxious to go. We can but mourn her loss, but we know that precious in the sight of the Lord was the death of this one of his saints, because her long and beautiful Christian life was ended well, her work was finished, and Jesus had prepared a place for her. Her body lies in the American Cemetery and her redeemed spirit dwells with God.

H. R. PASTOR.

Departed this life, Jan. 19, 1912, Mrs. CLAUDIA DAY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Pettigrew. She was born Aug. 3, 1878. At the age of 15, she united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in which she lived a consistent Christian life till about three years ago when she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Cantrell, where she continued to evidence the same gentle Christian spirit till a touch from heaven illuminated her features and she entered her restful home. She was naturally cheerful in spirit and a smile of contentment was ever on her face. With kind words she met and welcomed her friends and, to her husband and children, she was so very kind and tender, always trying to make home cheerful for them. She died at Vicksburg, where she had gone for surgical attention. The body was buried in Cantrell Cemetery, the funeral service being conducted by the writer in the presence of a great number of those who had known her longest and loved her best. We extend sympathy to the bereaved ones and pray that God's richest blessing may be largely shared by the sorrow-stricken husband, father, mother and others, and may His tenderest love ever be given to the four motherless children.

A. M. BROADFOOT.

January 7, 1912, in New Albany, Miss., at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Delk, the spirit of R. B. HENDERSON took its flight. It is hard to realize that dear old "Blake," who has been a familiar figure in Tippah County for three-quarters of a century, will no longer greet us with his bright smile and cordial welcome. After the war, he married Miss Angeline Hill, and settled on a farm where he spent the remainder of his life. After her death he was happily married to Mrs. Fannie Johnson who survives him. By his first marriage there are four sons and three daughters, all of whom are useful, honorable citizens. Some years after the war he was converted and joined the Methodist Church, of which he remained a consistent and zealous member until his death. He was a true husband, father, neighbor, friend, soldier and Christian. What a record! How proud his loved ones should be of such a legacy! May the Lord bless and guide them in the way that leads to life everlasting. Good-bye! gallant soldier and faithful friend, until we clasp hands again around the throne of our King.
COMRADE.

Brother JAMES P. RAMSAY was born at the old Ramsay homestead in Harrison County, December 23, 1845, and died at his home near Lorraine, Miss., November 5, 1911, after a long and continued illness. He was married January 14, 1875, to Miss Margaret M. Read, which union was blessed with six children; four of whom—Mrs. Elva Walker, Mrs. Mary Fritz, Mrs. Inez O'Neal, and Miss Alma Ramsay, together with a wife, one brother, A. J. Ramsay, and one sister, Mrs. Amanda Cowart—survive him. He came of a large family, three brothers and three sisters having previously died; and was of that true type of Southern citizenship necessary to the making of any great commonwealth. Although quite young at the opening of the Civil War he enlisted as a Confederate soldier and served almost the entire time of the war. He united with the M. E. Church, South, in 1882 at White Plains Church, under the preaching of Rev. Alex Scarborough, and remained a loyal member of the same to the end of his life. He loved the Church, her songs, prayer and the Bible; often in his illness he asked for the reading of the Psalm of Praise (the 117th), and Romans viii, 18: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." He expected to die and was ready for the summons, only regretting to leave his loved ones. "Yes, Lord," was his last response, reminding us of the lines of Montgomery's hymn:

"The voice at midnight came,
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame,
He fell, but felt no fear."

Our sorrow is not as those who have no hope. Let us be faithful; the parting will not be long; we shall see him again. His pastor,

R. T. PICKETT.

In the deepest night of trouble and sorrow God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing.—Coleridge.

Tidings From the Field

Oak Grove, La.

We have started on our work in good shape. Congregations are large. Our new parsonage will be completed in about ten days. We will start a new church building at Pioneer, one of our appointments, in about sixty days. Have about all of the money in hand. The people all over the work received us with open arms. We are looking forward to a good year in spite of the long move across the State.—Lastie N. Hoffpauir, P. C.

NOTES FROM THE NEWTON DISTRICT.

Friday, the 19th of January, I was with Bro. G. P. Fikes, at Pine Grove, Newton Circuit, to hold his first quarterly conference. Bro. Fikes had not preached in all of his churches up to that date, but where he had gone he made a good impression. Nearly all of the eight churches of the Circuit were officially represented at the quarterly conference, and all present seemed hopeful and cheerful. The stewards very willingly made the same assessment for the preacher that they made last year, and expressed a determination to do their best to collect the assessment in full. The good people of Trenton received Bro. Fikes and his family very cordially, and rounded them liberally upon their arrival at the parsonage.

From Pine Grove I went to Shiloh to hold Bro. Dickens' first quarterly conference. On Saturday, Jan. 20, we were greeted by a very good congregation, and the quarterly conference was a pleasant occasion. There was no disposition to retrench manifested by the stewards, although they reported a considerable deficit to the Annual Conference last year. Many have been the substantial expressions of appreciation of the return of Bro. Dickens given by those good people.

On Saturday, Jan. 21, Sister S. D. Rhodes, one of the oldest and most devout members of the Shiloh Church was buried in the Shiloh cemetery, Bro. C. McDonald, a life-long friend to the Rhodes family, officiating. Earth is made poorer, but heaven richer by the ascension of this good woman.

The 27th and 28th of January, I was with Bro. W. W. Graves at Homewood. There I was greeted by the largest corps of officials that have met me at any quarterly conference up to date, and a more agreeable company I have never met. They expressed themselves as being delighted with the return of Bro. Graves to them for the fourth year, but said they want a new pastor and a new presiding elder next year. I am sure the presiding Bishop at our next Annual Conference will gratify their wish. Saturday was a pleasant day, but it rained all day Sunday and we had no service. It was not without difficulty and unpleasantness that I went to Homewood and returned, for between Forest and Homewood

There is a road that's filled with mud,
Made by the dirt and rain;
And he who plunges through the mud
Will muddy come again.

Indeed, I have made most of my appointments since Annual Conference through "fightings without and fears within"—fighting against mud, rain, and high water, and fears of any kind of accident from a sprained ankle to a broken neck—but "The Lord has promised good to me," and in his strength I am pressing the battle.

Doubtless some of the readers of these lines will remember the famous article from the facile pen of the lately ascended T. L. Mellen, entitled, "Mud Bound," written to the New Orleans Christian Advocate in February of 1899, in which he told of how he planted his over shoes from which seed-sowing he never reaped a harvest, and how he tried the mettle of his faithful Maud and Mack, and the strength of his buggy and harness, and taxed his own strength and patience, till finally he had to "tie up" and wait for more favorable weather and better roads. Some of the readers of that article may have thought that Bro. Mellen was inclined to show the white feather, and that he attempted to hide his cowardice behind an exaggeration; but I am persuaded that if these skeptics (if such there be) will come and travel with me a few days they will be prepared to exclaim with the Queen of Sheba, when her curiosity was aroused by the glowing accounts that reached her ears of the grandeur of the reign of Solomon, and she had gone to see for herself, "That half had not been told."

Yea, I am sure that while Esther Singleton, who catalogued the greatest natural wonders in the world, may have explored the ice-fields of Greenland, weighed the glaciers of the Swiss Alps, "bumped" her way across the Giant Causeway, measured the crater of Mount Vesuvius, climbed the Heights of Gibraltar, and kissed the Blarney Stone, she never traveled the roads in the Newton District, for if she had, she would have placed along with the Lake of Pitch, the Dead Sea, Niagara Falls, etc., the mud of Scott County. Surely there is no mud like unto that mud.

I think if I was of the age and corpulence of Bro. Mellen I would find myself hoisting the flag of truce and surrendering to King Mud for a time, but as the springs are still in my corpus and my bones are not burdened with a surplus of heft, I have succeeded in filing all of my appointments to date. However, I have reached them by quite a variety of modes of locomotion, horseback being the most popular. I recently took a hundred-mile horseback trip, holding two quarterly conferences on the trip, and got just quarterage enough to pay my horse-hire. Nothing was left with which to buy groceries, but we killed the fatted pig, and some of the brethren had sent us some corn and molasses; so we are faring sumptuously.

I hope that Uncle Fuller, the noted writer in the Union Advocate, will continue to agitate the good-roads issue till every man, woman, and child in Scott County gets a vision of good roads, and then continue to agitate the issue till they can't be "unmindful of the vision." If all the road tax that has been paid in Scott County in the last decade, in extra freight rates, the breakage of vehicles and harness, and ruining and killing of teams had been rightly applied all the principal roads of the county would have been, ere this, macadamized. Then the farm and farm life would be more attractive, land values would be very much enhanced, and the Lord's work could be done with much more ease and efficiency.

But, then it is an ill wind that blows nobody good. These roads do try men's souls and muddy their clothes, but the exercise gives a good appetite, and the mud furnishes work for the laundry.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowry.

At the last meeting of our Sunday School Board it was decided to urge the holding of our Children's Day services on the third Sunday of April, instead of the third Sunday of May, when so many public schools are having their closing exercises in Louisiana. Mr. French informs us that the program will be out by that time.

One lady testifies that there is great value in the graded lesson stories as material with which mothers can both entertain and teach righteousness to their children during the week. Where could more attractive or uplifting stories be found? The mother who neglects to feed the heart and mind of her child at the story-loving age by this most valuable means of education fails to enter an open door of great possibilities.

To those who may have had trouble in making the Sunday school lessons interesting to adults, we commend the following plan as used by an adult class in Massachusetts: Take the uniform lessons and find in them modern problems that appeal to adults for solution. The topics are from the lessons for the first quarter for 1912, and taken from the Sunday School Times. They are as follows beginning with February 11: The Training of Children. (Derived from "The Boy Jesus in the Temple.") Injustices in Modern Life. (Derived from "The Ministry of John the Baptist"—his preaching against the social wrongs of the day.) Temptations that Assail the Men and Women of To-day. (Derived from "The Baptism and Temptation of Jesus.") What is Involved in Church-Membership. (Derived from "The Call of the First Disciples," and to be led by the pastor.) Religion and Healing of the Body. (Derived from "Jesus the Healer," and to be led by a Christian physician.) The Christian Duty of Evangelism. (Derived from "The Paralytic Forgiven and Healed," the sick man carried to Jesus by his four friends. The head of a rescue mission is to lead this study.) Religion and Sociability. (Derived from Feasting and Fasting.—Matthew's feast.)

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

Someone has quaintly said that "sympathy is the pure juice of the heart squeezed out for a friend." How true that is! Here lies the secret of success in all Sunday school work.

According to the standard of excellence prescribed for Sunday schools by our General Sunday School Board, and which has been several times submitted to our Sunday school workers through the press, the Columbia Sunday school has for nearly a year, made 100 per cent. During the present Conference year our attendance has reached 92 per cent of our enrollment, and our average attendance, excluding a very rainy Sunday, has been about 80 per cent of the enrollment. This does not include the home department.

In Matthew we read that Christ was named before he was born. The Scriptures give us the names of six other persons who were similarly named, making seven in all. "Tradition gives one more. How many Sunday school boys and girls in the Mississippi Conference can give the names of the seven mentioned in the Scriptures, chapter where each is found, and the work they were to do? How many can give the other one mentioned by tradition also? To all who can give at least the seven mentioned in the Bible, I promise to publish their names in this column. Send the answer to me at Columbia, Marion County, Miss.

A very remarkable statement has been made by President J. C. Hardy, the retiring president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Starkville, Miss. In his letter to Governor Brewer, he says, among other things, that there are over 1200 students at the College, with an average attendance of more than 1000; that among these young men there is the largest Y. M. C. A. membership of any institution in the South, and the largest per cent studying the Bible of any institution in America. Who can estimate the effect on our great State when her young men are taught the Word of God along with the other courses of study?

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Professor Fiske says: "The glory of man is his improbability."

Rev. O. P. Armour, Sidon, has three fine evergreen Sunday schools in his charge, and is much interested in all the Sunday school work.

Are the Adult Bible classes playing at, or really studying, the Bible? Their stability and future usefulness depend on stable, true and lasting Bible study.

Mrs. Carroll Baird writes that her school is small, but well organized and much enjoyed by teachers and pupils alike. A new and splendid year's work is already planned.

A few faithful workers, assisted by Brother A. W. Langley, have kept up a small Sunday school at Plantersville, and this faithfulness is now receiving its sure reward in increased members and interest.

Mrs. Lamoroux, than whom there is no more gifted specialist in Elementary work, says "that all she has in life is the result of downright hard study." Will not, cannot, many of our teachers add this superlative virtue of hard work to their resolution for 1912?

Mrs. Benton, of Lake View, has had a series of great sorrows in her immediate family, and has had to give up, for the present sad-hour, her Sunday school at Poplar Corner. But she means soon to gather together the children and continue the great and beautiful work which has followed her footsteps.

Mr. E. E. French was in Houston on January 16, and made a splendid speech. Mrs. Neblett's and Mr. Board's fine organized classes tendered him a reception, and Mr. French writes he could not have been more royally received had he been president of the United States. That Houston Sunday school is alive and aggressive, and filled with a beautiful spirit of service and hospitality.

LIFE.

The poet's exclamation: "O Life! I feel thee bounding in my veins," is a joyous one. Persons that can rarely or never make it, in honesty to themselves, are among the most unfortunate. They do not live, but exist; for to live implies more than to be. To live is to be well and strong—to arise feeling equal to the ordinary duties of the day, and to retire not overcome by them—to feel life bounding in the veins. A medicine that has made thousands of people, men and women, well and strong, has accomplished a great work, bestowing the richest blessings, and that medicine is Hood's Sarsaparilla. The weak, run-down, or debilitated, from any cause, should not fail to take it. It builds up the whole system, changes existence into life, and makes life more abounding. We are glad to say these words in its favor to the readers of our columns.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

In response to a pressing invitation from Rev. J. L. Neill and the official board of Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, I recently spent a week very pleasantly with them in a meeting, which began on the third Sunday in January. Rev. I. L. Peebles did the preaching and did it well. Attendance on the services was good. The church membership was much quickened, and was increased by a few accessions.

Many good books—Bibles, Hymnals, Disciplines, Methodist sermons, aids to family worship, doctrinal pamphlets and tracts—were placed in the homes of the people, together with 100 song books ("The Ministry in Song") in the church.

Brother Neill and his devoted helpmeet are in good favor with their people, and all are working earnestly together for the upbuilding of the Church and the salvation of souls.

They have recently enlarged their church and put in new pews. They have also secured a lot adjoining the church on which they will soon build a parsonage. I shall ever cherish as a pleasant memory my stay with the pastor and people of Broad Street Church, and my association with Brother Peebles in the Lord's work.

While in Hattiesburg, I was glad to visit in the home of my good friends, Dr. A. F. Watkins and family, and to meet with Rev. G. H. Thompson, the pastor of Court Street, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, the presiding elder of the district, and Rev. P. H. Howse, of Seminary, and to hear favorable reports from each of their works.

Returning home, I spent the fourth Sunday in Goodman with erstwhile friends, specially in the home of that noble man of the Church, W. S. S. Harman and his family. Brother Simpson, the pastor, preached in the morning a good sermon to a good congregation, considering the rainy weather, which proved too inclement for service at night.

Presiding Elder Jaco begins well on the Winona District, with indications that he will maintain his record for faithfulness and efficiency in the work. He has already found a field for another preacher and is advertising for the man. It is an open door for the right man. Brother Bradley is looking well after his charge in Winona and is winning favor with the people, as a man, preacher and pastor.

Rev. J. A. Hall, former pastor for four years in Winona, but now in Grenada, is in great favor with his people and the outlook is propitious for a great year in that charge. We regret that he had a slight stroke of paralysis some days ago but the indications are favorable for complete recovery soon, for which his many friends sincerely pray and hope. Two of our veteran local preachers have recently passed away from earthly labors to the heavenly rest, viz, Rev. W. H. Holmes, of near Winona, aged 89, and Rev. W. B. Ross, of Sallis Circuit. They leave many friends to mourn their going, but all hope for a reunion with them in the better country.

We have had a severe winter and the roads are almost impassable, which conditions have greatly hindered church gatherings, both in the towns and country; but we are expecting in the near future brighter and better days.

I am glad to hear of the poundings that many of the brethren are receiving. Such do not come my way. But the Lord is good and friends are kind, and, if business continues and payment of all dues comes in promptly, all will be well.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Feb. 1, 1912.

ADVOCATE PIANO CLUB.

The superior quality and durability of the piano which is now being offered to members of the Advocate Piano Club is shown by the following letter from one of the earliest purchasers of the Ludden & Bates Piano, away back in 1883. Mr. H. V. Coarsey of Braddentown, Fla., writing under date of February 7, 1910, says, "I am the owner of Ludden & Bates piano No. 111, in rosewood case, and I take pleasure in mentioning that it has a good clear tone and a smooth, even touch, notwithstanding it was bought of you twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago, during which time, it has had constant service, considered by some an extraordinary amount of hard usage. This instrument has served two generations in our immediate family in a most satisfactory way and we have no idea of parting with it for any other piano."

If you would like to join the Club write for club catalogue and full particulars. Address Ludden & Bates, Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

KANSAS WOMAN HELPLESS.

Lawrence, Kas.—Mr. J. F. Stone, of this city, says, "My wife suffered for ten years from womanly troubles, during two years of which she was totally helpless. She was examined by many physicians, some of whom gave her up to die. Finally she began to take Cardui, and since then has greatly improved in health. The tonic, strengthening, and restorative effects of Cardui, the woman's tonic, on the womanly constitution, are the most valuable qualities of this popular medicine. Cardui acts specifically on the womanly constitution. Half a century of success proves that Cardui will do all that is claimed for it. Try it for your trouble.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

CHANGES IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

Dear Bro. Meek:

Perhaps you will be interested to know that the Correspondence School, instead of giving a certificate for the completion of each year's course, as heretofore, is now giving a certificate of graduation for the entire four years' Conference Course. This certificate is a two tone copper and zinc etching on handsome vegetable parchment, and is quite an attractive testimonial for the four years' work. Those who have completed the Conference course in full by correspondence may desire to finish up the course and secure the certificate. Those who have successfully completed the course may secure the certificate, without charge, on application to the Correspondence School.

I am glad to inform you also, that the Board of Education, at its last meeting, authorized the Correspondence School to arrange a graduate course of study and to award a graduate certificate to those completing this course. In compliance with the action of the Board, the Correspondence School is now offering such a certificate to those who, in addition to the Conference Course of Study, complete as much as eight minors, or four majors elected by the student himself from the University Courses outlined in the Correspondence School Bulletin. These courses, in addition to entitling the student to the graduate certificate, will also be credited, subject to the conditions of the Biblical Department, toward the B. D. degree from Vanderbilt University.

Marriages

January 14, 1912, at the residence of the bride's parents, near Tupelo, Miss., by Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, Mr. J. ESTES to Miss MABEL RAY.

January 25, 1912, at the home of the bride's mother, Minden, La., by Rev. Geo. G. Woodbridge, Mr. WM. K. WINGFIELD, of Chapleau, Ont., and Mrs. THERESA GRIGSBY DAVIES, of Minden.

THREE CURIOUS WILLS.

Becoming a woman hater because, as he said, his wife deserted him after inducing him to assign half his property to her, an Evansville, Ind.; man stipulated in his will that none but men should attend his funeral.

By the will of an Upper Sandusky, Ohio, man the income of $15,000 will be used for the benefit of church and university work. He provides for a fund to maintain preaching service each Sunday and Sunday school as well. The testator requested that a copy of a portion of his will be printed in large letters and hung in the church.

After directing that her body be cremated and the ashes scattered around the rose bushes in her garden a Quakeress of Moorestown provides by her will that $5000 shall be held in trust, the income of which shall be paid annually to the National Woman's Suffrage Association, until such time as women shall have the right to vote at all elections in all the States. At that time the principal of the trust fund is to be paid to a niece of the testatrix.—Case and Comment.

RIGHT THINKING.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." We do not often enough remember that as we think of others so are we to them. It is in us, as human beings, instinctively to recognize and to hate insincerity. Nobody is in the end deceived by expression that is merely outward and perfunctory. Our inner life is transparent; it cannot conceal itself; if it is a true life it has no need or desire of concealment. To think the loving thoughts of each other that God thinks of us all; to harbor no malicious, no ungenerous feeling toward others, and to leave Him to judge of their seeming unkindness to us—this is not only our human duty, but our divine privilege. And a life of good will to men is also the only life of peace on earth.—Lucy Larcom.

POSITIVE PREACHING.

Much of the religious thinking and preaching of our day has been smitten with the spirit of negation, and compromise. It is a certain element of weakness. There is no comfort in a non-affirmative position, and any preacher who is tempted to seek refuge in mere negations is guilty at bottom of cowardice. Successful preaching depends upon positive elements; and faith and character, which are the ends of the work of the ministry, can not be secured without those elements.—Christian World.

The Cause of Chronic Illness.

Everybody admires a strong, well-developed, good natured man or a right, energetic and attractive woman with the glow of health in her rosy cheeks. And yet do you know that thousands of people who suffer with chronic ailments which rob them of the joys of health could easily and quickly rid themselves of this condition and know again the pleasure of living?

How? Listen! The Blood is the life of the body. Every school boy is taught that fact. You also know that poisoned blood will poison every organ in the body, the brain, the nerves, the heart, the liver, &c. &c. Find a person with impure blood and you have a chronic invalid.

But how does the blood become poisoned? In two ways. First, by imperfect digestion of food, thus taking poison into the body. Second, by failure of the liver and kidneys to throw off the natural poison, thus retaining poison in the body. To regain pure blood and therefore vigorous health you must secure perfect digestion and perfect action of the liver and kidneys. Remember that pure blood and health are natural and that disease is unnatural. You can regain your natural health by regaining your pure blood.

W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron is a preparation that puts the blood in perfect condition, by freeing it from all particles of impurities, thereby making the blood rich, red and pure and toning up the entire system. It will make you feel like a new person, and you notice an improvement after the first dose. This preparation can be had from your druggist. After using two-thirds of the contents of a bottle, according to the directions, if you do not notice any beneficial effects return the remainder and the money you paid for the entire bottle will be refunded to you.

Read through the list, find the dealer nearest you and arrange it with him. Take your family and friends along, so that each can pick out the records he or she particularly wishes to hear. Never before have you heard such a concert as this will be—the very kind of music you love best, no matter what that may be: The old, old sacred songs that you have known all your life, such as "Calvary," "Lead Kindly Light," "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," sung by some of the greatest church singers in America; stirring marches like "American Patrol," "Glory of the Yankee Navy," "Southern Dream Patrol," including some of the most famous old Southern melodies, played by the greatest bands in the world; airs from the great operas, sung by the foremost singers of the present day, the old ballads you never tire of, "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Old Kentucky Home," "Juanita," talking records by great orators including Bryan and Taft.

Do not put off this opportunity for the greatest enjoyment you have ever had in the way of entertainment. Then you will know what you have been missing all these years by not having an Edison Phonograph in your home.

And you will find how easy it is to have one, for

There is an Edison Phonograph to suit the purse of everyone from $15.00 to $200.00

And you'll undoubtedly find that whichever dealer you select in the list below can arrange satisfactory terms with you. But this free concert puts you under no obligation whatever to purchase. It is merely to show you how much pleasure you and your family have been missing all your lives, by not having an Edison Phonograph in your home.

Editorial

"You can give without loving, but you cannot love without giving." This was one of the mottoes on the wall of the room in which the Secretaries and Field Workers of the International Sunday-school Association held their recent conference in New Orleans. It is an impressive statement of an undeniable truth. It is the very nature of love to bestow its best possessions upon the object on which it is centered. The man who gives nothing, loves nothing other than himself.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate says: "Sometimes the impossible is the only thing worth attempting." This is true. Indeed, it is always better to undertake to achieve what is right, even if we fail, than to succeed in efforts that are unworthy. Not infrequently apparent triumph is real defeat. It is a debatable question whether the noblest heroes of the race are to be found in the world's list of the victorious or the vanquished. Earth's standard of success is one thing; that of heaven is quite another.

There are many problems that will never be solved in this life. It is not the Divine will that they should. God gives us light sufficient to travel by, but not for exploration. The way to the "Father's house" we know—let us press ever forward on the journey. The explanation of many things can well afford to wait until eternity—when we shall no more see in a mirror darkly, but face to face; when we shall no longer have partial knowledge, but shall know even as we have been known.

In his farewell sermon to the Calvary Baptist Church of New York City, Dr. R. S. MacArthur, who had served that congregation for forty-one years, said: "And let me beg of you not to inaugurate preaching from this pulpit by candidates. It is humiliating, it is degrading to a preacher to be thus exhibited, as a sample of dry goods. * * * Send your Pulpit Committee to the church of the man you have in mind and hear him there." This strikes us as most wholesome advice. And Dr. MacArthur's suggestion that the prospective preacher's record in the work should also be considered, is eminently wise. The efficiency of no minister can be determined by listening to one or two of his discourses.

Is not the banquet idea being overworked on the occasion of our religious gatherings? We confess to a preference for fasting and prayer over feasting and making merry. And it occurs to us that the money thus expended might, perhaps, be more wisely applied. The tremendous struggle to rescue the perishing millions of the race is no gala-day affair. It is a world-wide and unceasing work that calls for all the time and strength and means at our command. We have never liked the suggestion that the Lord Jesus was much given to humor and laughter. The cry of the world's need rang too constantly in his ears for that.

OUTSIDE WORK NEEDED.

We hold firmly to the view that the Church should adhere to her spiritual mission, and not undertake to meddle promiscuously with the secular affairs of society. There are, to be sure, some governmental questions, such as prohibition, the suppression of gambling, and the preservation of the Sabbath, that are so vitally related to the moral and religious well-being of the people that the Church cannot do otherwise than take notice of them and exert her influence in their behalf. But for the Church to turn away from her divinely appointed task of leading souls to Christ, to dabble in almost every worthy form of human activity, tends to scatter her energies and defeat the accomplishment of the great work committed to her hands. There are many things that need to be done in the world that may well be left to other agencies than the religious denominations. For instance, it is a wise and proper thing to teach the farmers of the South how to combat the boll weevil, but this duty does not devolve upon the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have never been much impressed with what some are pleased to term the sociological duties of the Church.

However, we do not desire to be misunderstood. Though we believe in a restricted Church, we do not believe in a restricted Christianity. What the Church as an organization may not undertake to do, her members acting in an individual capacity, with perfect propriety, may essay to accomplish. Thus the Church is out of place in politics, but Christian men, acting as citizens, have an undeniable right to make their influence felt therein. Indeed, it is their duty to do so. Christianity is broader than the Church. It must express itself in all of the affairs of mankind. It can be rightly excluded from nothing. For this reason Christianity needs other than ecclesiastical agencies to execute its lofty and wide-reaching mission. The Church is its main channel, but it needs other outlets through which it can move in the performance of its mighty task of cleansing and uplifting the nations.

And sometimes it has occurred to us that the failure to establish and utilize such outside agencies is one of the weaknesses of our present-day Christianity. Take, for illustration, a time when great issues are pending which, though they are chiefly political in character, exert indirectly a far-reaching influence for good or bad on society. The Church in her assemblies cannot speak out without injuring herself, for the reason that her members, perhaps conscientiously, are divided on the subject. The preachers cannot speak out, because they need to be in a position to be spiritually helpful to all the people, and such action upon their part would be certain to offend some. The church papers dare not express themselves, because those from whom they differed would become irritated and probably disaffected from the Church as a result of their course. What is needed to meet such an exigency is a secular press, controlled by religious men and standing fearlessly for Christian principles. Such journals could exert an immeasurable influence for good.

And it is to be regretted that they do not exist in every part of the republic.

It is our deep conviction that Christianity needs to be more aggressive outside of the Church. It can there do battle for the cause of truth and right without restraint, unsheathing the sword and flinging the scabbard away. Upon injustice and oppression, upon every kind of fraud and deception, upon unsound principles and vicious tendencies, upon the charlatan and the demagogue, it should make unceasing war. Its votaries should carry it everywhere—the Christian farmer into his field; the Christian lawyer into the court-room; the Christian merchant into his store; the Christian teacher into his school, and the Christian statesman to the hustings and into legislative halls. To overcome evil with good is the divine plan of conquest, and this can be done only by a world-wide and unrestricted struggle. The day of complete triumph may yet be far away, but ultimately it will come. The Seer of Patmos not only saw the inhabitants of earth, redeemed, robed in white, and waving palm branches around the eternal throne, but also a new earth, with evil banished and righteousness regnant.

A FRUITFUL LIFE WANTED.

It is the divine will that every life should be fruitful of good. The only aristocracy that our Lord recognized when he was upon earth was that of service. In his memorable farewell discourse to his disciples, one of the loftiest utterances that ever fell upon human ears, he said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." Our Lord lived and labored and suffered and died for others, and the more freely we spend ourselves to help our fellow-men, the greater is our likeness to him. To be a good Christian is to abound in blessings to those about us. A mere negative goodness falls far short of what God requires. Religion is vastly more than a series of prohibitions. Not doing is sufficient to bring upon one the condemnation of the eternal judge. This the Master clearly taught in his graphic picture of the day of the great assize, when he represented as being sent away into everlasting punishment those who had failed to minister to needy and suffering humanity. Power unused will bring trouble in the day of reckoning, as well as power misused. The omissions of life, as well as its commissions, are irremediable in their consequences. Even if they should not be of sufficient gravity to involve one in guilt and bar the gate of Paradise, they may lessen one's joy on earth and the richness of the reward on high. There is much truth contained in the suggestive words of the poet—

"At vesper tide,
One virtuous and pure in heart did pray:
'Since none I wronged in deed or word to-day,
From whom should I crave pardon? Master, say.'
A voice replied:
'From the sad child whose joy thou hast not planned;
The goaded beast whose friend thou didst not stand;
The rose that died for water from thy hand.'"

AN ADDRESS ON THE INTERSTATE LIQUOR BILL

By Rev. H. M. DuBose, D.D.

(Delivered in Washington City on January 31 before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, which has under consideration the Kenyon-Sheppard Bill to prevent the shipment of intoxicants from wet into dry States.)

Gentlemen: The request for a favorable consideration of the legislation now pending recommendation by this honorable Committee is not, as your petitioners feel, an ordinary submission, either as to the volume of testimony or the urgency and importance of the object to be attained. It involves the moral, social and commercial well-being of millions of people, constituting the entirety of at least eight of the sovereign States of this Union, with large districts of all the others; so that, in the aggregate, a majority of all the people of the republic is to be affected by the legislation asked for. And, sirs, it has come to your petitioners, as citizens of the States most directly interested in the enactment of this legislation, that we may speak with great frankness and earnestness our wishes and convictions touching the actions of both this honorable Committee and the Congress in finally disposing of this measure. We are made happy to feel that our national lawmakers do not consider themselves merely as public servants, discharging a stewardship whose only reward is a stipend and continued political favor, but as those who have accepted a trust whose measure is as wide as the hopes and aspirations of the people they represent; as those who have imbibed the Roman spirit of that far time when "to be a Roman was greater than to be a king." Indeed, sirs, we are coming to you in the belief and hope that your sense of philanthropy and human graciousness is only equaled by your sense of personal honor and your purpose to maintain inviolate the Constitution and laws in which our liberties are grounded. And, sirs, your petitioners are firmly settled in the conviction that the legislation asked for in this Interstate Liquor Bill makes appeal to both the precedents of law and the standards of human nobleness.

Disclaiming, therefore, any purpose to assume the role of pedagogue, or even of legal instructor to the lawmakers of the nation, I beg that of your clemency you will hear me in a few matters which bear upon both the legal and philanthropic aspects of this bill, and illuminate the way to its favorable recommendation.

And, first, permit me to affirm it as my understanding that the Federal government was established and exists for the purpose of protecting the people of the different States from foreign invasion and foreign oppression, as also to secure them in the enjoyment of their natural and acquired rights. Since the question of foreign invasion and oppression is not directly involved in the matter of this bill, it may be dismissed as irrelevant—though I dare not fail to say that the interstate shipment of liquor into prohibition States takes on the essential quality of an invasion, and is a distinct aggression and oppression from an extraneous source.

But I shall content myself here with asking the question: "What are the natural rights of the people of prohibition States which are sought to be protected by this anti-liquor shipment bill?" A very venerable document—older than all our constitutions, older than the Union itself—declares that it was, and is, the inalienable right of the people of all the States to engage in the pursuit of liberty and happiness.

Gentlemen, in the exercise of this right, the people of certain States of this Union have prohibited the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, rightly esteeming that to be a bar to liberty and happiness which easily and constantly produces drunkenness, debauchery and crime. But what has happened, gentlemen, in these States? Why, the policy of the Federal government in permitting the interstate shipment of liquors into these States has rendered abortive, to a large extent, their prohibition laws, and, accordingly, has destroyed, or helps to destroy, their higher ideals of liberty and happiness.

But I now appeal to the acquired rights of the people of these States which are sought to be protected in the pending legislation. With the coming of victory over their imperial enemy and the successful establishment of their claim of independence, the original States acquired certain rights. These were expressed and consolidated in a document not now extant—the Articles of Confederation, established in 1777. I am fully aware, sirs, that these articles are no longer the law of the land, but the light which shines out of that ancient document is still, like the red rays of the sun, both healing and illuminative. The ninth article of that primitive charter provided that the States might "prohibit the exportation or importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever." This privilege conceded to, or retained by, the States was clearly grounded in moral considerations. It was for the protection of the States against encroachments, or against invasive influences calculated to disturb the moral or industrial order of the people. Perhaps the wish of some of the States, even at that time, to prevent the importation of African slaves was at the bottom of this constitutional provision. But whether this was true or not, it shows how completely a moral ideal dominated the minds of the early American constitution-makers. It anticipated the need expressed in the pending bill.

But, if it be contended that a citation of the Articles of Federation is an appeal to an archaism in constitutional precedents, I cite the fact that the third division of the tenth section of the Constitution of 1787 provides that a State may, with the consent of Congress, lay imposts and duties upon importations or exportations for the purpose of maintaining its inspection laws. I do not know how often this right has been invoked by the States, but the proviso clearly indicates the legitimacy of the direction toward which this bill looks. It is a precedent. With the consent of Congress expressed in the passage of this bill, the laws of the several States which prohibit the importation of intoxicating liquors would become valid and effective, and the letter and spirit of the Constitution would be met.

But to further strengthen this position, I appeal to the third division of the eighth section of the Constitution, wherein the Congress is empowered to "regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." It is thus seen that the regulation of commerce with foreign nations, amongst the States, and with the Indian tribes is involved in one potency. Under this provision the Congress has prohibited the sale and dispensing of intoxicating liquors amongst the Indian tribes. In all candor, I ask: Are not the people of the sovereign commonwealths of America entitled to as much consideration as are the red Indians upon the bad lands of the West? If Congress has the power, unasked, to enact prohibitory legislation in the moral interest of savage Indians, has it not power to legislate in the moral interest of Anglo-Saxon majorities, especially where the wish of those majorities is made as plain as it has been in this case? And gentlemen, I beg you to consider the vast multitudes of blacks represented by your petitioners. In some cases they constitute a majority of the populations, and are as truly entitled to an unasked protection as are the Indians upon our national reservations. Indeed, the negro perils of our Southern cities are as to all moral needs the same as our Indian corrals. Let our law-makers ponder this.

But I must not miss the supreme opportunity of arguing this request from the viewpoint of the reciprocal authority and responsibility of the Federal and State governments in dealing with matters of this character. It is not to be denied that the liberties of the American people were by the fathers committed to the protection of the Federal government and the State administrations as a joint trust. It is not less true that the protection of the health and public morals of the people were committed to the same joint administration. Wherever, in either the older or the newer Constitution, a special reservation of rights was made to the State, to be exercised on the consent of Congress, that reservation was made in the interest of public morals, or public health and safety.

But we are content to let the whole question rest in the abstract constitutional right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Divorce from the bill all claims of State rights, and the issue is still a perfectly simple one. The Congress has unquestioned power to pass this bill, and the time has come when the moral sense of the people demands it of their national representatives. Sirs, I contend that the clothing of Congress with legislative powers was not a mere legal investment—a charge to defend the letter of our written Constitution—but it was a commission to blaze the way to those lofty ideals of thought and action of which the Constitution is a luminous and living prophecy. In this purview of legislative power, the members of our national legislature are called to be high priests of the widest gospel of human sympathy and helpfulness. The gift of sorrow and sympathy is, indeed, the very genius of just legislation. Nor is the true lawmaker less a seer than a statesman. Such were Gladstone and John Bright, and such were Patrick Henry, Jefferson, Roger Sherman and Henry Clay.

Gentlemen, our prayer is that, in your deliberations in this matter, you may be led by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.

THE END IN SIGHT.

If ascended saints observed the work of their successors and have joy in it, those who were members of the General Conference which met in 1858 are glad because our great denomination is about to do its duty by planting itself strongly in the National Capital. For nearly fifty years nothing was done to carry into effect the resolution introduced by Drs. J. C. Granberry, W. W. Bennett, Andrew Hunter and David S. Doggett, providing for a truly representative church building in our Capital City.

That conditions immediately following this action justified the delay, is not to be questioned; but such conditions do not now exist. The civil strife with its devastations, poverty and ruin, long since has passed away. We are no longer a poor people. Our denomination has a membership both rich and influential. We are financially able to do anything that ought to be done—we only need to be willing.

Local interests, smallness of soul, restricted vision and failure to see the kingdom of God in its larger scope, stand in the way. The building of a great representative church in the Capital City, so that our strong men who serve there as pastors may have an adequate equipment, is a work so far-reaching in its possibilities that only men who have real church-statesmanship, can see the need of it. We have such men among us and many of them are giving their names to this cause. We can rejoice in a completed task, if a few of these liberal souls respond to the appeal that is being made.

It is not the purpose of this article to give reasons why this help should be given, but it will not be amiss to mention a few.

The subscriptions made are not payable until $275,000 has been pledged. We must have $25,000 more to reach this amount. A subscription made now has a double value—its own and the maturing of others previously made.

We have gone so far that we cannot turn back. We cannot advance unless other moneyed men of vision help us.

In subscriptions, notes and Conference pledges, with the gift of the Mt. Vernon Place Church, we have $250,000. Who will help make up the needed $25,000? Are there not twenty-five men and women in our Church who can and will give $1000 each?

Since we started this work and began calling attention to the fact that the religion of a nation's capital is the final religion of that nation.

other denominations also are moving to plant themselves in our Capital City.

The Unitarians, led by the President of the Nation, have bought a lot and will soon begin the erection of a great building. Shall the Unitarians' conception of Christ be the faith of our country?

The Catholics are strongly entrenched and are bending every effort to control the religious faith and life of our National Capital. Shall this land of the free be a Protestant nation, or will that Church which is rapidly falling in Eastern countries become the controlling power in the land baptized with the blood of the Pilgrim Fathers?

Any casual observer can see that we are in danger. The press dispatches of the day are recording things that occur in the Capital City which tell the trend of present day events.

Other Protestant bodies are striving hard to maintain the faith of the fathers in the center of the Nation. Shall we stand aloof, having no adequate part in the struggle? A Church that has a right to exist in a nation, has a duty to perform at the nation's capital. Southern Methodists, do you admit that your Church has no right to a place in our Nation? If so, our sainted dead cry out against you.

Our people are now on trial before the world. No cause more unselfish has before been presented to them. The immediate effects of this work will not, like the building of a local church, a Conference or State College, or the paying of Conference assessments in full to keep up the standing of the Church, be enjoyed by those who make it a success. It is to the coming years that we must look for the real and lasting benefits. In a large way it will bring the answer to the petition that our Lord put on our lips: "Thy Kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven."

We must begin to build now. The expense of a long campaign is too great. Who will consider and help?

The men of this generation called to do this great work are honored of the Church. In undertaking it, they show a broadness of vision and loyalty of spirit worthy of the noblest; and in completing it, they will honor themselves and send blessings upon coming generations. Let us arise and build.

GEORGE S. SEXTON.

THE HELPFUL CHURCH.

It is the business of the Church to be helpful. To this end it has been established in the earth. The Church should not call men to come into its fellowship that it may rob or hinder them, but that it may do them good. "We will do thee good," said Moses unto Hobab. So says the Church to all men.

The Church may help people financially. It gives money to the poor. It helps poor men to become prosperous. We have often heard the complaint that the Church is made up of prosperous people. If this were true it would be no disparagement of the Church. There are many prosperous people in the Church who were not prosperous when the Church found them. They were poor boys, and many of them were prodigals and outcasts. But when they entered the Church and began to follow Jesus Christ they began to be sober, industrious, frugal, honest men, and then they began to prosper in the things of this world. Religion helped them financially.

Men receive social, intellectual, and political benefits from the Church. "Godliness is profitable unto all things." The atmosphere of the Church is helpful to a community in every respect.

By sharing its treasures with men the Church helps them. Moses said unto Hobab, "It shall be, if thou go with us, yes, it shall be, that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee." Moses was the first to teach and practice the principle of profit-sharing. Our blessings are not bestowed on us for selfish enjoyment. God does not comfort his people that they may be comfortable, but that they may be comforted. He does not enrich them that they may selfishly enjoy riches, but that they may enrich others.

A lady who had a trying experience in the hospital for many weeks was greatly helped by an invalid neighbor who could not visit her in her affliction, but could and did send her messages of encouragement and tokens of sympathy and love every day. When the lady recovered, she called on her invalid friend and said, "I do not know how I can ever repay you for the help you gave me in my affliction." The reply she received was, "Pass it on." This reply was so inspiring that it proved a benediction scarcely less helpful than all the messages which had reached her from the same source during her severe ordeal. We can never repay those who have helped us. We can never compensate our parents and teachers for what they have done for us. We can never repay our Heavenly Father for the multitude of his mercies. All he requires is that we shall help others. Some one has put this thought into a song:

"Have you had a kindness shown? Pass it on.
'Twas not meant for thee alone, pass it on.
Let it travel down the years, let it dry another's tears, Till in heaven the deed appears; pass it on."

"Did you hear a loving word? Pass it on.
Like the singing of a bird, pass it on.
Let its music live and grow; let it cheer another's woe;

You have reaped what others sow—pass it on."

This is not the way of the world. The world does not pass things on, but corners them. Worldly men do not propose to share their blessings, but monopolize them and hinder others from enjoying the same good. The rich man in the parable proposed to lay up all his goods in store for his own enjoyment. Grasping men have tried to corner almost every good gift of Providence. Corn, wheat, cotton, sugar, wool, eggs, coffee, medicines, all have been cornered; and if there be any good thing which greedy men have not tried to monopolize, it is because the good providence of God has made it impossible. They would monopolize the sunshine if they could, and make the whole world shiver in the cold while they stored up riches and heat for themselves. The Church is not selfish and greedy. If there be a church that is greedy, it is doomed. If anyone who calls himself a Christian is a grasping, greedy man, his doom is sealed. Share your blessings.

The Church helps men by making them helpful. Hobab, at first, refused to accept the invitation of Moses, and said, "I will not go." Then Moses tried another argument, saying, "Thou mayest be to us instead of eyes." He was familiar with the wilderness through which the Hebrews were about to take their journey, and he could guide them. This appeal must have made a profound impression.

In one of Ralph Connor's stories there is a character whom he calls Sandy. Sandy was not a church member, but somewhat given to drink. The minister greatly feared for him one day because the races were at hand, and Sandy would be almost sure to fall. A temperance lecture would do him no good, and it was useless to tell him how religion would help him. But a bright thought occurred to the minister. He said to Sandy, "I greatly fear for Donald to-day. If he falls into the company of those wild fellows they will rob him of his money; and think of his poor family! Could not you keep an eye on him to-day and keep him sober?" Sandy straightened up and felt several inches taller. The idea that he could help save a weak brother had never occurred to him, and he said: "I will be doing my best, sir." And he did. He kept an eye on Donald and kept in touch with him all day, and brought him home at night safe and sober. It was a great victory. The minister was trying to help Sandy, and he helped two. The Church can help others by making them helpful.

Helping others, we shall strengthen our own life. The strongest man is not the man who has received most, but the man who has done most for others. The church that has the largest membership, the finest music, the most eloquent preaching, and the richest people in its pews may not be a strong church. The church that does most for other people is the strongest church. One minister, writing of his church, was very careful to tell how many lawyers, judges, senators, ex-governors, college presidents, and money-kings were enrolled in the list of members, or, at least, sat in the pews. This all sounds fine, but it would be far more interesting and significant to tell some of the particular enterprises of helpfulness in which the church is engaged. The man who has been exalted to heaven shall surely be cast down to hell if he shall fail to help others who are less fortunate than himself. The same is true of the family, the church, or the nation which is highly exalted, but lives a selfish life.

Brother minister, be not over-anxious to serve a rich church. Do not break your heart because your church is small and poor. But watch and fight and pray and work and preach to make your church eminent for helpfulness, and great will be your reward.—New York Christian Advocate.

ALARMING FIGURES.

That there should be a crusade in this country against the social evil and all forms of personal impurity is shown by the following figures which come under our eyes in the columns of the Watchman, of Boston. They are alarming and should arrest attention in every part of the country. The Watchman says that statistics gathered by the President's Home Commission in 1908 show that out of 174,611 patients treated in the hospitals at Washington, there were 27,947 cases of venereal diseases. In 1901 a committee of seven, under the auspices of the Medical Society of the County of New York, made an investigation into the venereal diseases, and the committee concluded that in the city of New York there were treated in one year not less than 243,000 cases of these diseases. Dr. Swan M. Burnett, Professor of Ophthalmology in Georgetown University, gives it as his judgment that 15,000 of the 50,000 blind in the United States have lost their sight because their eyes become infected at birth from their infected, though often innocent, mothers. Other statements equally as horrifying as these are given in the editorial of the Watchman. Verily it is time there should be done something definite and earnest to arrest this evil among our people. A nation will rot with such a condition as this, and that before a great while. It is therefore a question for the patriot as well as for the Christian. And yet, in this good state of Georgia, which boasts of being a Christian people, we can not get the legislature to raise the age of consent to sixteen years. When such a measure has come up there has been somehow a method adopted to hide it away, and it never comes to a vote on its passage. Why don't the men who make our laws learn what is going on—what are the things that destroy our national as well as our pure civic life, and enact the laws that will check the evils?—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

(In Louisiana the age of consent is eighteen years, which is very much to the credit of the State. In Mississippi, if we mistake not, it is twelve years, but Governor Brewer has recommended that it be raised to eighteen years. The ringing words quoted above are most timely.—The Editor.)

Bishop H. C. Morrison will preach the Commencement sermon of Southern College, Sutherland, Fla., on May 19.

Dr. C. D. Bulla, superintendent of our Wesley Adult Bible Class Movement, has lately been filling engagements in some of the Northern cities.

Bishop Candler is at home again after an official visit to Cuba. He reports a good Conference, and states that the work is prospering in that field.

Dr. T. N. Ivey, the accomplished editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was the orator on Founder's Day (January 30) at Lander College, South Carolina.

It is stated that within the last century the number of languages in which the Bible is printed has increased from 65 to 500, and that the Word of God is now accessible to half the human race.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the South Georgia Conference raised during the last nine months of the year 1911, $45,000. Of this amount, the Home Department raised $19,000, and the Foreign Department $26,000.

Both the Presbyterians and the Lutherans held a Laymen's Conference in the South last week, the former at Chattanooga, Tenn., and the latter at Salisbury, N. C. The attendance and interest were reported good at both gatherings.

Bishop J. C. Kilgo recently delivered before the State Convention of the Virginia Anti-Saloon League, which assembled in Richmond, a forceful address, bristling with facts. Dr. George R. Stuart also spoke with stirring eloquence.

Bills are pending in both Houses of Congress to extend the Washington City street car line to the site of the American University (owned by the M. E. Church). If this is done, it is said that the location selected for the institution will be an admirable one.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Mr. Charles M. Alexander will do evangelistic work in Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and New South Wales from March 12, 1912, to May 1, 1913. They have taken a number of other zealous workers with them to this far away field.

The Roanoke (Va.) Evening World highly compliments a temperance address delivered at the Jefferson Theatre in that city on the evening of January 23 by Bishop Collins Denny. There are few subjects which this scholarly chief pastor is not qualified to handle in an illuminating manner.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, states that the outlook for the establishment of a Russian Baptist College at St. Petersburg is most encouraging. The Baptists of England have given $30,000 to the promotion of this project, and the American Baptists $10,000.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix was slated to preach at Travis Park Church, San Antonio, Texas, on Sunday, February 4. The Mexican Conferences are this year under his supervision. That of the Central Mexico Mission convened on February 8, and that of the Northwest Mission is due to meet at Torreon on February 22.

The Chinese Christian Advocate made its appearance on December 5, 1911. It is published by the American Methodist Missions, and is printed in the Chinese language by the Methodist Publishing House at Shanghai. The establishment of this journal is indicative of the progress that Methodism is making in the Orient.

Bishop A. W. Wilson, according to the Baltimore Southern Methodist, preached a great sermon at Trinity-Calvary Church, Baltimore, on Sunday, January 28. It will be gratifying news to the Methodists of the South to know that our honored Senior Bishop has recovered sufficiently to preach with his usual vigor and impressiveness.

The (Rockefeller) General Board of Education has agreed to give $50,000 toward a sum of $250,000 to be raised for Emory and Henry College. We trust that this movement to strengthen this historic institution will succeed. Four of the present College of Bishops—Hoss, Atkins, Waterhouse, and Lambuth—are Emory and Henry men.

Mr. Charles S. Ward, the Y. M. C. A. money raiser who failed recently to raise $500,000 for the Association in London, England, is back in the United States, and has entered upon money-raising campaigns in some of the cities of Pennsylvania. He expects to return to England later, and undertake the task of raising funds in other leading municipalities of that country.

Bishop Hughes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will deliver the first course of lectures at Depauw University, Greencastle, Ind., on the Mendenhall foundation. This lecture course was established by the generosity of the late Rev. M. H. Mendenhall, D.D., of the North Indiana Conference. The subjects discussed are required to relate to the "Bible and Revealed Religion."

A $25,000 church is being constructed by the Southern Methodists of Albuquerque, N. M. Seven years ago we had in the New Mexico Conference 21 pastoral charges, of which only one was self-sustaining. We now have between 50 and 60 charges, two of which pay salaries of $2,500; one a salary of $2,000, and a number of others which take good care of their pastors.

It is said that the American Mission will set a new mission boat to plying the river Nile. It was purchased at a cost of $5,000, and its name is the Allegheny. It is 74 feet long, and has a deck 60 feet in length, suitable for meetings and for a dining room, a kitchen, and a bathroom. A barge, to be used for the doctor's office and clinic, will be secured and arranged so that the boat will tow it along.

Zion's Herald of January 31 contained a brilliant sermon on "Keeping the Faith," by Rev. J. E. Wray, D.D., pastor of the Mulberry Street M. E. Church, South, of Macon, Ga. The front page of this journal was also adorned with an excellent picture of this gifted young Southerner. Referring to the fact that Dr. Wray has been called upon to furnish a discourse for its columns, the Herald says, "It will be found that he fully and grandly justified his selection."

Dr. J. L. Hillman, pastor of the Trinity M. E. Church of Youngstown, Ohio, has received 838 probationers within two and a half years, and of these 695 have become members of the Church. This ingathering is said to have been largely the result of the regular Sunday services, conducted by the pastor himself. During the same period the accessions by certificate reached 433, making a total gain of 1128. This is an illustration of what a capable and consecrated pastor may accomplish where he has a good field. To be a really great pastor is to reach the summit in the work of the ministry.

The Presbyterian Board of Home Missions announced two fellowships of $1,000 each and expenses, the holders to go to Europe to study immigration at its cradle, and then to return to the United States to work at least three years for immigrants and their welfare here at home, under the direction of the Board. One of the men selected will be sent to Poland and Russia for two years and the other to Italy and the Balkans for a year and a half. There will not be competitive examinations, but the general fitness of all candidates will be considered. Such candidates need not be Presbyterian ministers, but must be men acceptable to the Presbyterians, and who have had adequate training.

VETERANS' DAY

Appointed by the Mississippi Conference for the First Sunday in March.

To the Presiding Elders and Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference—

Dear Brethren: In the absence of the Conference Minutes, it becomes my duty to remind you that the First Sunday in March is to be observed among us as Veterans' Day. The Conference has ordered that the collection for our worn-out preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers shall be taken at that time. Our loyalty to our Conference and our old preachers leaves no alternative but obedience.

There are many benefits accruing from a Conference order: 1. It gives the pastor an easy approach to his people, and, I think, insures better results—when he can say: "The Annual Conference of which we are a part has ordered that the collection for our worn-out preachers be taken at this time."

2. There is inspiration in the thought that we are moving forward in the same work at the same time with a great host. Each member of each church of the Conference can feel that he is one of the 54,000 and more Methodists of the Mississippi Conference assisting in the early part of the year to relieve the necessities of our old preachers.

3. It gives the Joint Board of Finance the only safe basis for its promise to the claimants to pay quarterly the amounts which have been allowed them. This Conference order puts the entire Conference behind the promise to relieve their necessities quarterly. If it were not for the Conference order, the only way the Board could make such a promise would be on its own personal responsibility. Then, if the Church did not raise the assessment in the early part of the year, the Board would be compelled to borrow the money to meet its promise, which is always unwise.

Now let me urge every pastor of the Conference to take the collection, as the Conference has ordered—on the FIRST SUNDAY IN MARCH. This has been a hard winter and our old preachers need the money. The intense and protracted cold has entailed larger fuel bills and other necessities, which make it imperative that every preacher shall take the collection in every church by the first of March. The treasurer will need $3000 to meet all the claims by the first of April, the end of our first quarter. Take the collection, brethren, and send the money to S. A. Tomlinson, Gulfport, Miss. NOLAN B. HARMON, Sec. Hazlehurst, Miss.

During the recent cold spell over the United States twenty-five lives were lost either by freezing or burning to death in fires. Snow, in places, drifted to a depth of fifteen feet.

The aggregate value of live stock in the State of Louisiana is $55,000,000. Of this amount more than $14,000,000 represents the value of cattle, and $30,000,000 represents the value of horses and mules.

The Protestants of Ireland are against home rule. They can see in it nothing less than an attempt on the part of Rome to set herself up in Ireland, and curtail the privileges of Protestant worship.

These figures would indicate that the United States really believes in the higher training of her young men and women.

The New York Board of Health has taken steps to prevent the use of wood alcohol for either external or internal purposes. The Secretary of War, General Stimson, has decided to abandon eighteen army posts at once and nine others as soon as possible. His object in doing this is that the army may be located in such places that it could be mobilized in a short time. One-half the regiments now serving in the Philippines are to be moved to Hawaii.

A gigantic typewriter corporation has just been formed with a capital stock of $20,000,000. The Remington Typewriter Company acquires the

The United States Navy Department recently conducted a wireless telegraph experiment, during which they were able to flash a message 4303 miles, with but one interruption. The Department announces that it "wirelessly" the message. "Wirelessly" thus becomes a new word in modern English, and will aid in making our unabridged dictionaries more interesting and diversified.

Dr. H. L. Smith, president of Davidson (N. C.) College, has been unanimously elected president of Washington and Lee University to succeed Dr. George H. Denny, who went to the University of Alabama. Mrs. B. E. Jones, of near Sardis, Miss., was killed while reading her Bible by her fireside last week by a stray bullet from a revolver in the hands of a man who was shooting at a target. The revolver has brought very little protection to mankind, and much misery. Why a man should jeopardize the lives of others in order to make of himself a crack shot with a pistol is hard to understand.

Prof. Schmidt, teacher of Hebrew in Cornell University, is lecturing under the auspices of Washington University. His message to the world is that Genesis is an allegory. He denies the immaculate conception of Jesus Christ and advances many other heterodox theories. So radical was his denunciation of the old-time faith in a recent lecture that one lady in his audience became hysterical. The Professor may impress the world with his learning, but we scarcely think his message will contain much comfort for aching hearts.

Since the publication of Mr. Carnegie's list of the "twenty greatest men," Mr. W. T. Snead, a lover of popular suffrage, has secured a vote from thirty leading thinkers of this age as to who they think excelled all other men in the past. One hundred and fifty different names were mentioned, among which the following lead the list: Shakespeare, Columbus, Gutenberg, Newton, Julius Caesar, Darwin, Dante, Stevenson, Michael Angelo, Franklin, Abraham Lincoln, Watt, Moses, Homer, Buddha, Aristotle, Socrates, St. Paul, Confucius, and Luther. In this list there are two Christians, one Hebrew, and three moralists.

A law has recently been enacted in Congress establishing a commission whose business it will be to investigate the home-life, health and employment of children. This commission will have authority to invade the home of any man and conduct a personal examination of its sanitary conditions. Some of the Senators, including Foster of Louisiana and Stone of Missouri, waxed eloquent on the subject of the "Sanctity of the Home" and seemed to fear that the country is going to the "bow-wows." The same spirit that quarantines a household where there is a dangerous disease for the protection of others, may well go into other houses and take preventive measures for the protection of others.

MINISTERIAL AMBITION.

I once asked Bishop McTyeire about an old college mate of mine that had become a preacher. I wished to know what sort of a preacher he was. He replied substantially: "He is a very considerable preacher, but he is so anxious to get a better place than the one he is in that he doesn't do his duty in the place he is in." There are too many men of that sort in the ministry. Excessive ambition for promotion is fatal to spirituality. Jesus taught that men could not be believers who received honor from one another, and sought not the honor that comes from God alone. Ambition is a canker that eats out all spiritual vitality. Preachers sometimes rise into high positions by dint of talent, energy and wire working, but they will have a fruitless ministry and a comfortless experience, even if they do not make shipwreck of the faith and bring disgrace upon themselves and the Church.

Honor is not to be despised if it is thrust upon you. Position may be sought for increased usefulness. The ministry has its business side as well as its religious side. An eye to a comfortable living, especially if the preacher has a family, is wise rather than wicked; but the living should not be the dominant motive. The glory of God and the good of man should be the ruling arguments of ministerial activity. My advice is, Do your duty faithfully and altruistically and leave the question of honor and worldly advantage with God. He that would be the greatest must be the servant of all, but not from that motive.—R. N. Price, in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

BIBLE PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.

The American Bible Society has presented President Madero, of Mexico, with a handsomely bound Bible. The presentation took place in Chapultepec castle in the magnificent white and gold room, which is one of the most imposing rooms in the world, with its lofty ceilings and beautifully decorated walls. At four o'clock on the afternoon of the eighth of January, the committee was called before President Madero. The committee was composed of Dr. Morales, dean of the pastors, representing the Presbyterians; Rev. Teofilo Barocio, the Baptists; Rev. Julian Castro, the Methodist Church, South; Rev. Vicente Medozaa, the Methodist Church, North, and Dr. Butler, chairman, representing the American Bible Society. Dr. Butler made the presentation address in well chosen Spanish, after which President Madero replied substantially as follows:

"I am exceedingly grateful for this gift you make me. You may rest assured I appreciate it to its utmost worth. I hold the same belief as you concerning the value of its principles for the elevation of the people, inasmuch as I am sure that only through Christian morality are the nations uplifted. I heartily congratulate you on the good work you are doing in co-operation for the moral upbuilding of the Mexican people. The Mexican people have noble sentiments; they are good and heroic, they have only lacked encouragement, and it will be one of my greatest efforts to work for this, so that they may be able to understand the high principles of this book. Continue your good work and you will thus co-operate with me in the uplift of the masses of the Mexican people."—The Christian Intelligencer.

Concerning Missions

HOME MISSION SPECIAL.

By Rev. John M. Moore, D.D., Secretary of Home Mission Department.

Southern Methodism raised 87 per cent of its assessment for foreign missions last year and gave an additional special of $106,087. This same Southern Methodism raised only 30 per cent of its assessment for the Home Missions that are under the care and direction of the Nashville office and not one cent additional in the form of specials. The Home Secretary rejoices in the good fortune of the Foreign Department, but wonders why Southern Methodists forgot, neglected or ignored the claims of the Home field. Does any one answer: because their attention was not called to the matter? All right.

Attention! The Home Department must have $4,000 this year in addition to the assessment, or a debt. The $4,000 is preferred. The Board of Missions, believing that specials for home missions would be as legitimate and as popular as for foreign missions, last May authorized specials for the Home Department to the amount of $11,000. Some of this will not be required this year, and some is being raised by specially commissioned parties, but $4,000 must be raised through the Nashville office. Of the $4,000 absolutely required $1,000 is for work among the negroes, $1,500 for work among miners, $500 for work among mountain people, and $1,000 for important sustentation work in Western territory. All this work is now being done on borrowed money. The cases were so urgent that postponement of action was impossible. These fields are as white, the needs are as urgent, the prospects for results are as bright as will be found anywhere in the world. Will Southern Methodism deny the Home Department this meager sum, its first request for a special, to be used in giving the gospel to unchurched Americans?

Any gift, however large or however small, will be gratefully received. Shares in Home Mission specials are $100 each. The Home Department sends a beautiful certificate to any person, society, Sunday school, or congregation that takes a share. Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., or the Secretary of the Home Department, at the same address, will be glad to acknowledge receipt of contributions of any size for these urgent claims. Lessen not your gifts to foreign missions, but be not deaf to the calls of your home land. The money cannot reach us too soon. Pledges from churches, Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues, payable in installments, will be gladly received. Let the Home Department have this little share in your gifts to missions.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

A recent letter from Bishop Lambuth will be of interest to all Southern Methodism. Bishop Lambuth is the chairman of the Board of Directors of the Methodist Training School, and is recognized by his Church as a modern Apostolic Missionary. He is writing from the town of Leopoldville on the banks of the Congo in Africa, and sends this message to us: "As I write, the roar of the Congo as it rushes over the rapids strikes me on one side, and the boom of the great drum in the village, where a heathen dance and orgie is going on, comes from the other side. I walked eight miles to-day in the boiling sun to help in some evangelical work among a people who are heathen to the core—fetishes in the trees, teeth filed to a point and faces hideously tattooed, no knowledge of God, dominated by the fear of evil spirits and the common beasts of burden. When will this darkness lift? God help our Church; help us; help the Training School to do its share." In company with John Wesley Gilbert, who was for so many years connected with Paine

College, in Augusta, and who has given his life in service to the people of his race, Bishop Lambuth is blazing the way for our part in the coming of the Kingdom of Light in that Continent which is called dark. This prayer of his comes to us: "God help our Church; help us; help the Training School to do its share." As I was reading this burning, throbbing message, I could not but pray "God help the Church to help the Training School to do its share."

The Training School has been connected in a remarkable way with work among the negroes. The Chairman of our Board of Directors is the pioneer Bishop of our Church to Africa. Rev. J. E. McCulloch, the former President, Dr. J. D. Hammond and Dr. A. M. Trawick, formerly connected with the school, are to-day doing special work for the negroes. Miss Mary De Bardeleben, of the class of 1910, is the first regularly appointed woman missionary to the negroes of the South. Professor and Mrs. Malcolm M. Stewart, of 1911, are members of the faculty of Paine College, in Augusta, and are rendering valuable service. Surely this institution is doing a noble work not only for the distant missionary fields, but for that foreign nation which has been brought to our very doors.

A few days after the reception of the Bishop's letter, the Training School enjoyed a visit from Rev. Mr. Rochester and wife, two colored missionaries of the Southern Presbyterian Church who are at home on furlough. They told how, for years, they had expected the Southern Methodist Church to come and open work in Africa; of how that their force is totally inadequate to man the field; of how the condition of these people is a trumpet call to that Church which seeth its brother hath need; of how that their hearts overflowed with joy when they met Bishop Lambuth and Professor Gilbert and learned the object of their mission. The fields are white—the need is urgent. Pray the Lord of the harvest that other laborers may be thrust forth into the field. In no more practical way can the Church do its share than in the adequate training of God's volunteers for the service in the fields.

Going back to the Bishop's prayer that God may help us to do our share, let each of us pray that God may help me to do my share. Direct some consecrated young man or woman to the school; send in a contribution, large or small, to help those who bear the financial burden of this connectional institution of our Church. This is your share.

REMINISCENT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

No. 7.

About the close of the autumnal blizzard, we received our tents, and with many expressions of joy, we lodged more comfortably at night. There were now several weeks of normal weather. My tent-mate during this time was William Moseley. We moved to the vicinity of Tuilahoma, and pitched our tents in a forest of tall timber. Black walnut trees were about as tall and as numerous as any. How we feasted on the nuts! They were generally relished, and hundreds of soldiers cracked and ate them all day.

I chanced to form the acquaintance of Ed Smith, a sixteen year old Oxford boy, and we seemed drawn toward each other from the first. I thought him a prodigy, surpassing any youth of his age that I had ever seen. His handsome features, his clear complexion, his poise, the intonations of his voice, all rendered him very imposing. Converse with him added to good impressions already made. With a brilliant mind, and his good opportunities at his Oxford home, he was wonderfully well educated and well informed for one of his age. But the best and most wonderful part of his character is yet to be told. He was no less remarkable in his Christian character and spirituality. I do not now remember, if I ever knew, with what Church he affiliated when at home, but I remember that he was a bold disciple of Christ. The first or second time that I met him, he said to me, "I am anxious for some congenial spirit with whom I can converse and pray. Will you go with me to the forest each evening to pray before the guards are posted?" I was seven years his senior, but he led and I followed. These private evening devotions were kept up until the bloody battle of Murfreesboro, or Stone's river a few weeks later. After this I never saw nor heard of my young friend any more.

We advanced in the direction of Murfreesboro, and pitched our tents a short distance from the town, and the enemy, we learned, was advancing. Rev. R. G. Porter (Gilderoy) was with us and preached sometimes, as opportunity afforded. I heard him one Sunday afternoon when he had fifteen or twenty sitting near him, and small groups, some playing cards and some cracking wanuts, near enough to have heard him. The sound of artillery was becoming familiar now, day and night. The armies were drawing closer, and while the small arms used by the pickets could not be heard far, the field-artillery told what was going on.

We lay in line of battle for two days, on a large abandoned farm, in view of the enemy. It was dangerous (and the penalty was sometimes death) for one to raise his head a few inches. The thousand-yard rifles would be leveled at us. A cannon ball, one evening, came whizzing, roaring, and screaming, as though bent on death, and tore a hole in the ground, about ten feet to our rear, in which a horse could have been buried. On the day before the battle, December 30, 1862, we lay flat all day in a steady downpour of rain, not cold enough to freeze, but cold enough to cause great suffering among the men. We shook, and our teeth chattered so that we could scarcely understand each other. About dusk, so soon as we were allowed to leave our places, a detachment was made from my company, including myself, to go to the rear and cook rations. When we had gone, as we thought, far enough, a fire was kindled, and a question arose in regard to what quantity to cook. One of the company said: "There is no use to cook much, for half of us will be at the bone yard before this time to-morrow night." When we reached our places in line of battle, Capt. S. S. Calhoun said: "Boys, lie on your guns, and keep them dry, for we are going to have merry in the morning."

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

A CATLAND LAW.

Pussy caught a mouse for dinner,
But the mouse was wise and old.
"Wait a bit," spake he unto her,
"Have you never yet been told
That there is a law in Mouseland
That pronounces it disgrace
To begin to eat your dinner
Ere you go and wash your face?"

Pussy felt ashamed. "A cat should Do as well's a mousie can."
Loosed her claws, and in a jiffy
Off the wise mouse lightly ran.
Very vexed, the pussy scolded;
"Mouseland laws would work disgrace,
This shall be the law in Catland:
'After eating wash your face.'"

WHEN BEARS HELP EACH OTHER.

In Russia we are told there are many bears, and the people who live in that country often set traps in order to catch them.

The trap usually consists of a pit several feet deep, which is covered over with branches, turf and leaves. On the top is placed some food, but when the bear attempts to get this food, it usually falls into the pit, where it remains a prisoner.

If, however, four or five bears happen to fall into the pit together, they all manage to get out again, for they form a sort of ladder by stepping on each other's shoulders, and thus make their escape.

The strange thing about it is that when the other bears have climbed out, they do not forget the one left at the bottom of the pit, but scampering off, they fetch the branch of a tree, which they let down into the pit, enabling their fellow companion to escape also. In this way they show their gratitude to the one who, by remaining at the bottom, made it possible for the rest to escape.—Apples of Gold.

EDGAR'S SOLDIER LESSON.

Really it was too bad. Edgar was going out to play soldier. He slipped on the steps and twisted his ankle.

"My little lad must go to bed and get well," said Mamma Gates.

"Boo-hoo!" howled Eddy.

Uncle Casper looked up from his paper and smiled.

"I don't want to go to bed. I want to go and be a soldier," sobbed poor Edgar.

"But if your ankle is not bathed and put to bed, you will be very lame to-morrow."

"I don't care," whined Eddy. "I don't want to go to bed."

"I thought you were playing soldier," said Uncle Casper. "What does a soldier do?"

Eddy looked up, puzzled. "He marches and he drums." Eddy looked at his drum and began to cry again.

"Is that all he does?"

"He doesn't have to go to bed," whined Eddy.

"But sometimes he gets hurt badly. He is shot in battle. Then what does he do? Does he howl and cry?"

Now Uncle Casper was an old soldier whom Eddy admired very much.

"No-o-o! I guess not. I don't know," said the boy.

"No. He goes to the hospital. There he is as brave as when he drums and marches."

Edgar wiped his eyes and looked eagerly at his uncle. "Is going to bed and not crying being a soldier?" he asked.

"Yes, my boy, that is the bravest part of it. Now let me be the ambulance—that's a wagon, you know—and take you to the hospital."

Uncle Casper picked up Eddy in his arms and carried him gently to his chamber.

"Now I'm going to be a good soldier," said the boy, with a smile. He did not wince when his uncle felt the sore ankle and bound it up.

"That's a brave lad, Eddie," said his uncle. "Now play it does not hurt and go to sleep."

Half an hour later Eddy was dreaming. He looked like a brave little corporal taking his rest.

Uncle Casper hung up Eddy's flag and gun where he could see them when he awoke. The drum with the soldier cap upon it was placed upon the bed. Edgar limped downstairs the next day, and went into camp on the sofa. He whined and complained no longer. He had learned a lesson, that a brave man is patient in suffering.—Little Men and Women.

A WARNING TO BOYS.

The cigarette is the American abomination. No cigarette victim can climb to the top of the ladder.—Chief Justice Brewer.

I do not believe there is an agency more destructive of soul, mind and body, or more subversive of good morals than the cigarette. The fight against the cigarette is a fight for civilization. This is my opinion as an educator.—Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus.

Of the large number of boys brought before me charged with various crimes, and ranging in years from 10 to 20, 90 per cent are cigarette smokers. This certainly goes to prove that the boys who do not smoke cigarettes keep from the paths leading to the Criminal Court. This "little white devil," called the cigarette, is doing more to harm our boys than any other thing.—Judge Leroy B. Crane.

The cigarette habit is certainly one of the very worst habits that attack the boyhood, and therefore the manhood of this nation; there is no question that it is one of the leading factors in the criminality of a large per cent of the young boys in the reformatory institutions of the nation, and every effort to eliminate this evil deserves the encouragement of the American people. I sometimes wish I could give up the bench for a year or two to get out and help in a sort of evangelical work in fighting the causes of juvenile weakness, misery and crime.—Judge Ben B. Lindsay.

HELP FROM ABOVE.

"Mary, what do you do when you feel cross and naughty?" asked the lady of the little girl only five years old.

"I just shut my lips and eyes tight and think a prayer to Jesus to come down and make me feel right," answered Mary.

Mary is a wise little girl. She knows that when she is tempted she needs help from above to keep her from falling into sin.

Let us remember that in every temptation we need the help of the Lord Jesus Christ to keep us from doing wrong. So when we feel our tempers rising, let us lift up a little prayer to Jesus, and he will surely hear and answer us.—Little Ones.

"WHEN NO MAN CAN WORK."

This may be the last year of your life. Time is hurried; I take my hour-glass, and put it down before me many an hour, just to see that time is in a hurry and won't stop.

We haven't much time. You cannot stay here long; you have got to go quickly; pretty soon you will be gone, and your hands will have rest for a million years. Work hard. Don't whine because you have to work; but thank God you have the chance to do it. Be so honorable in the world's industry, and so eager to serve, that you will covet the hours you sleep.

Pretty soon it will be time to stop; and a strange visitor will come by, and say: "Quit work!" You will say: "It is not night." But he will persist—"Quit work!"

"It is only two o'clock; I have only just begun for the afternoon."

"Quit work!"

"It is not sundown yet, may I not work till night?"

"Quit work!"

And you will lay down your hammer on the anvil, with your hands black with the grime of the smithy, and you will go out with him, and he will say to you: "It is time to quit work."

And you will say: "Will I be back in the morning?"

"No, not in the morning."

"Will I be back to-morrow?"

"No, not to-morrow."

"Where are you taking me?"

"I am taking you to a land very far off, and from whose bourne no traveler returns." Come along. This is the way.

"Can't I go back once?"

"No," and somehow there is a little sternness in his voice.

But you will say: "I must go back a minute, only a minute, just once, to tell—"

"No, come on!"

O, who is it? It is the master, Death. You cannot go back—not for a minute; no, you might just as well ask for a century as for a minute. Suddenly it will be pitch dark and Death will be gone, and you will be in the silence, where you can hear the blood beat around your temples like the flow of a rushing river, all alone.

Pray God that, when you get there, Christ will be with you, lest you perish in solitude.—Bishop Quayle, in Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

A DEADENING HABIT.

A fault-finding, criticising habit is fatal to all excellence. Nothing will strangle growth quicker than a tendency to hunt for flaws, to rejoice in the unlovely, like a hog, which always has his nose in the mud, and rarely looks up. The direction in which he looks indicates his life-aim, and people who are always looking for something to criticize, for the crooked and ugly, who are always suspicious, who invariably look at the worst side of others, are but giving the world a picture of themselves.

The disposition to see the worst instead of the best grows on one very rapidly, until ultimately it strangles all that is beautiful, and crushes out all that is good in oneself. No matter how many times your confidence has been betrayed, do not allow yourself to sour, do not lose your faith in people. The bad are the exception; most people are honest and true, and mean to do what is right.—Success.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

There seems to be a considerable diversity of opinion as to the moral and religious conditions existing in the colleges and universities of America. The terrific arraignment of them at this point a short time since by Mr. Richard T. Crane, of Chicago (who has lately passed away), is still fresh in the public mind, and there are some who appear to think that the facts very largely sustain his charges. The more general feeling, however, is that his statements were greatly exaggerated, and that conditions are not nearly so bad as he represented them in his rather sensational attack. Still it should be remembered that Mr. Crane is not the only severe critic of the teachings and influence of our higher institutions of learning. A year or two ago in one of the leading monthlies of the country a writer, who claimed to have investigated the subject, startled the nation by publishing what were said to be the utterances of leading professors in our foremost universities, made in lectures to their classes. And occasionally we see in a secular daily, under flaming headlines, some outrageous deliverance, subversive of Christianity and good morals, which is credited to some gentleman who holds a chair in one of our educational institutions.

This is one side of the question—but there is another. Over against this dark and disturbing picture, there are those who paint for us a scene that is bright and reassuring. They tell us that there was never before a time in the world's history when the religious influences were so strong at our seats of learning, or when so many college students were studying the Bible and volunteering to do Christian work. Thus in the January number of The Century Magazine Mr. Clayton Sedwick Cooper, in writing of "The American Undergraduate," says:

"Moreover, if we consider the college community from a strictly conventional or religious point of view, the present-day undergraduates do not suffer either in comparison with college men of other days, or with other sections of modern life. The reports of the last year give sixty out of every one hundred undergraduates as members of churches. One in every seven men in the American colleges last season was in voluntary attendance upon the Bible classes in connection with the College Young Men's Christian Association. The religious tendencies of the American undergraduates are also reflected in their participation in the modern missionary crusades both at home and abroad. Twenty-five years ago the entire gifts of North American institutions for the support of missions in foreign lands was less than $10,000. Last year the students and alumni of Yale University alone gave $15,000 for the support of the Yale Mission in China, while $131,000 represented the gifts of North American colleges to the mission cause in other countries. The missionary interest of students on this continent is furthermore revealed in the fact that 11,838 men were studying modern missions in weekly student mission study classes during the college season of 1909-10. At Washington and Lee University there were more college men studying missions in 1910 than were doing so in the whole United States and Canada sixteen years ago. During the last ten years 4338 college graduates have gone to foreign lands from North America to give their lives in unselfish service to people less fortunate than themselves. Six hundred of these sailed in 1910 to fill positions in foreign mission ports in the Levant, India, China, Japan, Korea, Africa, Australia and South America."

In the face of these conflicting statements, one is not a little perplexed to know what the real situation is. And the matter is of such grave importance that, if possible, the exact truth ought to be discovered and brought to light. If our leading institutions of learning are places of peril rather than places of safety and opportunity for the youth of the country, the sooner the fact is disclosed the better. For our part, we are disposed to think that there is some truth in each of the two representations; that those who differ as to the conditions existing are perhaps looking at the situation from different view-points. We cannot believe that our American colleges are such breeding places of infidelity and immorality as some allege; nor are we inclined to think that the atmosphere prevailing at them is religiously so strong and wholesome, as some affirm. Many things masquerade under the name of religion in this day. The value of Bible study depends upon what sort it is. And we have even known missionaries to be sent abroad who openly confessed that they had repudiated some of the most cherished doctrines of Christianity.

One of the most judicious utterances that we have seen on this controverted subject is the following by the editor of The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, Pa.:

"No topic connected with academic life is attracting more attention than religion and morals. College presidents and presidents of boards of trustees, alumni, former and recent, business men and mothers, ministers of the gospel and sociologists, are all taking part in it, and all telling what ought to be done. The first and chief difficulty in the situation is that there is no criterion of criticism, and the result is something of a Babel. There seem to be three chief divisions among the critics, the conservative, the modern liberal, and the materialist. The conservative holds that religion and morals should be taught in harmony with an infallible Bible. The modern liberal holds that the teaching should be in accord with the latest conclusion of higher criticism and science, which latter term with him usually means speculative philosophy, as distinguished from the facts of real science. The materialist holds that the teachings should be determined by the most recent discoveries of material or natural science. One professor teaches that marriage, another that children are an embarrassment to progress, and a third that marriage is holy, and children a gift of God. Who is to decide which of these standards shall prevail? Evidently, the governing boards, and next to them, the faculties. If the governing boards are evangelical Christians, then the Bible will be the standard. If the governing boards are modern liberal, then religious standards will shift according to the shifting of speculation. If the materialists have control, then atheism and agnosticism will prevail. The real determining question, then, is, who shall control our institutions of learning—Christians, infidels or atheists? This is a fundamental question, and it will not down until decided. Upon its answer the future of our families, individuals and the nation depends."

SHAMEFUL, IF TRUE.

The following press dispatch was sent out from New York on February 4:

"Just before Rev. William Burd, pastor of the Methodist Church at Hilldale, N. J., began preaching his sermon to-night he clapped his hands as a signal, and twelve boys who had been occupying the front seat arose. At that moment the pastor's wife at the organ played 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' and the boys marched to the platform. The pastor introduced them as the Boys' Whistling Club of the church, and they gave their club yell. Here it is:

"Say, my friend,
Have you seen
Second Timothy,
Two, fifteen?
First Thessalonians,
Five, twenty-two,
Tells you exactly
What to do.

"This innovation at the service was well received.

"That club yell of the boys is really intended for outdoors, but it has a Scriptural bearing and significance, so I didn't think there was any harm in allowing the boys the privilege of giving their yell," said Pastor Burd."

We can scarcely believe that there is a Methodist pastor in the world who would introduce into his church service such a performance as that described above. The secular papers frequently get matters very much mixed when they undertake to report church proceedings, and we cannot but hope that this is true in the present instance. But in view of the novel expedients to which we have known some ministers to resort in order to attract a crowd, we are somewhat fearful that this account may have some basis in fact.

When a preacher begins to adopt sensational methods in the pulpit, the almost inevitable tendency is toward still greater extremes. Why cannot we learn that there is no merit in mere numbers, assembled out of mere curiosity? The most important question is not whether we have full pews, but whether the service is really helpful to those who come. A circus in a church would undoubtedly draw the mixed multitude, but they would be injured, instead of benefited, by it. Any worship that is worth while must be decorous, if not dignified. The house of God is no place for clownish or startling exhibitions. Nor are they needed; for, though it may not at once bring the godless throng, in the long run there is nothing that will draw like the simple story of the gospel, tenderly, fervently, lovingly told. It is the one thing that meets the deepest desires of man's immortal nature. The human heart craves and cries out for it, and is satisfied with nothing else. Let us show Jesus to the people and they will come. The Master spoke truly when he said: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." He is the world's mightiest magnet.

AN ADDITIONAL WORD.

Last week bills were sent to all preachers who are in arrears with the Advocate, and attention was called to the matter editorially; but up to the present only three responses have been received to the more than 150 letters that we mailed. We desire to state again that the extremely cold and wet weather has materially interfered with our receipts, though there has been no reduction at all in our current expenses. We trust that those who are behind with their subscriptions will at once remit what they are due. This is a serious matter. Indeed, it involves to no small extent the future of the Advocate. May we not hope for a hundred responses to this urgent call within the next week? Please do not delay, brethren.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The district stewards of the New Orleans District met with Dr. Henry last Monday night.

Rev. J. W. Booth, of Algiers Church, New Orleans, has our thanks for a list of renewals from his congregation.

See the important notices on page fourteen of this issue. Some of them may be of vital concern to the work in your charge.

If you like the Advocate, tell your Methodist neighbor about it. We need the assistance of every friend in extending its circulation.

Rev. F. M. Williams, one of the honored veterans of the Mississippi Conference, is reported to be critically ill at his home at Waynesboro, Miss.

Bishop Bratton, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, confirmed a class of seven at Pass Christian, Miss., and sixteen at Biloxi, Miss., last Sunday.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, is visiting relatives in the city. Though 78 years old, he is reported to be still vigorous, both mentally and physically.

The ladies of McDonoghville recently cleared $142 by giving a benefit entertainment. The McDonoghville church now has a nice piano as a result of their enterprise.

Among those who have recently done appreciated work for the Conference organ, is Rev. F. M. Freeman, of Bunkie, La. Brother Freeman's ministry is being graciously blessed in his present charge.

Rev. J. Loyd Decell, of Osyka, Miss., writes as follows: "Any person who gave me a subscription to the Missionary Voice at Meridian, and has not yet received a copy of it will please notify me. I hold a receipt for every subscription paid."

Rev. H. R. Singleton delivered a humorous lecture at Felicity Church, New Orleans, last Monday night to an audience that filled the Sunday school room to the limit of its seating capacity. Brother Singleton has unusual gifts as an entertainer.

Rev. M. C. Holt superintends his own Sunday school at Jeanerette, teaches the adult Bible class, and then conducts the morning preaching services. He is beginning his fourth year on the Jeanerette charge, and is highly esteemed by his people.

Rev. J. F. Foster, of De Ridder, spent last week in New Orleans attending the Sunday school meeting. While here he was kept busy between the sessions of the Sunday school conferences and the Grand Lodge of Masons, but found time to be sociable.

Rev. M. L. Burton is continuing his campaign for the Advocate among his people at Gulfport, Miss., with fine results. He believes that every Methodist home ought to have in it a church paper—and so do all other wide-awake and progressive pastors.

We acknowledge the reception of six subscribers from Kosciusko, Miss., sent by the popular pastor, Rev. V. C. Curtis, who states that more will follow. Brother Curtis serves one of the most desirable charges in the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, our popular pastor at West Point, Miss., has brought us under obligations to him for an additional list of subscribers. Brother Lewis, as he always does, is looking well after the interests of the Church in his charge. He serves a choice people.

In the obituary of Mrs. Mary Hays, recently published in the Advocate, the initials of her bereaved husband were printed "G. M.," when they should have been N. M. Brother T. C. Wier, who wrote the obituary, very kindly called our attention to this error.

Rev. John Sholars has keen literary tastes and has recently made some valuable additions to his library. He is doing a splendid work at Patterson, La., and is ably assisted by his wife, who superintends an excellent Junior Epworth League of forty members.

The ladies of Main Street Church of Hattiesburg, Miss., are planning to place an instantaneous gas heater in the parsonage in order to supply hot water. It is evident that the Main Street congregation is looking well after the comfort of the pastor's family.

Rev. J. F. Denson, of Silver Creek, Miss., continues to be active in the great work of the Master. He is seventy-six years old and is somewhat feeble, but is strong in the faith and feeds on the Word and on Christian literature. He is a veteran reader of the Advocate.

Rev. J. F. Campbell, of Fannin, Miss., sent in a fine list of subscribers to the Conference organ this week, and promises to continue the good work. His charge covers a large strip of country and includes the territory of six postoffices, but he has the whole field in hand.

In forwarding a list of subscribers from Opelousas, La., Rev. I. T. Reames adds: "A cordial reception has been given us since our re-appointment to this charge, and we are praying for a larger measure of success than we had last year. We are among a kind people—some of the very best."

The St. Francisville (La.) Charge is prospering under the efficient ministry of Rev. S. L. Riggs. The church and parsonage have been repaired and treated to a fresh coat of paint. This is Brother Riggs' fourth year on the St. Francisville work, and the "little city on the hill" is not unmindful of his needs.

Rev. I. L. Peebles, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists, is now living in Meridian and the members of his family have placed their membership in East End Church. The Meridian Methodists have given Brother Peebles a pound- ing, and he feels that "the lines have fallen to him in pleasant places."

Plans are on foot to organize a New Orleans Sunday School Union, and a committee has been appointed with that end in view. Dr. Henry hopes to bring all the Sunday schools closer together, that more efficient work may be done, and that new schools may have the backing of all the schools rather than just one.

"Our assessment for missions is nearly four dollars per capita, and it will be paid." The foregoing quotation from a communication from Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of Moss Point, Miss., manifests the right attitude towards the Conference claims. This is not only the time to resolve to get the collections in full, but the time to get them.

Rev. R. O. Brown, our efficient pastor at Holly

Springs, Miss., writes: "I have had a kind reception here and the outlook is hopeful. Indeed, I have never had anywhere a more cordial welcome, or a brighter prospect. Our new presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Tucker, takes hold intelligently, and is pleasing both the pastors and people."

The corner-stone of a Presbyterian Church was laid at Harvey, La., last Sunday afternoon, with Dr. J. C. Barr, of New Orleans, acting as the master of ceremonies. The Sunday school out of which this church has developed was started about two years ago by the Lafayette Presbyterian Church of this city, of which Dr. Barr is the pastor.

The Methodist women of New Orleans are banded together in mission work through their societies, and meet monthly, thus becoming acquainted with each other. At their meeting next Monday the New Orleans pastors will attempt to devise some means to bring the men closer together, in order that they, too, may know each other better.

Rev. J. T. Abney, of North Gulfport, is ministering to points near by on the G. and S. I. railroad, and his work has great promise for the year. Rev. Paul Daniels has his work (Hansboro, Miss. City and Oak St., Biloxi) well in hand. He finds plenty for a young man to do. His work has promise of large development, and he is measuring up to the opportunity.

For the past forty-five days the Sailor's Rest at Gulfport has had 629 men attending gospel services, and 418 attending weekly concerts and socials. It gave Christmas dinner to 125, made 79 visits to ships; distributed 350 magazines; more than 1000 books and tracts; furnished free beds to 261, and found employment for 38. It has been a season of strenuous work, and of gracious results.

The semi-centennial sermon, preached by Dr. C. W. Carter, at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference and which that body arranged to have published in pamphlet form, has just been issued by the press. Viewed from any standpoint, it is a notable utterance, and a copy of it ought to be in every Methodist home in Louisiana. It contains much valuable historical information, not elsewhere obtainable.

Our capable pastors at Vicksburg, Miss., Rev. C. W. Crisler and Rev. W. H. Saunders, have already arranged for their revival meetings. Brother Crisler will have Rev. Charles Lane, of Macon, Ga., with him in April, and Brother Saunders will have with him, probably the last of this month, Rev. W. B. Hogg, of Madison, Miss. These brethren are wise in forming plans for their evangelistic services early in the year.

Dr. S. A. Steel, the eloquent president of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, has recently delighted the people of Starkville, Miss., with a visit. Dr. Steel has some spare time during the months of March and April when he could help in revival work. Pastors desiring assistance would do well to write him at once at Jackson, Tenn. This gifted ex-Mississippian knows how to preach the Word in a way to reach the conscience and stir the heart.

Rev. C. J. Stapp, our pastor at New Augusta, Miss., has our hearty thanks for a list of names recently sent in, to be placed on our subscription files. He adds: "The people here have received us most kindly. They have been feeding us on backbones, spareribs, and sausage, and I have gained several pounds in weight since I came among them." We are pleased to know that Providence has been so kind to our brother, and that he finds his work so pleasant.

The following, taken from the Green County (Miss.) Herald, speaks well for Brother Alsworth: "Rev. W. H. Alsworth, the new Southern Methodist pastor, preached his first sermon in Leakesville, Sunday night, using the dramatic subject of 'Abraham's Call to Sacrifice Isaac,' and acquitted himself well. He has a free flow of language and thought and manifests a degree of that Irish oratory which should be his by inheritance, since he has a good deal of Irish in his blood."

The pastors of the New Orleans Methodist churches have secured the Dreamland Theater, on St. Charles Street, and will hold noon services every week-day during Lent. The services will begin promptly at 12 m., and last just 30 minutes. The different pastors will speak in turn, and the themes for each day are to be evangelistic. It is the purpose of the preachers to take advantage of this time to hold up Christ to the men, rather than to add any particular significance to the season of Lent.

Rev. O. P. Armour has the following good things to say of the Sidon Charge (North Mississippi): "Everything moves on nicely here. We have three 'evergreen' Sunday schools, one Epworth League, and three ladies' societies—all doing well. The attendance on preaching is good; thirteen members have been received since Conference, and the pastor's salary has been increased. The people are religious and loyal, and the pastor is busy and happy. Every official takes the Advocate, and our charge should be on the "Honor Roll."

Read what Dr. George S. Sexton has to say in this issue of the Advocate concerning the movement to build a representative Southern Methodist Church in Washington City. This is a needed and timely enterprise, and we are pleased to know that the outlook for its speedy accomplishment is so bright. Let our laymen who have given nothing to this worthy cause send to Dr. W. F. McMurtry, Louisville, Ky., a check to be applied to its promotion. Drs. Sexton and McMurtry and Bishop Candier deserve great credit for the able and energetic manner in which they have carried forward this important project.

Under the capable administration of Rev. H. R. Singleton, the work at Parker Memorial Church, this city, is going constantly forward. The congregations are large and attentive, and the various societies are taking on increased life and activity. Water-works and electric lights have recently been placed in the parsonage, and a movement is under way to procure a handsome pipe organ for the church. On last Sunday morning, Brother Singleton preached a searching sermon on "Esau's Birthright," and at the evening hour an address was delivered by Mr. H. J. Heinz, the well known Pittsburg capitalist and millionaire.

In a letter written from Havana, Cuba, on January 25 to his warm personal friend, Dr. I. W. Cooper of Whitworth College, Bishop Candier said: "I wish you had been here to-day. We laid the corner-stone of Candier College, and it was a great occasion. Nothing like it was ever seen before in Cuba. Public addresses were made by a Senator, a member of the House of Representatives, the treasurer of the Island, and myself. The building will be completed in August and dedicated in September." President Cooper accompanied Bishop Candier on his official visit to Cuba about a year ago, and is much interested in the work of our Church in that ripe and fast-developing field.

In a brotherly note, received a few days since, Dr. W. C. Lovett, the brilliant editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, among other things, says: "Georgia Methodists are on a pretty hot trail after a big missionary collection. I do not know whether we will achieve what we set out to accomplish in the way of raising money this year; but I think we will make an advance over past years, unless there should come a calamity to our farming and business interests." We do not doubt that the Georgians will go forward. They are a great folk, and among their best possessions is the Wesleyan Advocate, which is second to no paper in Southern Methodism.

Elsewhere in this issue appears a communication from Rev. N. B. Harmon, secretary of the Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference, calling attention to the fact that, by virtue of Conference action, the first Sunday in March has been named as "Veterans' Day" when every pastor concerned is expected to take a collection for the worn-out preachers and the widows and orphan of deceased preachers. Read his stirring appeal. Few Conferences have made so good a record in caring for this deserving class as has the Mississippi Conference, and the brethren should see that no backward step is now taken. We trust that the day will be observed in every charge, and that the results will be gratifying.

From Byhalia, Miss., under date of the 9th inst., our esteemed friend, Rev. R. M. Davis, writes as follows: "I am still in good health, and pass the time in reading. But I do not delve as I used to do—not because I do not relish such mental exercise, but because it now proves a bit too hard for me. Yet I am able still to think consecutively, and often fall asleep at night, revolving in my mind the great questions over which I used to ponder in my better days. I amuse myself reading the Congressional Record, and watching the doubling and twisting of the best that they have to give in the way of discussion. We are in the time of big things and little men." We concur in the view expressed by this honored veteran, whose thought power has long commanded the admiration of all who know him. One of Webster's or Calhoun's speeches in Congress in this day would produce a veritable sensation.

SARAH M. POWERS (nee Herring) was born March 29, 1850, in Carroll County, Miss. After a lingering illness of several months, she departed this life at her home in Sidon, Miss., January 7, 1912. Sister Powers professed faith in Christ at the age of 16 years and joined the M. E. Church, South, and, ever since, has lived as a consistent member. She told the writer, a few days before her death, that her hope was strong and she did not dread to go. All her suffering was borne with Christian fortitude. When we laid her remains to rest in the beautiful cemetery here at Sidon, we said good-bye, hoping to meet her again on the judgment day. May her sorrowing husband, four daughters and son strive to meet her where sad parting comes no more. Our heartfelt sympathy goes out to mourning friends and relatives. Her pastor, O. V. ARMOUR.

Notice of the death of SOPHIA, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Harmon, of Thomastown, Miss., has not appeared in our Advocate, so I want to chronicle her passing in its columns. Her spirit went back to its Creator, on the night of January 12, 1912, and "We wept that one so lovely, should have a life so brief." No more loyal little Methodist ever lived, although she was with us only five short years. She was busy in her Master's service. It was an inspiration and a rebuke to older ones to watch her joining so enthusiastically in the song and other church services, manifesting more interest in the Lord's work than many older people. She will be sadly missed at church, school and home, and we, who were in touch with her bright, happy, useful life, will not soon forget its charm, but will treasure in our memory its beautiful influence. Let us think of her now as singing the songs she loved with the angelic choir around the great white throne. There she is, ready to meet her loved ones. May it be that "a little child shall lead them!" LORA S. LACEY.

Mrs. MARY EVA JOHNSON, the wife of Clarence L. Johnson, died in St. Louis, Mo., October 9, 1911, after about four hours' illness. This sudden death was an awful stroke to Brother Johnson, as he had just left her for a trip to Jackson, Miss. He was intercepted by a telegram at Courtland, Miss., announcing the death of his wife. Courtland was the place where they lived in their young married life, and where the writer of these lines first knew them. Sister Johnson was the daughter of J. T. and Julia Oliver. She was born at Eureka, in Panola County, Miss., August 26, 1866. She professed faith in Christ and joined the Church during young womanhood. She was married to Clarence L. Johnson December 26, 1890. She was a true Christian, a gracious mother and a devoted wife. It was a joy and a benediction to be in their home. She leaves to mourn their loss, her father, husband and three bright, good boys, and many relatives. May the grace of our Heavenly Father sustain and comfort the grief-stricken husband and precious boys, also the dear old father, and finally may all be gathered together in our Father's home on high.

Mrs. IDA WHITTEN (nee Watson) was born in Yalabusha County, Miss., March 15, 1865, and died at her home near Chapeltown in Panola County, Miss., January 31, 1912. She was married to J. W. Whitten, May 2, 1890. To them were born six children, four of whom survive her. She joined the Methodist Church early in life and lived a consistent member of the same to the day of her death. She was a useful woman in her neighborhood, especially in times of sickness or distress. She sacrificed her life for those she loved. Truly, it can be said of her that she was a good neighbor, a kind friend, a dutiful and affectionate wife, a tender and indulgent mother. She was a woman of great energy, of fine judgment, and good management. Her husband had practically been an invalid for a year or more and, besides ministering to his sufferings and discharging faithfully her many other household and family duties, she supervised the outside duties of the farm with great credit. She was cheerful and hopeful and had wonderful fortitude and endurance. Her last act was one of loving service. While she was ministering to her sick husband she went too near the fire and her dress became ignited and she was burned so badly that she died a few hours afterwards. Even after she was burned she seemed to forget her own sufferings in her anxiety for her companion. She said to him: "Do not censure yourself for this, it is my own carelessness and not your fault." May God sustain her sorrowing ones. Especially her bereaved and afflicted companion. May he be enabled by God's Spirit to say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Sympathetically yours, T. H. PORTER.

MARY G. HOBSON was born at Cumberland Court House, Va., May 22, 1833. She was left an orphan in infancy and fell to the care of Mr. Charles Fitzgerald, of Nottaway, Va., who became her guardian and looked after her education. Mr. Fitzgerald came west and settled near Memphis, Tenn. There she married Mr. B. F. Fitzgerald, April 10, 1850. The young couple moved to Panola County, Miss., and located a few miles west of Sardis. Mr. Fitzgerald gave his life for the cause of the South, dying of wounds received at the battle of Selma, Ala. Sister Fitzgerald was left with seven young children to struggle in common with their neighbors after the close of the war. They were reared well, and all are living except the oldest and the youngest. On April 12, 1871, Mrs. Fitzgerald was married to Mr. T. J. Freeman, of Panola County. Of this union two sons were born, both living, and with their father, mourn the going of the loving wife and mother, who left them November 16, 1911. Sister Freeman professed religion and joined the Church soon after her first marriage. I knew her as "Sister Fitzgerald" in 1862, and later visited her home where I was always welcome. She was a lovely woman, beautiful in form and face, graceful in manners, lively and entertaining, always in a happy frame of mind. She was a good neighbor, and loved God and the Church. After a lapse of forty-eight years, I met her again—in the same old home, but she was in age and feebleness, suffering with a slow and wasting disease, awaiting her release. There was the same sparkle of the black eyes, the same spirit, chastened and refined, and looking forward. She rests in peace. May we meet her again!

Her old friend,
JNO. W. BOSWELL.

How and Why Was Jesus Baptized?

Millions of people will be asked this question on Feb. 25th. Unfortunately our S. S. literature is not clear on these points. Every teacher should read Mahaffey's book on baptism. It makes these and scores of other matters plain as daylight. Sent, post-paid, for 16c a copy; $1 a doz. Mahaffey Book Co., Box D, Clinton, S. C.

Tidings From the Field

Wilson, La.

While working in my garden last week, I heard my little children cry out, "They are pounding papa again!" "they are pounding papa again!" The good things continued to come in until late in the afternoon when, on examination, we found that we were the lucky recipients of more than $30 worth at the hands of the good people of Wilson. The people of Wilson are a generous-hearted people. May God's richest blessing rest upon them for their kindness!—F. N. Sweeney, P. C.

Sidon, Miss.

I am sure you, as well as your readers, will be glad to know our church here at Sidon is on the upgrade. Brother Armour, who was sent here at the last Conference, has made a fine beginning. He has made friends with about every one in our village. Our congregations at preaching are better and are growing. Our mid-week prayer meeting is much better attended, and the Sabbath school is improving. At the prayer meeting service, we study the Sabbath school lesson for the ensuing Sunday. We have an informal service. Any one who feels inclined, may ask questions or make suggestions, as he likes. I believe we are going to have a prosperous year. I feel that our good Bishop was led by the Lord in sending Brother Armour to us this year.—W. D. Saunders.

February 8, 1912.

Jonestown, Miss.

Our first quarterly conference met at Jonestown, February 3 and 4, with our presiding elder, W. W. Woollard, in the chair. It has been a precedent heretofore not to have services on Saturday; but to get away from the custom or habit into which some of our people have fallen, we decided to try the old way of having preaching on that day. We did not have a very large crowd, but those who did attend went home saying, "I am glad that I went to the house of the Lord today." Brother Woollard gave us a very plain, practical sermon on the parable of the ten virgins, who went forth to meet the bridegroom. Our Sunday services were interfered with by the severe cold, but nevertheless, we had enough to hear and appreciate a good strong sermon from the text, "Never man spake as this man." We are moving on as best we can amid the boll weevil and many other evils even more hurtful to our community and especially to our Church.—J. H. Coleman, P. C.

Pollock, La.

At our last Conference, when the Bishop read the appointments, I was assigned to the Pollock charge. Not many days elapsed until I was on my work. On arriving, notwithstanding the weather was very bad and things seemed quite difficult, the good ladies came to our rescue, and with the assistance of others, we were soon hopefully situated. A kindly reception has been given us all the way through. It has been my pleasure to visit many homes since moving here, and getting about among the people, I find them to be kind, liberal, and ready, many of them, to do the Master's will. With reference to our Sunday school at this place, I will say that it is under the management of Brother W. A. Brown, who is a man of fine ability, and also a devoted Christian. He has things well in hand. Rev. C. B. Carter has been with us and held our first quarterly conference. He preached for us twice, and everybody present seemed to enjoy the services very much. I have heard it stated since his presence with us, that we have a fine presiding elder, and in this I heartily concur. There is one more thing I wish to mention, and that is, my intention to place in every Methodist home our church paper. So you may look for a list in the near future.—C. B. Powell, P. C.

TABERNACLE BIBLE CONFERENCE.

The Fourteenth Annual Tabernacle Bible Conference will convene at the Baptist Tabernacle, Atlanta, Ga., March 1st, and continue to March 10th. The conference promises to be the largest in attendance in its history. Christian workers and Bible students from all parts of the country will be in attendance. This conference is interdenominational in character, over two thousand preachers alone attending last year. A greater attendance is expected this year in view of the fact that the conference will be held in the new church recently dedicated, costing over $200,000, the seating capacity of which is five thousand. The speakers of the conference will be Dr. Chas. Inwood, of London, the specially appointed representative of Keswick; Dr. Camden M. Cobern, of Alleghany College, Meadville, Pa.; Dr. J. H. Jowett, pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City; Dr. Howard A. Johnson, of Stamford, Conn.; Dr. W. W. Bustard, of Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio; Dr. Len G. Broughton, Atlanta; Mrs. Lamareaux, of Chicago.

The music of the conference will surpass any former effort. Prof. and Mrs. A. C. Boatman; Prof. Chester E. Harris, of Ohio; Prof. and Mrs. Carl Fisher, of Grand Rapids, will act as soloists and directors of the music, while the choir of a hundred voices will be supported by the handsome $20,000 pipe organ, said to be the third largest in any Protestant Church in the world. Rev. J. W. Ham, assistant pastor, may be addressed for further information.

At every moment of our lives we should be trying to find out, not in what we differ from other people, but in what we agree with them.—Ruskin.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Since Rev. W. E. Thomas has had charge of the Second Church, New Orleans, twenty-eight new scholars have been added to the Sunday school and a class of seven Italians has been organized with a promising outlook. These results are mostly the outcome of faithful pastoral visiting. An adult woman's class has also been organized.

The Young Men's Bible class of the Louisiana Avenue Church in New Orleans, organized itself on Sunday, January 28, into a regular Wesley Adult class with Mr. M. F. Petty, president; Mr. Blaney Thompson, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. L. J. Schnelder, chairman of the membership committee. The organization will be completed at a subsequent meeting.

The writer was privileged to attend an impressive communion service at Louisiana Avenue Church in New Orleans, Feb. 4, where more children, and boys especially, communed than we ever took note of at one time before. Too many of our pastors and adult church members neglect to "feed these lambs" on the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." May the work of brother Snelling and his co-workers in thus training these children be imitated by many others.

The Episcopal Church has a mission near Jefferson Davis Park in New Orleans that has at least developed one Christian worker who was inactive. This brother is now a lay-reader and often leads, or assists the ministers in leading the regular services of the church. If some of "my people perish for lack of knowledge," some also perish because of uselessness, and to call out their talents and to set them to work in the church is the task of a worthy leader. The mission Sunday school is a blessing to the church that develops it, as well as to the people to whom it ministers.

Rev. C. C. Selecman, in enterprising his forward move at the Mary Werlein Mission, has planned a men's meeting for each Saturday night at which he serves a free lunch. At his first meeting of this kind February 3, he had quite a crowd of down-and-out men who gave reverent attention to the gospel message by Rev. J. W. Moore, and some knelt for prayer. No less a missionary than the Master himself feed the hungry multitude, and for his followers to do it for his sake is entirely proper, and we commend this move by the superintendent of our New Orleans mission work.

The Baptist Church has built a $10,000 Sunday school building near Jefferson Davis Park in New Orleans that is superior to anything of the kind the writer has seen. The plans and money came from the Baptist Sunday School and Mission Boards, and the structure is worthy of study by any church planning a new building. Formerly our churches were built for preaching places exclusively, but since there is a revival of teaching that demands suitable places to teach, church architecture must be changed accordingly. Some of our mistakes here are grievous. Building committees should not dare spend the Lord's money without first counselling with the best church architects, and suiting the building to the modern needs of preaching, teaching, and training—even considering the children's claims upon the evangelizing and nurturing functions of the Church.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Mr. R. P. Dunn, superintendent of First Church Sunday school, of Greenville, has 22 teachers and 201 pupils enrolled in his busy school. He is doing a great work.

Mr. A. J. Wilson, of Kilmichael, who has a fine school of 60 pupils and 5 punctual teachers, entertained the County Sunday school convention on January 30, and will entertain the district conference in April.

Brother Gladney, treasurer of the Sunday School Board, is quite well again, and anticipates a splendid year's work in his new pastorate. He and his fine superintendent, Mr. J. S. Carlton, are planning special Sunday school activity in their district.

Some appalling temperance statistics may add emphasis to the February lesson on that great subject. 300 boys every single day go to ruin and 100,000 every year because of this great curse. We have had four million drunkards in the United States in the last 40 years.

On a certain door in a certain city, the passer-by reads in luminous letters, "Come in without knocking and remain in that attitude;" and it should be the hand-wrought motto written over many a door behind whose screening comfort busy Sunday school workers have place.

Superintendent M. G. Clarke, of Verona, has a good school, but is planning graded lessons for his primary department and a complete reorganization of his entire school. Mrs. Tom Clarke has a fine adult class; Miss Sallie Kilpatrick a mixed class of boys and girls, and Mrs. Tally a most interesting primary department.

Hon. G. L. Jones and Mr. J. G. Houston, of New Albany, have a splendid and growing school with an enrollment of 229 members; 12 officers and teachers, 3 organized classes and 45 little folks. Mr. Houston writes, "1911 was the best Sunday school year in our history, and 1912 bids fair to be better."

The value of a vision is not in the vision itself, but what is done when the vision is past. At great conventions and among Sunday school enthusiasts, we have glorious visions. At Conference and on New Year's Day we make great resolutions, but what bodily blessings have these wrought? It takes good, hard, honest work to make a vision real.

A Greek, who had belonged to a Wesley Adult Class for several months and who cannot attend regularly, sent in his attendance card and a dollar bill last Sunday to assist in charity work. When he first entered the class he thought he must bring a candle and burn incense, but very speedily learned that the only incense ever burned there was that of loving kindly deeds.

From an exchange we get this Sunday school division, which brings back vivid memories to most of us of a certain red-letter day in our lives, when Latin ceased to be detached sentences and became a real book:

Sunday school, like Gaul, is divided into three parts: Those who know how to do it; those who do it; and those who criticize the other two. To which class do you belong?

OLD LADY'S SAGE ADVICE.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Mrs. Mamie Tower of 102 W. Main Street, this city, says: "If you had seen me, before I began to take Cardui, you would not think I was the same person. Six doctors failed to do me good, and my friends thought I would die. I could hardly get out of bed or walk a step. At last an old lady advised me to take Cardui, and now I can go most anywhere." All ailing women need Cardui, as a gentle, refreshing tonic, especially adapted to their peculiar ailments. It is a reliable, vegetable remedy, successfully used for over 50 years. You ought to try it.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

MRS. POWELL ALMOST DEAD.

Dry Ridge, Ky.—"I could hardly walk across the room," says Mrs. Lydia Powell, of Dry Ridge, "before I tried Cardui. I was so poorly, I was almost dead. Now, I can walk four miles and do my work with much more ease. I praise Cardui for my wonderful cure." Cardui is successful in benefiting sick women, because it is composed of ingredients, that act specifically on the womanly constitution, relieving headache, backache, irregularity, misery and distress. Only a good medicine could show such continual increase in popularity as Cardui has, for the past 50 years. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic.

FROM A LONG-TIME READER.

Dear Brother Meek: I have just handed Brother L. L. Roberts, our pastor, my 39th renewal to the Christian Advocate, and that turned my thoughts backwards to my childhood days. One of my earliest recollections, when a boy of five years of age, was a desire on my part to be able to read the Advocate. At seven years old, I could read it, and have been a constant reader of its pages for fifty-five years, except a short time during the Civil War when it failed to reach my father's home at Cooper's Well, in Hinds County, Miss. During all of these years, while in the hands of such editors as Parker, Carter, Galloway, Black, Boswell, and others, it was never more neatly dressed, nor spread a richer feast for the intellect and the soul than now. Praying God's richest blessings on you in your labors, I remain, your brother,

W. E. HARRIS.

Flora, Miss., Feb. 8.

CLUB MEMBERS PLEASED.

The following letter from Mrs. Jeff Dobbs of Atlanta, is a fair sample of the many commendatory letters that are being received by Ludden & Bates relative to the Advocate Piano Club. Mrs. Dobbs, a musician of ability, writes: "I am exceedingly well pleased with the club piano recently purchased from you, and being a musician, believe I am in position to judge as to the character of this instrument. I wish to state that I originally selected a $550 piano which it was my purpose to purchase, but before closing the trade, I happened to try a Ludden & Bates Club Piano which pleased me more than the $550 piano referred to. Consequently I saw no use to invest so large an amount when I could purchase one even more satisfactory at $297, and I selected the Ludden & Bates Club, and feel to-day that I have as good piano as I would have had if I had purchased the other one mentioned."

For club catalogue and full particulars address Ludden & Bates, Advocate Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

LOUISIANA EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN.

Slate for Rev. A. W. Turner, Conference evangelist:

Homer—March 24, to April 7.
Gibbsland—April 7, to April 14.
Mer Rouge—April 19, to April 29.

The following pastors have agreed to hold a ten days' meeting wherever the evangelistic committee may designate, and to give all financial return therefrom, over and above expenses, to the evangelistic fund:

W. W. Drake, Baton Rouge, La.
C. V. Breithaupt, Houma, La.
R. H. Bamburg, Vernon, La.
Wm. H. Coleman, Ruston, La.

Let any pastor desiring the assistance of Brother Turner, or any one of the above, write the chairman of the evangelistic committee, stating date desired.

Let any pastor who will join this evangelistic movement agreeing to give ten days to the work, also write the said chairman. Fraternally yours,

WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The annual meeting of the Board of Education will be held, beginning April 2nd, 9 a.m., in the rooms of the Board, at the Methodist Publishing House, in Nashville, Tenn.

STONEWALL ANDERSON,
Secretary.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

To the Presiding Elders and Preachers of the Mississippi Conference:

The executive committee of the Mississippi Conference Board of Church Extension will be held in Jackson, March 13, 1912. All applications to the General Board of Church Extension for donations or loans, to churches or parsonages, must be approved by this committee. All applications must have the endorsement of the quarterly conference, and must be signed by the presiding elder, preacher in charge, and by the trustees (trustees must sign in person.) See that the question in blank application concerning the deeds to property is rightly answered.

If you would avoid trouble as to your application, give full and complete answers to every question. The Board is anxious to serve you, but cannot do so on insufficient information. Blank applications for aid to churches or parsonages, also, blank deeds, may be had by writing the secretary of the Board.

All applications to the General Board should be in the hands of the secretary by March 10. No applications reaching the General Board after the first of April will be considered.

W. H. HUNTLEY, President.

W. J. DAWSON, Secretary.

Morton, Miss.

NOTICE.

The executive committee of the Board of Church Extension of the North Mississippi Conference will meet at Winona, March 12, at 1 o'clock in the Methodist Church. Let those who wish to make application to the Parent Board for gifts or loans send to Rev. V. C. Curtis, at Kosciusko, Miss., and get the blanks and have them back in his hands by the meeting at Winona.

The Parent Board will meet at Dallas, Texas, May 2, 1912. It is important that the applications be in the hands of Brother Curtis for the session at Winona, March 12, 1912.

W. S. LAGRONE,

AN EXPLANATION.

It is due two loyal charges of the North Mississippi Conference and two pastors that an explanation be made concerning them through the Advocate. The Minutes of the recent Conference do not show anything paid by either Minter City or Inverness for any purpose at all during the past year. As it appears in the Minutes grave injustice is done both of the above charges. Minter City paid the assessment for preacher in charge, $1000, and for the presiding elder, $150 (in full), and paid $100 on the Conference collections. The report did not get to the secretary in time to go into the Minutes. I want the Conference to know that Minter City did not repudiate the Church, as the Minutes unintentionally would indicate. All there is to it, is that the pastor was a little too late in getting his report in. Dr. H. T. Gaines, now in the Florida Conference, and stationed at Kissimmee, did fine work. Several were received into the church during the year and the pastor looked carefully after the various interests committed to his hands. The Sunday school did as well or better than for some years, observing Children's Day with good success.

At Inverness the same thing happened. Salaries were paid almost, if not quite, in full and $83 was paid on the collections. Brother McWhorter, who served this charge last year, transferred to Texas in November, and left for his new home before the meeting of our Conference. He sent his reports to me, but they were lost. Again he mailed me reports and checks to pay off his assessments and again they were lost. To-day I am in receipt of a registered letter containing the $83 for the collections and $10 for Children's Day Fund. But the Minutes are out, and there the blanks shall stand for all time to come to admonish all who come that way to beware of the statistical secretary. But it is due Brother McWhorter and due the Inverness charge that I make this statement. That is one of the choicest little charges in our Conference. Many royal folks live down there. God bless them! This charge paid $52 to the Orphans' Home during the fourth quarter. They completed a nice parsonage worth $1200, and put some repairs on their churches.

I regret very much that these reports did not get in the Minutes, but the above explanation ought to satisfy all reasonable people. Brother McWhorter is now stationed at Jourdon, Texas, a flourishing town in the San Antonio District.

THE DOCTOR'S "SHEET ANCHOR."

"Sheet Anchor" is an expression frequently used by physicians, and means the remedy on which they place the main dependence in treating a disease. Dr. Jas. R. Phelps, of Dorchester, Mass. writes: "Please send me a new supply of Gray's Ointment. It is my sheet anchor in cases of carbuncle, unhealthy granulation, and blood poison. You may use this endorsement in any way you see fit for the good of humanity. I have the courage of my convictions and am not ashamed to say that I use Gray's Ointment in my practice."

Gray's Ointment is the "sheet anchor" of thousands of the best physicians in the treatment of boils, carbuncles, old sores, festering wounds in man and beast. A free sample by mail or 25c at your druggist's. Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 807 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Immediate Effect of Great Kidney Remedy is Soon Realized.

According to my experience I do not consider there is anything to equal Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root for kidney affection. Twice it relieved me when I was completely helpless.

The last time I was traveling in Texas when my kidneys became affected, and for ten days I suffered excruciating pain, accompanied with severe chills. Several years previous, having been relieved of a similar attack, I naturally sought relief as before, from Swamp-Root.

After using four of the large size bottles, I was completely restored and went on my way rejoicing and praising Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. This was three years ago, and I have had no indication of the return of the affliction. Yours very truly,

IN MEMORY OF J. T. CARLEY.

Since it pleased God on January 7, 1912, to take by death from our midst Brother J. T. Carley, we desire through this medium to give public expression of our appreciation of his many noble qualities; therefore, be it resolved, by the Purvis (Miss.) quarterly conference:

First—That while we are made sad by his absence from among us, we bow in humble submission to the will of him who worketh all things for good to them that love and serve God, realizing that what seemeth to be our loss is far more than counteracted by his great gain.

Second—That in the death of Brother Carley the entire Purvis charge, and especially the church at Purvis, has lost one of its most consistent and devoted members, the Sabbath school, an active and zealous worker, the Bible class, a teacher whose knowledge of the Scriptures and whose long experience as a teacher, eminently fitted him for that work, and the town and country, one of its loyal and best citizens.

Third—That to his son, C. W. Carley and family and other surviving relatives, we extend our heartfelt sympathy in this sore bereavement, and point them to the Lamb of God for comfort in their sad affliction.

Signed: James Hand, A. J. Cooper, W. A. Dearman, committee.

APOPLEXY.

The word generally means a sudden paralysis caused by the rupture of a blood-vessel in the brain; it is popularly called a "stroke." It is a result of a softening of the arteries that often follows primary hardening, or arteriosclerosis. The disease is a common accompaniment of old age, so common indeed that it is regarded by many as the one characteristic senile change.

It is not confined to old age, however, for many comparatively young men who have gone too fast and too far in the pursuit of wealth, or who have met with reverses and have worried unduly over them, have hardened arteries, and are killed or disabled by apoplexy. In their hardened blood-vessels there may be softening spots which, bulged by the hydraulic pressure of the blood, form little aneurisms. A little extra strain on the vessels, caused by some violent emotion, or the lifting of a heavy weight, or running to catch a train, may then rupture one or more of these little aneurisms, and so let the blood pour into the brain tissue.

If the blood escapes rapidly and in large amount, it causes immediate loss of consciousness and paralysis; if the blood escapes gradually and in small amount, it causes either severe headache, and tingling and numbness in one or more of the limbs, or progressive loss of power, gradual dulling of the mental faculties and ultimate unconsciousness.

Apoplexy is not always fatal; indeed, complete recovery without any paralysis sometimes occurs. The sufferers immediate fate is commonly decided in two or three days—either he dies without regaining consciousness or his mental faculties gradually return. He is then seen to be paralyzed, in either one arm or in one leg, or in one side of the face, or in all three. In less serious cases the paralysis lessens, the facial expression becomes normal and the limbs regain their power. Even when the paralysis is permanent, there is almost always more or less improvement for some weeks after the stroke.

Apoplexy can be treated only by the physician, but those who fear an attack can do much to avert it. Quiet and calm should for them be the rule of life. They should never make any severe muscular effort. They should never run for cars or climb stairs quickly. They should avoid hearty meals and the drinking of much fluid, even water, at any one time.—Youth's Companion.

If the cup that I fain would lift to my lips has poison in it, or if its sweetness is making me lose my relish for the pure and tasteless water that flows from the throne of God, there can be no truer friend than that calamity, as men call it, which strikes the cup from my hands, and shivers the glass before I have raised it to my lips. Everything is my friend that helps me towards God.—Alexander Maclaren, D.D.

"A great deal of time is wasted by those who are fond of planning and dreaming, but who neglect the thing in hand. However obscure the present place, or however simple the present duty, our obligation is to put our whole strength into that which fills here and now. To-day is ever a stepping-stone to to-morrow."—Selected

Gladstone says, "the mission of any country is to make it easy to do right and difficult to do wrong." This is also the mission of the modern Sunday school, and a great one it is, worthy of study, support and emphasis.

Take Your Time

Be Sure!

Let the days pass one by one and make up your mind slowly. Take your time in deciding, and don't pay a penny until you are sure. Every day will mean something to you, will tell its own story, but take your time. You will not be hurried or worried. We want you to take fully twenty-five days to judge it, to know for yourself, to feel its great powers as thousands have. If you want more time, take it. Take all the time you need. Be quick in sending for it, but be slow in paying for it. Wait until you are sure and then pay for it. If you are not sure it has helped you, if you do not feel health returning to your body, don't pay a penny.

Bodi-Tone

wants you to try a full-sized, one dollar box on these fair and liberal terms—pay for it when you KNOW it is the right medicine for you. We want you to have fully twenty-five days to watch its work in your body, to note its action in your system, to see how it benefits your health and entire physical condition, to see how it cures sickness and disease, to learn how Bodi-Tone tones all the body and sets it right. We mean just what we say. It is all left to your decision, and we want you to take plenty of time in deciding. We know what Bodi-Tone has done for thousands during the past three years, we know what it is doing for sick men and women every day, and we want to take every penny of the risk. Here is your chance to get the health, strength, vigor and comfort of body and mind that you need, want and ought to have, without risking one single, solitary penny.

Bodi-Tone

does just what its name means—cures disease by toning all the body, and we want you to try a box on trial and see what it will do for your body. Bodi-Tone is a small, round tablet, that is taken three times every day. Each box contains seventy-five of these tablets, enough for twenty-five days' use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so that you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it cures stubborn diseases by helping nature to tone every organ of the body. Tone is a little word, but it means a great deal, everything in health. When all the organs are doing their part, when each is acting in a perfectly natural way, when all the functions are healthy and performed with natural vigor, when the energy, strength and power of resistance to disease are all at a natural point, then the body is in proper tone. When disease has attacked any part, the tone of the entire physical body should be raised to the highest point, to make all the body help to cure. This is the power which Bodi-Tone offers you to help you get new health.

Not a Patent Medicine

Bodi-Tone is not a patent medicine, for its ingredients are not a secret. It contains Iron Phosphate, Gentian, Lithia, Chinese Rhubarb, Peruvian Bark, Nux Vomica, Oregon Grape Root, Cascara, Capsicum, Sarsaparilla and Golden Seal. Such valuable ingredients guarantee its merit and power.

When you use Bodi-Tone you know just what you are using, know it is good and safe and know you are taking the kind of medicine to provide real help for the body. It contains no narcotics or habit-forming drugs, nothing that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on killing pain with cocaine, opium, morphine, or other dangerous drugs. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body and cures its disorders with remedies Nature intended to tone and cure the body when that power was given them. Tans, Iron gives life and energy to the Blood, Sarsaparilla drives out its impurities, Phosphate and Nux Vomica create new nerve energy and force, Lithia aids in the kidneys, Gentian does invincible work for the Stomach and Digestive forces, Chinese Rhubarb and Oregon Grape Root promote vigorous Liver activity, Peruvian Bark raises the tone of the entire system, Golden Seal soothes the inflamed membrane and checks Catarrhal discharges, Cascara gives the Bowels new life in a natural way, and Capsicum makes all more valuable by bettering their quick absorption into the blood. A remarkable combination that does wonderful work for the body's health. Each of these ingredients adds a needed element from nature to the body. We claim no credit for discovering the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, each of which has its own well-deserved place in the medical books of most of the civilized world. We simply claim the credit for the successful formula which we invented, for the way in which these valuable ingredients are combined, for the proportions used, for the curative force which thousands of sick have found in Bodi-Tone. Many of its ingredients are regularly prescribed by doctors, either separately or in combinations with such drugs as each doctor may favor, for there are wide differences of opinion among the doctors of various schools. The exact combination used in Bodi-Tone is what makes Bodi-Tone cure where doctors have failed and gives Bodi-Tone the curative and restorative power that makes possible the remarkable cures experienced by Bodi-Tone users, cures which prove the difference between Bodi-Tone and common remedies. That is why we want to send you a box of Bodi-Tone on trial, as soon as you write for it, for we know you will find it different and superior.

You Need It

If you are tired of ceaseless doctor bills and wearied of continual dosing without results, you need Bodi-Tone right now. If your local doctor is doing you no real good, if you have given him a chance to do what he can and the ordinary medicinal combinations he used have failed, give this modern, scientific combination of special remedies a chance to show and prove what it can do for you. Its greatest triumphs have been among men and women with chronic ailments who had good physicians without lasting benefit, and for this reason all chronic sufferers are invited to try a box at our risk.

Bodi-Tone offers its valuable services to you right now, if you are sick, if you need medicinal help, if your body is not in right, natural and normal tone. This is what Bodi-Tone is for, to help Nature restore tone to the body, to restore health, vigor, vitality and strength.

If there is anything wrong with your Kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the Kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your Stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the Stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your Nerves, your Blood, your Liver, your Bowels or your General System, the health-making ingredients in Bodi-Tone go right to work and keep on working day after day, producing results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the Kidneys, Stomach and Blood, thereby preventing continuance of Rheumatic poison and putting new activity into muscles, nerves and joints. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any Female Ailment, for its splendid toning properties have been found of special value in such ailments.

We Risk All

Why delay another day, when a trial of this proven medicine is yours for the asking? Why keep on suffering, when by clipping the coupon, filling in your name and address and mailing it to us, you can get a twenty-five days' treatment of this great remedy which has already restored thousands to health, which thousands everywhere are talking about? It is just as easy as a stamp and you don't pay a penny unless it benefits. The powers of Bodi-Tone have been amply proven by three years of glorious cures. It has been tested by thousands, in a great variety of ailments in both sexes at all ages. Persons suffering from Rheumatism, Stomach Troubles, Kidney, Liver and Bladder Ailments, Uric Acid Diseases, Female Troubles, Bowel, Blood and Skin Affections, Dropsy, Piles, Catarrh, Anemia, Sleeplessness, LaGrippe, Pains, General Weakness and Nervous Breakdown, have tested Bodi-Tone and fully proven its remedial value in such disorders. Read the reports, send for a box and try it.

Your Own Opinion Decides!

When you use Bodi-Tone on this trial offer you take absolutely no obligations to pay one penny unless it helps. You will know if you feel better, if you are stronger, more vigorous and active, if your limbs and back do not pain you, if your stomach or kidneys do not trouble you, if your heart or liver does not bother you. You will surely know if your organs are acting better than they did before using Bodi-Tone, and if health is returning. If you are not sure, don't pay.

IVANHOE, N. C.—From a child I have been troubled with Liver and Bladder Ailments and Dyspepsia. My food disagreed with me so badly that often I could retain it but a short time. I would bloat very distressingly and my complexion would be the color of an orange. I took patent medicines and medicine prescribed by the doctors, but none did me much good. I was all run-down, and weighed only 108 pounds. I took Bodi-Tone nearly a year ago. In three days after I began taking it I could see a change for the better. I never felt better in my life. I can eat anything I want. My Stomach is all right and I weigh 147 pounds. All my aches and pains are gone. I am a well woman. MRS. W. T. LYELL.

MACOMB, Mo.—At the age of twenty-three I suffered a sun-stroke, and my health has been bad ever since. My Stomach, Liver and Bowels never seemed right. I was treated by doctors at various times and have also taken my share of patent medicines, and by the time I learned of Bodi-Tone I was practically resigned to my physical infirmities. I am a preacher, fifty years old. I have received more permanent good and renewed vitality from Bodi-Tone than I thought possible before I began its use. It has been of such benefit to me that words fail me in expressing the good I have derived. I find it has taken hold of the entire body, to the betterment of every vital part. My aged mother, who has been helpless at 81 years, has also been using it and has experienced great good from it. O. N. FINDLAY.

STEPHENSVILLE, TEX.—When I began to use Bodi-Tone I could hardly be up and do anything. I had Heart trouble and such a swimming in my head that I would almost fall. I was also badly bothered with a Kidney trouble and Rheumatism. In fact, my body just seemed wrong all over. I am forty-seven years old, and Bodi-Tone has done so much for me that I don't know how to express my thanks. It has helped my mother, too. She was nearly dead last summer, just given out and down all over. She is seventy-four years old, and has such a dreadful cough that we did not think she could last much longer. She commenced taking Bodi-Tone; it did her more good than anything she had ever had. This was nearly a year ago, and she is now in better health than she has had for years. MRS. MATTIE MCNEIL.

COUPON

Clipped from N. O. Christian Advocate

Bodi-Tone Company,
Hoyne and North Aves, Chicago

I have read your trial offer and want a dollar box of Bodi-Tone on trial. I promise to give it a fair trial and to pay for it for this box if I am benefited at the end of 25 days. If it does not help me I will not pay one penny and will owe you nothing.

Egotism is incompatible with high attainments in grace. It is bad enough in any one, but in a minister it is well-nigh inexcusable. The cure for it is a closer approach to God. The nearer we get to Him, the more self dwindles. Job said: "I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

A secular contemporary thus sums up the political situation as it relates to candidates for the presidency: "The nomination of Mr. Taft by his party may be set down as a certainty; that of Governor Woodrow Wilson as a probability, and that of Speaker Clark or Mr. Underwood as a liability." One thing that augurs well for Mr. Wilson is the fact that he has but one given name—Woodrow. This has been true of a very large number of our national chief executives.

Theosophy has two organizations in New Orleans: one for women, which has lately come into existence, and another composed of men, which is said to be about twenty years old. One of the chief tenets of this cult is that of the transmigration of souls. The women have styled their society "The Truth Seekers," which is about as incongruous a name as they could possibly have chosen. A more fitting one would have been "The Novelty Seekers." That human beings, claiming to be rational, should turn away from the luminous teachings of Christianity to embrace the outworn and discredited superstitions of heathenism, is passing strange. But there are some people who prefer any way to the right way.

A new claim has been put forward for Francis Bacon by London critics. It is that he wrote the Authorized Version of the Bible. We had thought that the admirers of the great English philosopher had reached the limit of absurdity when they ventured to proclaim him the author of the Shakesperian plays; but this latest contention is vastly more preposterous, since the origin of the St. James translation of the Scriptures is well known. But there is little telling what vagaries our modern intellectual speculators will hatch and seek to parade. A few months ago, M. Omersa, reputed to be a learned French archivist, publicly affirmed that Napoleon did not end his days on the Isle of St. Helena as the historians teach us, but that after his overthrow he ran a spectacle-maker's shop in Verona, Italy, and that he was shot trying to climb the wall of a park in Schoenbrunn on the night of Sept. 23, 1823. If these wonderful discoverers keep up their work, it is to be feared that all the beliefs of mankind will be shown to be erroneous and that all history will need to be rewritten. But we may at least have this consolation: though our ancestors were benighted blunderers, with such luminaries as these gentlemen among us, there is no need that the race should any longer grope in darkness.

THE NATION'S GREATEST PROBLEM.

We have long been convinced that the task of influencing the people of the United States to let intoxicants alone is the nation's most important and most stupendous problem. Those who think that this imperatively needed work is in a fair way to be accomplished by the triumphant march of prohibition have failed to grasp the true gravity of the situation. We believe in the suppression of the saloon, which is "evil, only evil, and that continually." But that stopping the legalized sale of intoxicants will make our citizenship a sober one is not reasonably to be expected. It would help immensely and open the way for effective work along other lines, but the Christian religion alone is adequate to the task of making a people temperate in the broadest and truest sense. In spite of the growth of prohibition, the Government statistics show that the consumption of alcoholic beverages is on the increase in the United States. Even in dry territory the quantity of liquors used is still frightfully large. Indeed, never was the call for temperance work louder and more urgent than it is at present.

Writing on this subject in a recent issue of his paper, the editor of the Christian Evangelist gave some statistics, which are well worth consideration. He said:

"In a statement recently sent out by the national Department of Commerce it appears that the United States now bears the humiliating distinction of consuming more liquors than any other civilized nation. According to this report, our consumption of intoxicants amounted to a gross and scandalous total of 2,045,300,000 gallons last year. This figure is so large that the average mind will only dimly comprehend its significance. If you will imagine a continuous stream forty feet wide and a foot deep extending from St. Louis to San Francisco, you will have a pretty fair idea of what it takes to slake our annual thirst. Or if you will construct a reservoir large enough for our 90,000,000 population to stand up in, you can turn this stream of alcoholic beverages into it and drown every man, woman and child in the United States. The grief, misery, poverty, vice, and crime which follow in the wake of this monstrous intemperance are beyond all human computation. There is a little lean consolation in the fact that, while we consume the largest amount of liquors of any civilized nation, practically all European nations surpass us in per capita consumption. Germany drinks 26.47 gallons per capita; Portugal, 27.39; Italy, 31.17; United Kingdom, 31.44; France, 39.36; Belgium, 55.2; United States, 22.11."

THE NEW MOVEMENT IN JAPAN.

Whatever may be the faults of the Oriental races, loquacity is not one of them. During the war between Russia and Japan, the Japanese kept the world in ignorance of their plans until they were wrought out. What they were aiming at or where they would strike the next blow, none could tell. The most discerning war correspondents sent out by the great daily newspapers were completely baffled. In like manner, the Japanese Government now has the world guessing as to what it means to try to do with the several religions that exist in that empire. Some of the American missionaries have sent messages home that the apparent purpose of Japan in Korea is to exterminate the Christian faith, and, as is stated in another column in this issue, a distinguished representative of the Presbyterian Board of Missions is said to have gone to Washington recently to confer with President Taft in regard to the matter.

The New York Independent of February 15, in referring to the reports reaching this country as to the present designs of the Mikado's Government, makes the following comment:

"We give too much credit to the good sense of the Japanese Home Minister to believe that it is his plan to create a new syncretistic religion for Japan, which shall combine the excellences of Christianity, Buddhism and Shintoism. The statement is that he has called a conference of the leading representatives of these three religions for such a purpose. We can well believe he may propose to give them each a place as a state religion, such as Shintoism now holds; or, more likely, seeing the loss of faith in the old religions, and feeling the importance of strengthening decayed ethical standards, he may desire to discover among the three religions what they hold in common that is binding on the conscience. This is not an unreasonable thing to do, and it may be easier now that the later sects of Buddhism have been sloughing off the old crudities and superstitions and so are approximating somewhat toward Christianity, as do the new Somajes in India and the Babists of Persia, who make much of the spiritual elements of religion and the fatherhood of God, which they learn from Christianity."

BISHOP MOUZON IN NEW ORLEANS.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon, of San Antonio, Tex., who has the Louisiana Conference in charge, arrived in the city last Friday and remained through the Sabbath. He came to confer with other leaders concerning the work in New Orleans, and was kept quite busy from the time of his arrival until his departure. On Friday evening at 8 p.m. he delivered an address to men only at the Second Methodist Church; Sunday morning he preached to a large audience at First Church—a sermon of great force and impressiveness from Ephesians iv, 7-12; at 7 p.m. he delivered a brief address to a gathering of Italians at St. Mark's Hall, and from there went to Second Church, where he preached at 8 p.m. The Bishop also attended the Preachers' Meeting Monday morning, and after listening to the reports of the several pastors, addressed the body, specially exhorting the brethren to make their preaching evangelistic and to give faithful attention to the work of pastoral visitation. Bishop Mouzon's visit and pulpit messages were greatly enjoyed by both our preachers and people. His administration of the affairs of the Louisiana Conference has been highly satisfactory, and by his counsel and presence he has done much to hearten the Methodism of New Orleans and to make it more active and aggressive. He is a favorite in these parts, and will always be given a cordial welcome and an expectant hearing when he chooses to come this way.

The lens of faith outreaches the telescope. It enables one to see beyond the orbits of revolving worlds the dwelling-place of Deity and the final home of the pure and good. Happy are they who are blessed with this vision!

Our Monthly Sermon

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE.

By Rev W. W. Holmes.

(A sermon delivered in the First Methodist Church at Monroe, La., on January 28. Text: Isaiah 6:1-8.)

Last Sunday morning, as best I could, I tried to show you the awful sin and tragedy of an empty life. I set in your midst the man who, in the parable of the talents, did not use the talent that had been committed to him, but hid it away in a napkin. He had not squandered it; he had not used it for an illegitimate purpose; he had not spent it in riotous living in a far country. He simply had not used it. You heard the master say to him: "Thou wicked, slothful and unprofitable servant." You heard the master say: "Take the talent away from him and give it to one who will use it." You heard the master say: "Take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; and there shall he weeping and gnashing of teeth."

In this good book, the Bible, human relationships are constantly mentioned and magnified to lead us to a contemplation of the Divine relationships. "As a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." "If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask for fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent? Or if he ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" "Can a woman forget her child that she should not have compassion on him? Yea, she may forget, yet will I not forget thee." "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

Fathers, would you be satisfied, would you think that your son loved you if he obeyed only in not doing the things you had forbidden, while he refused to do the thing you wanted him to do? Mothers, how would you feel, if the children in your home refused to study, refused to do the ordinary chores about the house, refused to do anything you had asked them to do, and were obedient only when you said "you must not?" Where is the bridegroom in all the world who would be satisfied with his bride if she had no higher thought nor aim than to refrain from doing the things he had forbidden? Fathers and mothers are anxious to see their children live the positive life. They want to see them doers in the world. They want to see them constantly climbing up the ladder of service and success. The woman who makes the best wife is not the one who is thinking of the things she ought not to do, but she is the wife who is thinking of the things she may do—how she may make the house more attractive; how she may prepare a better meal; how she may make the evenings more pleasant. Yes, it is love overflowing. It is love in thought; it is love in sacrifice; it is love without limit; it is love that goes all the way; it is love that gives all and does all. Isaiah was right when he said that the bridegroom rejoiceth over such a bride. It is the same kind of love, the same giving of self, of time, and all, in the Kingdom that bringeth joy to the heart of God. I believe there is enough of the divine spark in any life to kindle into a flame when it is brought near to the great heart of God. And my friends, that's what I want to do. I want to bring you with myself to the place where we can see the Lord, high and lifted up; where we can see the barrenness, the sin of our own life; where we can see the world's sin, and the fields that are white unto the harvest; yes, I want to bring you to the place where in all truthfulness and sincerity you can say: "Lord, here am I; use me."

I may be presuming too much, but I believe there is not one under the sound of my voice who would not like to serve in the kingdom of God. There are heart yearnings here that have never been expressed. The world has never known of the intense desire of your heart to be a servant of Jesus Christ. You may be looked upon as careless and indifferent. You have never taken any definite stand. You have never confessed Christ before men. Your life may be like a light under a bushel, where there is darkness all around. You want to serve, but maybe you don't know how; you want to serve, but maybe you are not willing to make the sacrifice. Many of you are serving in the Kingdom, but God knows, and you know, that you are not giving the service you ought to. Last year is gone, and so is last week. You have no power to even recall yesterday. What you do, must be done to-day and to-morrow. My subject this morning is "Preparation for Service," and I think we have the lines of preparation very clearly indicated in this Scripture text from Isaiah. We have here four or five of what I consider the absolute essentials in preparation for service, and we shall study them in the order in which they appear in the text.

A Vision of God.

Certainly, the pre-eminent essential in preparation for service in the Christian life is a vision of God. "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord." This was the beginning of Isaiah's genuine religious experience; this was the beginning of his effectiveness in service; and it is the beginning of every man's Christian experience; it is the very heart of every man's service. There can be no vital experience nor effective service without it. You must see God. Isaiah was a princely preacher, a great orator, his style and beauty of diction were unsurpassed. He was the moving spirit of the court. He was minister to the king. But his ministry was one of pure formalism. It was lifeless; it did not stir the hearts of men. He saw God, and he was never the same man any more after that.

Moses is a fugitive from justice in the land of Midian. He was reared in the Egyptian court in the midst of opulence, and associated with the royal family; but now he is content to shepherd the flocks of Jethro. To get away from his sin and the face of man he led the flock to the backside of the desert, even to Horeb, the Mountain of God. This lonely place is aflame with the Divine presence. He hears the voice of God calling him: "Moses, Moses," and he answers: "Here am I." He puts his hands over his face—he was afraid to look, yet he saw God, and he was never the same man any more.

Saul of Tarsus, the Pharisee of the Pharisees, the bitterest enemy of the followers of the Nazarene, the great persecutor of the Church of Jesus with the blood of the Christian martyr dripping from his hands, as he journeys along the Damascus road on an errand of persecution even unto death, sees God, and he is not the same man any more.

Martin Luther, bearing the heavy burden of his own guilt, trying to save himself by his own efforts, like a slave struck down by fear, trying to atone, the great persecutor of the Church of Jesus, Rome, gets a vision of God, and has borne in upon him the sublime truth, that "the just shall live by faith," and he is never the same man any more.

John Wesley in Oxford was an academic preacher. He was a moralist, a ritualist. His work was largely mechanical. We find the same true of him while he was in Georgia. He was ever emphasizing the non-essentials. He was a good organizer, but a poor vitalizer. The spiritual power was lacking; but when he returned to England, and began to make frequent visits to the Moravian camp, to those pious and spiritual folk, and became a companion of Peter Boehler, and, while in the actual study of the Word, he saw God, and he was never the same man any more.

Yes, this is the experience of every servant in the Kingdom of God. Whether their service has been small or large, it has been effective only when it has been preceded by a vision of God.

Isaiah saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up. Perhaps until this time he had thought of God as influence; as a "great impersonal will, without affection, without sympathy, without pity." Perhaps he thought, as John Stuart Mills has expressed it, that God is a being of great but limited power, of great but limited intelligence, of great but limited love, but now he sees the "Holy place of the temple, enlarged and glorified, the veil drawn aside, a lofty throne taking the place of the ark, and upon it, Adonai, the Sovereign of the universe, his train, the skirts of his garments of light and glory, so filling the temple that no human priest could minister there."

Yes, Isaiah had a vision of the Lord, high and lifted up; and my friends that is what we need to-day. In many instances our religion has reduced itself to a system of ethics. Many of our churches have come to be social organizations. The thought of God, high and lifted up, has been eliminated; it no more stirs the human heart. How many of you live and work without any divine incentive. I pray that this year the vision of God, high and lifted up, may come to this church and to the city of Monroe. God, your Father and my Father, the maker and sustainer of this universe, before the morning stars sang together He was, and when they shall have fallen from their orbit, or have been blown out by His infinite breath, He shall still live. The mountains may become dust, and the ocean vapor, yea, every vestige of the outward, visible universe may perish, but God in new creations shall live on forever.

May we see Him in every storm and in every sky of blue. May we see Him in every sunrise, and see Him when the evening shadows fall. May we see Him in every growing tree, in every beautiful flower, in every creature—the birds of the air and the beasts of the field. May we see Him in every human face. But we do not want any Pantheism. We do not want to think and talk of God as the All, "as the great ocean of all existence, and of men as waves rising out of the ocean and breaking back into the ocean again; or of God as the great tree putting forth branches, which wither and fall and are absorbed into mother earth again; or of God as a great fire, and you and I as the sparks which fly from the original fire, flaming for an instant, and then returning again to the original."

God is a creator, and everything in all this universe is the work of His hands. God is the Father of our spirits—we are His children; He made us, and has given His Son to save us. We want a God we can see, one we can touch, one we can feel, one we can speak to, one we can go to in our sins, one who will help us. We want, and we have a personal God. How true and how beautiful the words of Robert Browning:

"Tis the weakness in strength that I cry for, my flesh I seek

In the Godhead. I seek and I find it. O Saul, it shall be

A face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me

Thou shall love and be loved by forever; a Hand like this hand Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee. See the Christ stand."

I want to emphasize that before we can do any effectual work in this sinful world and in the Church we must get a vision of God, high and lifted up. I do not know how this vision will come to you. Very likely it will not come to you as it came to Isaiah, and to Jacob, and to Moses, and to Paul, and to Luther, and to Wesley—but it must, it must come. It may come to you as you are performing the daily common tasks. It may come to you while you are reading the Word of God, and are waiting in prayer at the Throne of Grace. It may come to you as you walk along the crowded ways of life and are looking into the sinful faces of those for whom Christ died. "In the year that King Uzziah died" it came to Isaiah. It may come to you when a husband, a wife, a father, a mother, a brother, a sister, or a precious little child, or some dear friend whom you have loved with all the devotion of your heart is taken away. With your heart all broken, and your eyes a fountain of tears, you may see God, compassionate, tender and loving, and your life will never be the same any more. The vision of God may come to you in this service this morning, as you listen, as you worship, as you are led by the Spirit. I pray God that it may come.

A Vision of Self.

When Isaiah caught a vision of God it gave him a vision of himself, and this is the second essential in preparation for service. When he saw God he said: "Woe is me, for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips. Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts."

Job, a conceited moralist, makes this confession: "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes."

When Simon Peter recognized the miraculous in the great draught of fishes at the early morning hour in the lake of Gennesaret, when he realized that it was the work of Jesus, he fell on his face before the Master and said: "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." It is only when we see God that we get a vision of ourselves. The old Pharisee said: "I am better than you; I am better than that poor sinner praying yonder." The present day Pharisee says: "I am just as good, or I am no worse than those I meet". The Pharisee out of the Church excuses himself thus: "I am no worse than the church member." O, if you could only see God! If you could realize but for a single moment what He expects of you; if you could only get a vision of yourself—empty handed—at the day of judgment! I wish you could. We are sinners, lost, or sinners, saved by grace. When Isaiah saw God, high and lifted up, and when he saw himself a sinner, lost, he realized that he couldn't do the service that God wanted him to do. There must be a radical change in his life. He looked to God for help. "There flew one of the seraphim unto him, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with tongs from off the altar. And he laid it upon his mouth, and said, lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged." Before we can do our best service for God we must have a clean life, a life above reproach, a life of singleness of purpose. It must be our meat and drink to do the Master's will. You may try to persuade yourself to believe that the doing of a lot of questionable things will not affect the usefulness of your life. All the time that you are saying, "It is no harm, I must have a little pleasure," your life is becoming less and less responsive to God's call for service. The Divine desire is that you make the Kingdom of God and its righteousness first, but you have made other things first.

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see ourselves as ithers see us.
It wad frae monie a blunder free us
And foolish notion."

We want a vision of ourselves, not only as others see us, but as God sees us—a vision of ourselves as we really are. We must have it if we would do our best service.

A Vision of the World.

Isaiah not only had a vision of God, and a vision of himself, but he had a vision of the world, with all of its shame, with all of its heartache, with all of its sin. He said: "I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." We must see and feel the world's sin before we can help to eradicate it. We must see the field that is white unto the harvest before we will go forth with sickle and harvest song. Many of the professed followers of Christ have a very vague conception of the awfulness of sin. Many a devoted wife and mother has said to me: "My husband is not a Christian, but he is a good man; my children love the world; they are not Christians, but they are good children." Was God mistaken when He said, "The wages of sin is death?" When He said, "The soul that sinneth shall die?" Was it a delusion that brought Christ into the world to give His life upon the cross to save us from sin? Sin has grieved the heart of God; it has destroyed numberless homes. The rich life of our land to-day is being sacrificed at its altar. It makes my heart ache as I walk the streets of this beautiful little city to see the open dens of vice and shame. This place is full of "hell holes" into which the young life of the home and the Church is falling—falling, falling. There are enough good people in Monroe, if aroused to the awfulness of the sin that threatens to destroy the home, the school, the city itself, enough good people here, I say, to rise up in the strength of the Lord God Almighty and drive out the open and flagrant sins and win a signal victory for Jesus Christ. God give us eyes to see the sin at our doors!

Some people say they do not believe in foreign missions. It is because they don't know. They haven't had the vision of the field. I haven't time this morning to hold the map of the world before you that you may see Africa, with its cannibalism, its fetishism, and its superstition—Africa, the open sore of the world; China, oppressed, bound down by centuries of traditionalism, a country without a God; South America, fair and beautiful land, yet ignorant, priest-ridden and childish. God so loved the world—not America, but the world—that he gave his Son.

The religion of many people finds its most accurate expression in the little jingle that has come down to us from somewhere, "Me and my wife, and my son John and his wife, us four and no more." The Christianity of the Son of God is planetary; it knows no distinction in races or countries. Wherever there is a lost man, Jesus came to save him. May this song be sung around the world, and throughout the centuries:

"The whole wide world for Jesus; its hearts, and homes, and thrones;
Ring out again the watch-word in loud and joyous tones;
The whole wide world for Jesus; with prayer, the song we'll sing,
And speed the prayer with labor, till earth shall crown Him King."

The Surrendered Life the Crowning Essential.

You may get a vision of God that will hold you entranced—spell-bound, because of its glory; you may get a vision of self that will bring you down to the dust in humility; you may get a vision of the world that will make you feel like a Francis Xavier or David Livingstone; you may hear the voice of God saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Here is the crisis. Your answer—what shall it be? If you say, "I am too busy with my own affairs, I can not;" if you say "my sin is too dear, I can not part with it now;" if you say, "I love the world and its gay pleasures, maybe sometime I can serve, not now." If your answer is like this, then you have lost. Isaiah answered: "Here am I, send me." God is asking here to-day, "Who will give himself for service in my kingdom? Who will give himself, with his money, with his time, with his influence, with his love, with his all in service to Me and his brother?" What will your answer be?

REMINISCENT.

By Rev. H. Armstrong.

No. 8.

The day before we took our position in line of battle, the assembly signal was blown at an unusual hour, and we came together in dress parade form. We were soon surprised to see in our front a squad of generals, consisting of Bragg, first in command; Polk, to whose corps the writer belonged; Breckenridge, a corps commander; Chalmers, a brigadier general, and others. They were looking their best, being dressed in full uniform, including the most gorgeous epaulets, shaking and glittering in the sunlight. I believe they all honored us with a brief speech, and, while the "silver tongued" Breckenridge was present, none, in my judgment, delivered a more timely, enthusiastic and impressive speech than Gen. J. R. Chalmers, familiarly called, "Little Jimmie." Wednesday, December 31, 1862, dawned foggy and gloomy. We usually arose at daylight, but were told that morning to wait for orders. By broad daylight, fighting had begun on our left in earnest. The roar of small arms, and the thundering noise of field-pieces were like many hail-storms merged into one. About 8:30 o'clock the fog was gone and we could plainly see the enemy, some six hundred yards in our front. Just as we were taking our first look at the foe, we were startled by the word, which passed hurriedly and nervously along the line, "up men, right up." We tried to obey, but were so stiffened by lying in the cold mud that we made but little progress until exercise had given us agility. Balls began to sing around us like bees, and we fired rapidly, and dropped on our backs to load. The excitement was extreme. Some of the commissioned officers were deathly pale. They gave no commands and did not try to keep the men in line. Some of the men fired straight up in the air. They had no sense. One could not see the balls, large nor small, as they passed, but the ground was cut and marked and, if not too hastily engaged and closely pressed, we were almost constantly dodging cannon balls, or we thought we dodged them. After two or three hours of loading and shooting, (no repeating guns then) we were ordered to cease firing. We dropped down and, with hats in hand, running and yelling like maniacs, Cheatham's Division came. They were in reserve, and passed over us, and went in front of us for awhile. We could listen better then. The noise was frightful beyond description. Another soldier and I walked a little in advance and saw men sitting up, rubbing brains and blood out of their eyes; others, whose entire front was covered with blood, were coming to the rear, calling for water. We noticed a good many lying flat on their faces, and we were told that when a man received a death shot, that he always fell on his face. I heard bones crush and saw men fall, within almost my arm's length. Why and how I escaped the Lord only knows. I felt perfectly safe in the din of battle. Did I happen to be missed? It may be so, but I do not believe it. My Lord who has watched over me almost seventy-five years, was watching then, and is watching yet. Bless His name forever! Did I kill any one? I do not know. If I did there was no malice behind it. I have never thought that I was brave and do not think so now, yet I was cool, and, with no excitement, I took deliberate aim each time I fired. We were ordered to the front again and we passed near a battery where I witnessed a sad sight. Men and horses lying promiscuously together. Some dead and some dying. Some men and horses hopelessly wounded. Men praying and horses groaning, each rolling in blood. We came to some old houses and remnants of rail fences which served as some protection, while loading. The firing seemed to be more rapid and vicious as night drew nearer. Many tender and fine looking boys and young men fell in plain sight before me and rolled in their blood like so many hogs in a slaughter pen. The beautiful sun had dropped below the horizon, and we bivouacked for the night.

Church News

There are said to be in the Protestant Churches of the United States 3,000,000 more women than men.

Bishop W. A. Candler will preach the Commencement sermon of Emory and Henry College on June 9, and Bishop J. H. McCoy that of Vanderbilt University on June 16.

Governor Woodrow Wilson addressed the students of Randolph-Macon College on Friday, February 2, and was given an ovation.

A chair of Bible and Sunday School Pedagogy has been established in the Wesleyan Female College, of Macon, Ga. The object of this department is to qualify the young ladies in attendance upon the institution for more effective work in the Sunday school and Church.

The several Texas Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, gave last year for missions $131,737. It is thought that they will go considerably beyond that amount in their contributions this year. A mighty host are the followers of Wesley in the Lone Star State.

Dr. W. R. Tillett, Dean of the Vanderbilt Theological Faculty, delivered a stereopticon lecture on his travels in the Holy Land in Furman Hall, on the University campus, on Friday, January 26. A large audience was present, and the occasion is reported to have been one of much interest.

The missionary spirit appears to be active at the University of Wisconsin. A few days since the young men of that institution raised nearly $1000 for Christian work among the students of Tokio, Japan. Several of the students have also placed themselves at the disposal of mission boards for the foreign field.

Bishop John C. Kilgo is proving himself to be a working chief pastor. He is going almost continuously, and such is his versatility that he performs well every task that he undertakes. Referring to the constancy of his labors, the Raleigh Christian Advocate says: "Bishop Kilgo's ability as a preacher and speaker make him in great demand, and he has never learned how to say, 'No,' except when forced by circumstances to do so."

During the week, from January 23 to February 4, Dr. George R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., made a tour through a part of Texas which resulted in raising $15,000 for the projected Southern Methodist University at Dallas. He was accompanied on the trip by Rev. J. T. McClure, Educational Commissioner, and Dr. H. A. Boaz, Vice-President of the University. This enterprise is going steadily forward, and its success now seems assured.

A writer, said to be a competent judge, in referring to some addresses recently delivered in Boston by Bishop W. F. McDowell, says: "They made a tremendous impression on Boston. Nothing like it since the days of Bishop Foster." A prominent Methodist layman of Chicago, who attended the International Sunday School gathering in New Orleans a few days ago, stated while here that he considers Bishop McDowell as, perhaps, the most influential chief pastor in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In order to correct an error which was unintentionally made in a recent issue, we quote the following from the Baptist Record, of Jackson, Miss.: "Our worthy contemporary, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, says, 'The Baptists of Mississippi are reported to have raised for missions last year $37,575. They have been asked this year to raise at least $38,000, and some of their leaders are urging that an effort be made to reach the $40,000 mark.' These figures apply to foreign missions alone. They gave just a little over $100,000 for all missions."

It is stated that three-fourths of the electoral vote in Wales will go for the disestablishment of the English Church in that country. The Anglicans are said to concede that disestablishment is inevitable, but they are making a vigorous fight to retain the endowments which they have. In the disestablishment in Ireland the endowments were taken away, and the Liberals are contending that the same thing should be done in this instance. Some sort of compromise in the matter may be the final result.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown, president of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, went to Washington last week to confer with President Taft concerning conditions in Korea. It has been given out that Dr. Brown has had letters from abroad charging that Japan is trying to stamp out Christianity in the Hermit Kingdom by torturing converts, closing mission schools, and interfering with the work of the American missionaries, who number about 400—most of them representatives of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches.

The First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Wash., of which Dr. M. A. Matthews is pastor, has had 7,300 accessions during the past ten years, the period that Dr. Matthews has been in charge. During this time this congregation has been instrumental in the establishment of nine other churches. It raised last year for all purposes $80,000, of which $30,000 went to missions. This gifted minister, whose fame as a pastor is now national, once served the First Presbyterian Church of Jackson, Tenn., and while doing so frequently lectured at points in North Mississippi. He was noted then for his eloquence, intense earnestness, and untiring energy.

According to Dr. R. S. McArthur, president of the Baptist World Alliance, who has just returned from St. Petersburg, the Russian Government in giving permission to establish a Baptist College in that city, imposed the following conditions: (1) It must be built under the protectorate of a registered church; (2) it must not be controlled by either an American or British board of trustees; (3) it must teach no politics, and maintain no art course in the curriculum; (4) the site at present must not cost over $2500, though, should it see fit, the Government may allow the acquisition of a large amount of property in the future. Dr. McArthur also stated that at first the Minister of the Interior refused to let him speak at the dedication of the new Baptist Church in St. Petersburg, calling attention to the law which forbids public addresses by foreigners; but that later the Minister gave his permission, with the understanding that there would be no reference to baptism or politics and that the remarks made would be non-sectarian.

HOSPITAL DAY IN MEMPHIS.

We had laid large plans and built great expectations for Hospital Day in Memphis. Of course we had not calculated on four of our good Bishops and one other valuable speaker for the day being providentially prevented from coming to us, nor had we counted on the cold, rainy day which so greatly interfered with the attendance at church. But in these particulars we got another lesson in that fact so oft recalled,

"The best-laid schemes o' mice an' men Gang aft a'gley."

Bishop Hoss, who preached at Second Church in the morning and at Lenox in the evening, Dr. McMurtry, who preached at St. Johns at 11 a. m. and Dr. Monk, who preached at Madison Heights in the morning, were all the expected leaders who reached us. Each of these brethren rendered effective and appreciated service for which we are sincerely grateful. Most of our pastors had, on very short notice, to take the places of Bishops and "near bishops" for whom they had been looking; but all did so with satisfaction to their people and good results for the cause. The offerings of the city churches reporting thus far total more than $30,000, and this figure will, of course, be greatly increased by the subscriptions of those who were absent and the churches that deferred the collection.

The following is the result by churches: First Church, T. W. Lewis, pastor, $16,500; St. John's, T. E. Sharp, $850; Madison Heights, J. T. Myers, $5,000; Second Church, R. A. Clark, $1,800; Mississippi Boulevard, Cleanth Brooks, $1,500; Bun-ty and Springdale, David Leith, $1,300; Lenox, H. O. Hafstead, $1,000; Harris Memorial, H. W. Brooks, $1,000; Pennsylvania Street, J. L. Hunter, $110; Annesdale, J. G. Williams, $255; Galloway Memorial, M. F. Leake, $412; Longstreet and Bethlehem, J. A. Hassell, $330.

There are several other churches of the city for which I have not now the figures, some of which postponed the collection. It is but fair to say that some of these smaller amounts represent an interest and liberality for the people present at the time deserving the highest appreciation and praise. And one can but notice the fact that those churches whose pastors were actively interested made a worthy showing in spite of adverse conditions.

The largest subscription was made by that splendid Methodist Layman, so trusted and loved in Memphis, Mr. John R. Pepper, who headed the list with $5,000. We would soon have the Tri-State Methodist Hospital up and open for patients if all our Methodists were as far-visioned, broad-minded and liberal as he. Yet there can be no doubt that many of the smaller contributions represent the same spirit in men handling smaller means, and this marks the quality of the act.

Our people here are appreciating this enterprise more and more, and we have no doubt but that this city will contribute fully $100,000 to it before it is completed. The reports from the brethren in the field are coming in very slowly. I hear of many places where the day was observed and the offering creditable, from which we have so far failed to get reports. Will the brethren please forward the money and reports as soon as possible?

I will send reports of other fields later.

H. M. ELLIS, Field Secretary.

REV. JOHN A. MILLER DEAD.

Rev. John A. Miller died in Patterson this morning at 4 o'clock at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Horace Wadsworth. He was eighty years of age. He succumbed to pneumonia. He was taken with a chill Sunday morning. He will be buried tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

He was born in Pendleton, S. C., on January 25, 1832; began to preach at the age of twenty; was ordained a deacon in the M. E. Church, South in 1854, and an elder in 1857. He was admitted into the Louisiana Conference by transfer in 1855, and was sent to Patterson, where he lived four years. He again served Patterson for four years—from 1899 to 1902. His last appointment was Clinton, in 1903; in December of that year he was superannuated. Since then he has lived here with his daughter. He was married to Miss Rosabelia Budd Mills on July 29, 1859. His wife died September 23, 1871. Of this union five children were born, one, a daughter, who lives here, and another, a son, Mr. John A. B. Miller of Coleman, Texas.

He served in different places in Louisiana, and is known and loved throughout the State.

THE EDUCATIONAL ASSESSMENTS.

To the preachers of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: As Conference Secretary of Education, permit me to place before you the distressing report made by our Conference last year in regard to the educational assessments, and to urge that an earnest effort be made this year to save the General Board from being badly crippled and seriously embarrassed, through any failure on our part to provide what surely is not more than can reasonably be asked of us.

The General Board received from our Conference last year only $855 on an assessment of

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure

Economizes Butter, Flour, Eggs; makes the food more appetizing and wholesome

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

$2764—about 31 per cent of the amount asked, and far below the average 62 per cent reported from all the Conferences. Dr. Anderson writes that the work of the Board, including our colored work, and mountain, Western, and mission schools, can not be continued unless at least 75 per cent of the assessments are raised annually. For Southern Methodism to cease to do the little it is now doing, through Paine College, Augusta, Ga., Lane College, Jackson, Tenn., and other minor institutions, for the race at our very door in such dire need of enlightenment and moral uplift, would be nothing short of cold-blooded, un-Christian failure to perform a most obvious duty. The condemnation of the priest and the Levite who passed the needy one by must surely rest upon us, should we be guilty of withdrawing the little help we have been rendering our brother in black, which has brought such large returns in negro men and women trained to be truly a blessing to their race.

In extenuation of our failure, it may be said that the assessment was largely increased last year, and that by special provision Grenada and Mississippi Colleges get at least a certain amount of the educational collection; yet it still remains true that we paid decidedly less to the General Board last year than formerly; not only not meeting the increase, but even making a poorer showing than when we had a smaller assessment. To throw the blame on the increase of assessment is easy, but it is unfair unless it can be shown that too much is being asked. Let us see. Take the educational assessment on your charge last year. How much was it per capita? On mine the whole assessment was $86, a little less than 22c a year asked of each member for the support of all church schools and missionary educational enterprises. Is that too much? Surely not, if we are going to do anything at all. Yet I find that the average assessment upon the Conference at large was even less, being a little below 16c a member per year.

Certainly we cannot afford as preachers to complain, or to yield to complaints, when such are the facts before us. It is a serious situation which we face, and perhaps more than we realize the future of our Church depends upon our heartily acquiescing in, and seeking to show our people the reasonableness of, the uses for, and the necessity and privilege of meeting these assessments, by means of which the Church may fulfill her God-appointed mission in the earth.

So Brethren, let us rally to meet all Conference claims in full this year. Our line wavered a little last year—we all felt it. The shock of a heavy increase and the prevailing financial stringency caused us to lose heart a little. Yet surely we will not retreat, but rally and go forward—working harder, praying more, walking more, talking more that we may arouse our people to do even greater things than the little that is asked of them. We are the Captains of the Lord's hosts; let us claim a victorious year in His name, and meet again at its close rejoicing in abundant evidences of every kind that the cause of Christ is prospering in North Mississippi. Fraternally,

T. H. LIPSCOMB,
Conference Secretary of Education.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S CHAIR.

A college president ought to have nothing to do with raising money. For one reason, because his duties in the school need all his time and thought; and for another reason, because, say what you will about it, the ability to make and handle money is distinct from the talent and taste for letters. Rome had her Macenas, a magnificent patron of the fine arts, and America has her Carnegie and Rockefeller, whose money, wisely or unwisely, has been spent by millions to promote the cause of learning. But these were first of all business men. You will not find one man in a thousand who knows how to make money who has either time or inclination for literature. He has to think of other things. This fact, and the correlative fact that the business side of the work of the Church has grown so large and demands so much money to carry it on, is silently but surely changing the type of the ministry itself. A Methodist preacher's rating now does not depend on his piety, his ability to preach, or his success as a soul winner, but on his efficiency as a man of business. He may let the Gospel severely alone, and not have a single conversion in his charge, but if he can report, "Collections in full, Bishop, and running over," he is sure of the best in sight.

I am not depreciating the ability to make money. It is all right and may be a gift of God. What I am saying is that it is incompatible with that devotion to other things which is essential to the success of the minister and the teacher. I may have erred in the opposite direction, and often realize the limitation of a lack of business experience. But I have been afraid to try to learn the art of making money. I am afraid "the inner light" might go out, the spiritual sympathies become dull, the leaping fires of desire to climb to the heights of knowledge die down, conscience grow careless, the fountains of sentiment dry up, the finer sensibilities of the soul lose their delicate power, the very mind itself become "subdued to the element it worked in," and Death mock me at the end when the hooded skeleton appears, and bids me leave it all, and go naked before my Judge! All my investments have been made in heavenly securities. If these fail I am poor indeed. But they yield large dividends of satisfaction here, and I would not sell the interest I feel in things the average business man disregards for all of Rockefeller's wealth. All these glittering treasures I resign. I gladly count them but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord. Preachers have no business with wealth. When they have it they hold it as tightly as the most miserly saint at whose head they hurl their pious thunders from the pulpit. I have known some, alas, who gave every token of necrosis of the soul.

The same is true to a large degree with the teacher. Like Agassiz, the true teacher has no time to make money. The administrative duties of a large institution of learning may demand business ability rather than teaching talent. Yet even here the work of a money gatherer is inconsistent with the dignity and influence of a leader in the field of thought, a trainer of the minds of men, an educator in the highest sense. When I congratulated the distinguished President of one of our great Universities on his success in rounding out a million for his endowment, he replied: "It is the last I shall ever attempt in that line. Such work lies outside the proper sphere of a President of an institution of learning. He should devote himself to developing men instead of grovelling at the feet of money kings to get the means of doing it." A college president ought to be an example to his student body in devotion to study, enthusiasm for knowledge, and ardor to cultivate intellectual manhood. He ought to incarnate the ideal of life and by his personal influence impart it to all his pupils. No term is more abused than the term education. To many it means only a rushing through a prescribed number of books, the faster the better; a superficial cramming of the mind with unassimilated knowledge, the chief end of which is to fit its possessor to make money. I believe more and more in the vital importance of a classical course of study to all real education. I have one son and four daughters to educate. I want every one of them to be thoroughly drilled in Latin, Greek and Mathematics. Then the foundation will be laid in solid mental training on which they may build what ever superstructure they may choose. Whatever they choose, you never can rob them of the intellectual ideal such training imparts. I will not eat one doughnut less to give them a chance to take "Expression," and become little amateur fibbertigibbets, merry masqueraders with white shoes, big hats, and decollete costumes, simpering non-entities amid the shams of godless society. But I will wear my last year's hat, and double patch my pants, and go without a square meal a month to keep them at Latin, Greek and Mathematics till they finish the course.

There is a new book on my table sent me by the Bibliotheca Sacra Company of Oberlin, Ohio. The title of it is "Miracles and Science," and the author, Francis J. Lamb, Attorney and Counsellor at Law, of Madison, Wisconsin. We are indebted to lawyers for some excellent books on the Bible. Some years ago that eminent jurist, Greenleaf, gave us "The Testimony of the Evangelists." Then the Scotch harrister, Mr. Taylor Innes, gave us his excellent brief, "The Trial of Jesus," which a lawyer of the New York Bar, Hon. Walter M. Chandler, has amplified in two portly volumes. And now in this book Judge Lamb applies, as only a lawyer can, the methods of jurai science to the Biblical miracles. The theme of the book, as set forth on the title page, is "Bible miracles examined by the methods, rules and tests of the science of jurisprudence as administered to-day in courts of justice." The more than three hundred pages that follow abundantly fulfil the promise of the title, and furnish us with a fresh, and in some respects original, treatment of an old subject.

It is preeminently a book for laymen and is a timely contribution to the Men's Religion Movement. I am more and more convinced of the difficulty of getting the average layman to look at truth from the theological standpoint. He has no time to master the knowledge requisite to a philosophical discussion of the supernatural. But his very business training and experience fit him to understand and appreciate those evidences which are the familiar formulas of daily life; and when he is made to see by a great lawyer like Judge Lamb, that the miracles of the Bible are established by the very same kind of proof that rules in the decisions of judge and jury in the courts of to-day, it puts the truth within his reach and gives him confidence. It is very helpful to ministers, too, to look at Bible truth from the layman's standpoint, and be able to show that the great verities of the Christian's faith, which for the thinker, rest upon far deeper foundations in the whole philosophy of life, are nevertheless also demonstrable by the practical tests of secular evidence. Judge Lamb's discussion of the case of Pharaoh is the best I have seen; while he handles the testimony of the witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus in a clear and convincing manner. The Bibliotheca Sacra Company is a Gibraltar of conservative Biblical criticism. It has sent forth some masterly works in defence of the faith. Dr. Wright's "Scientific Confirmation of Genesis" is an invaluable storehouse of weapons with which to demolish infidelity. It would not satisfy some moss-covered traditionalists, and at least one man lost his caput for indiscreetly advocating some of its views in "the organ." But "the word of the Lord is not bound" by such unprogressive conservatism. The Bible is not helped, but greatly hindered, by the grotesque credulity that boasts it would believe it just as readily if it said that Jonah swallowed the whale, as that the whale swallowed Jonah. One of the strongest proofs of the supernatural character of the Bible to my own mind is, not that it has triumphed over its enemies, but that it has survived the folly of its friends.

It is said to have happened in a Mississippi

College, though to be more specific might not be in good taste, that a student demurred to some regulation, and was told by the Professor that it was not practicable to excuse him; that red tape controlled everything there. After a diligent search in every store in town, the student told the professor he had done his best, but couldn't find a bit of red tape in the place! Some people miss the meaning of the Bible about as far as that student missed the Professor's meaning; and for the same reason, because they follow a bold literalism in its interpretation. Modern research has thrown a flood of light on the Bible, and the Bibliotheca Sacra press, while standing firm for the old views, has given us a wealth of illustration and proof that these views rest upon foundations which are confirmed by the best learning of the age.

OPPOSED TO MANUFACTURE OF INTOXICANTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The Executive Committee of the Anti-Saloon League desires to express its great interest in whatever measures may promise prosperity, commercial, social, and moral, to the citizens of our State. We heartily endorse any movement for the use of the by-products from the saw mills of South Mississippi that would bring wealth to those communities, and, at the same time, safeguard our present prohibition laws. The manufacture of saw dust, now hountiful and wasting, into alcohol useful only in mechanical arts ought to be encouraged; and we favor such an industry.

The conversion, however, of any raw material, whether corn or saw dust, into alcohol which can be used as a heverage and an intoxicant would be contrary and hurtful to the prohibition principles which have been embodied in the statutes of our State. We could not be consistent and honest, amongst ourselves and with the world, in advocating a policy of manufacturing and shipping beyond our State borders that which we forbid to be sold within them. We stand opposed to liquor shipments into, and likewise out of, dry territory. When South Mississippians meet the joint Prohibition Committees of the Senate and the House to encourage the utilizing of the waste products of their mills, let prohibitionists join them, and seek to secure what is for the highest interest both of them and all of us: to add wealth through mechanical arts and to prevent poverty through the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

"G. W. HUDDLESTON,

KITTY'S ARITHMETIC.

Seven sheep were standing
By the pasture wall.
"Tell me," said the teacher
To her scholars small,
"One poor sheep was frightened,
Jumped and ran away;
One from seven—how many Woolly sheep would stay?"

Up went Kitty's fingers,
A farmer's daughter she,
Not so bright at figures
As she ought to be.
"Please, ma'am." "Well, then Kitty,
Tell us, if you know."
"Please if one jumped over,
All the rest would go."

THE CRUELTY OF RIDICULING CHILDREN.

"When I'm big," announced Sylvia, "I am going to lecture—" Before the last word was out there was a shout from her brothers and sisters.

"You lecture, Sylvia? Huh, you'd look well on the stage with your pigeon toes."

"What would you say? Folks have to be born smart to lecture."

"Sylvia's going to be a lecturer, he, he, he," and so it went on, this storm of ridicule unchecked by the foolish parents. Sylvia left the table in tears, and was scolded by her mother for being cross. But that was not the end. Poor Sylvia was teased and tormented for weeks, and her ambitions ridiculed in the presence of every visitor, until she became sullen and silent.

Sylvia grew more to womanhood, and did become a lecturer, and a good one, but to this day she will refuse to speak if any members of her family are in the audience.

"I am awkward and ill at ease in the presence of my family," she says, "because of what they made me suffer from ridicule as a child. I can never do my best or appear to advantage when any of them are present."

Don't you know many cases of the kind? I do, and I know one splendid woman who hates to be where her people are.

"They have made me feel all my life that I was a fool," she declares. "They cannot expect me to be happy or at ease among them."

There is a bit of barbarism in children that makes them ridicule their brothers and sisters, and many unwise parents permit it unreprieved, without realizing the lost confidence and diffidence and actual suffering that it causes. I firmly believe that many a life has been spoiled just because a child's confidence in itself has been destroyed by ridicule.

If children are awkward, don't tell them so; put them where they can see grace and be taught to acquire it. We need all the confidence we can muster up in ourselves and others. Don't ridicule anybody for anything. It is wicked and useless, and does untold harm.—Cynthia Grey, in Pacific Baptist.

HOW TOMMY WAS RECLAIMED.

"Tommy, I'm going to commit you to the Industrial School," said the Judge a few months ago, to a bright-faced lad of 14 years as he stood in the juvenile division of the probate court.

"All right, judge, it's up to you," smiled the youthful culprit.

The officer led Tommy to the detention room to await deportation. But, before Tommy was "sent away," his teacher successfully interceded for him and he didn't go to Lansing that time.

This narrow escape, however, did not deter Tommy in his wayward course. Absolutely ignoring the advice of parents, teacher, judge—everybody, he continued in his old ways—playing hooky, refusing to work, fighting with other boys, smoking cigarettes, hanging around the corners at night with "the gang," stealing; in fact, continuing the life of a typical incorrigible.

The result was inevitable. Tommy was soon returned to the juvenile court. His cheerful, ruddy face wore that same confident, don't-care-a-snap smile. His nerve never deserted him. He admitted the truth of the officer's accusation.

"This time, Tommy," concluded the court, "you have no possible excuse."

"I'm not kickin'," grinned Tommy.

Once more, Tommy was locked up, but once more he had a friend. This time it was a man who is deeply interested in the problem of saving bad boys.

Did Tommy take advantage of his second escape? Did Tommy make good? Positively, no! If anything he succeeded in being worse. Again he was committed to the State reformatory.

Feel bad about it? Not Tommy! He just laughed and joked with the guard. He had no criticism for the judge and he remained friendly towards the truant officers. He had no regrets. He just didn't care.

Henry S. Hulbert was then registrar of probate. He had been interested in Tommy for a long period. Mr. Hulbert decided to take Tommy in hand and, once more, the boy was given his liberty as the ward of Mr. Hulbert.

History repeats itself—Tommy went straight back to his old tricks. He honestly won the title of the "terror of the neighborhood." In the meantime, the governor appointed Mr. Hulbert as judge of the probate court, and Judge Hulbert took charge of the juvenile division of this court.

Among the first juveniles who appeared before the new judge was Tommy, and he was charged with the larceny of a lot of brass.

"I'm sorry to see you here, for you are my ward," said Judge Hulbert.

"Did you steel this brass?"

"Certainly, I did," came the reply.

Judge Hulbert had never changed his mind in regard to Tommy. And he could not bring himself to sentence such a lad—so full of ginger—to the State institution.

"Tommy," said the judge, "instead of committing you to the Industrial school, I'm going to give you a letter to a friend of mine in which I'll ask him to give you a job. I still believe that you have it in you to make good and I'm going to take the chance. Will you be a man and keep your word?"

It seemed to be the turning point in the boy's career. The silly smile faded from his lips. He clasped the judge's outstretched hand and said: "I'm going to try and be good, judge; honestly I am."

"I believe you, Tommy," returned his honor, "for, with all your faults, you've never lied to me yet."

Well, Tommy got a job from the judge's friend. He worked steadily and well, gaining promotion. His good work was called to the attention of the manager of another large manufacturing establishment and, with the best wishes of his employer, he changed jobs. To-day he is earning good wages.—Detroit News Tribune.

Concerning Missions

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the District Secretaries and Auxiliary Corresponding Secretaries of the Mississippi Conference W. F. M. Society.

Dear Friends: Since I do not know your personal addresses I shall try to reach you through the columns of our New Orleans Christian Advocate, which every member of the Missionary Society should read.

In the minutes of our 32nd Annual Conference, which was held last May, I find as the ninth recommendation of the Committee on Extension of Work the following:

"That we elect a Press Superintendent, who shall have charge of our column in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that the District Secretaries and Auxiliary Corresponding Secretaries are urged to furnish her with items of interest from the work, so that she will be enabled to fill the space regularly." The writer was elected Press Superintendent at that Conference, but since that time has received no communications from either District or Auxiliary Corresponding Secretaries. The Conference Treasurer has, however, usually sent in her quarterly reports promptly. Each auxiliary member has thereby been enabled to find out how our Conference was paying up its pledges.

Perhaps the fault is in me, that I have believed too firmly in the much quoted adage, "All things come to those who wait," and have kept silent when I should have "urged" you to send items. If so, I repent and am now trying to atone for my neglect.

Some auxiliaries have had special programs on the Missionary Voice; some, especially helpful plans for a Missionary Social, or Mission Study; others, for securing new members, etc. If your auxiliary has been helped by these, do not be selfish, pass them on and let others benefit by them, too. This applies to Juvenile and Young People's Societies as well as to the Women's; they have something perhaps that will be just as interesting and helpful to other Societies as it has been to their own.

Hoping that you will be thoughtful enough of others to send them help in this way, I am,

Sincerely, Mrs. O. S. LEWIS.

TWO GREAT COLLECTIONS.

At the recent Presbyterian Laymen's Convention, held in Chattanooga, February 6-8, after a stirring address by Mr. Motte Martin on the needs of Africa, thirty volunteers for that field (twenty-six men and four women) marched to the platform, and a collection of $48,830 was taken to send them abroad. Enthusiasm was at high tide, and we dare to say that the occasion will never be forgotten by any one who was present. The account given of the service caused us to recall the great missionary rally held in the old Tulane Hall in New Orleans on Sunday evening, April 28, 1901, at which the lamented Bishop Charles B. Galloway was the principal speaker. His theme was "Lessons from Master Missionaries," and with matchless eloquence he so thrilled and stirred the great audience that a spontaneous collection of $50,150 was quickly taken.

The South, to which oratory seems to be indigenous, has, in our opinion, produced few public speakers equal to Bishop Galloway. Dr. J. M. Buckley said in writing of him some years ago that he had the three essential requisites of a great orator—the pause, the glance, and the tear. Of all the famous platform speakers that we have heard (and we have listened to many), we call to mind only two that we would compare with Bishop Galloway as masters of popular eloquence: the Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar and Dr. S. A. Steel. And it is rather singular that all three of these are Mississippians: two of them so by birth, and the other by adoption. Possibly we are a partial and unfair judge, and have not done other famous speakers justice in forming our estimates; but whether it be correct or not, we are sincere in the view expressed.

DID HOMER NOD?

One of our favorite Methodist editors is Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, of the Central Christian Advocate, of Kansas City. He wields a gifted pen, and, though alert and progressive, is usually safe and judicious in his utterances. But in his paper bearing the date of January 31, in an editorial entitled, "Report on Organic Union," there occurs some rather remarkable statements. One of them is as follows: "There have been several meetings of the joint commission to effect organic union between the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Protestant Episcopal Church." Evidently the substitution of "Protestant Episcopal Church" for the Methodist Protestant Church is a typographical error, and no sensible editor would dare find fault with another for such a mistake, for he knows not what a week may bring forth in his own columns. However, we do not think it is altogether accurate to say that the meetings of the joint commission were held "to effect organic union," as if that were the only question that the body was empowered to consider.

But it is to another utterance of Dr. Spencer in this editorial that we desire to call attention. In suggesting that it may be wiser to have the whole Church to pass upon the report, rather than the mere handful of members composing the General Conference, he says: "There will be several hundred of the General Conference who have never studied the philosophy of our polity, hundreds, we presume to say, who never have and do not today own a Discipline." Can it be possible that our Sister Church has elected to sit in her great legislative assembly, "hundreds who never have, and do not now own a Discipline?" We have had a much better opinion than that of our fellow-Methodists of the North, and we should regret to know that they have entrusted the interests of their great denomination to such crude and uninformed representatives. We are rather disposed to the view that Brother Spencer's imagination was unduly active when he wrote upon this question.

CALLED UP HIGHER.

A note from Rev. Paul M. Brown, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, brings news of the death of Rev. George Jackson, which occurred at Brother Brown's residence in Shreveport, La., on Wednesday, Feb. 14. His remains were carried to Lecompte, where they were interred on Friday, Feb. 16. Brother Jackson was ordained in 1859, and joined the Louisiana Conference by transfer in 1873. For more than fifty years he was active in the work of the ministry, laboring as a colporteur after it was deemed best by the Conference not to assign him longer to a pastorate. He served faithfully many appointments in Louisiana, leaving wherever he wrought the fragrance of a good name and enduring evidences of his efficiency. He was a man of noble character, of sunny temperament, and of unwavering fidelity. He grew old without the slightest trace of morbidness, and was much beloved by his brethren, both of the ministry and laity. He realized that the end could not be far away, and we dare say that the Master's summons found him ready and waiting for the call. No more shall we see him here, but we may cherish the hope of meeting him in the Father's house of many mansions. A more extended account of his life and labors will appear in the Advocate in the near future.

"A PRAYING COURT."

Under the above caption, the Grenada Sentinel (Mississippi) in a recent issue contained the following editorial:

"It was indeed an inspiring scene at the Methodist Church on Wednesday night to see the presiding circuit judge, G. A. McLean, in the pulpit conducting prayer meeting and his able co-laborer District Attorney Lamb, leading in prayer. The country is safe when its public men will lead in church services, and the best of all is that the lives of these two good men conform to their professions. What a worthy example to young men! The country is progressing. It is growing better. For a circuit judge to have conducted a prayer meeting a third of a century ago, would almost have startled a community. Judge McLean's address was full of the Spirit and was a plea for a zealous and a working religious life."

Judge McLean is a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church and a worthy and upright Christian gentleman. Mr. Lamb, if we mistake not, is a consistent and useful Methodist, whose influence is strongly felt for good in his home community. The Sentinel does well to commend the example of these officials, and we fully share in the sentiment which it expresses concerning them. Our contemporary errs, however, in the following statement: "For a circuit judge to have conducted a prayer meeting a third of a century ago, would almost have startled a community." We have read of jurists, like Judge David O. Shattuck, who was on the circuit bench in Mississippi in 1837, and who frequently would hold court all the week and deliver a powerful sermon in the community on Sunday. Indeed, Methodism has had many such men both at the bar and on the bench. Judge McLean and District Attorney Lamb have inaugurated no innovation in taking a public part in a religious service. They are in the succession of many noble officials who did likewise in bygone days.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Miss Wilhoit, a deaconess from Beaumont, Tex., is in the city visiting Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Moore.

Brother J. L. Lay, of Shusboro, La., has our thanks for a choice list of subscribers, which he sent in last week.

Rev. G. A. Guice is doing an excellent work on the Poplarville (Miss.) charge. He has the interests of the Advocate at heart.

Rev. J. J. Garner, who is serving his second year as pastor at Lula, Miss., is doing good work. He announces that he is happy in his field.

We regret to be informed that Rev. H. Armstrong, of Olla, La., has lately been physically indisposed. We trust that the illness of this worthy veteran will be of brief duration.

We received a letter of kindly appreciation from Brother A. Armstrong of Vaiden, Miss., this week, which flashed a ray of sunshine into the office. Kind words are never spoken or written amiss.

Rev. H. R. Singleton has been quietly presenting the Conference collections to his people at Parker Memorial Church, and reports that he has the entire amount about subscribed and much of it in cash.

Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, reports that the attendance at preaching services in the New Orleans churches is at least 15 per cent better than at this time last year.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt's campaign for the Advocate on the Ackerman (Miss.) charge continues with gratifying results. He believes that it is worth while to work for the circulation of the Conference organ.

This is Mardi Gras week in New Orleans, and this issue of the Advocate has been brought out amid many interruptions and difficulties. "Do not view it with a critic's eye, but pass its imperfections by."

Rev. W. H. Lane, of Harrisville, Miss., announces that he is working hard to place the Advocate in every Methodist home in his charge. The lists of new subscribers coming from him verify his statement.

Rev. W. L. Doss, of Epworth Church, has been suffering with an attack of la grippe. Rev. C. C. Seelman filled the Epworth pulpit last Sunday evening. Brother Doss is improving, and will be in his pulpit next Sunday.

Brother B. F. Goza, of Magnolia, Miss., who was in the city to see the Mardi Gras, was an appreciated caller at our office last Tuesday. He spoke of the work of his pastor, Rev. John A. Moore, in terms highly commendatory.

Rev. J. M. Brown, who has been in the effective ministry in Louisiana for the past thirty-nine years, continues active, and is doing a good work at Clinton. He never neglects to press the claims of the Conference organ.

"We are delighted with our location here in the little city of Waynesboro," says Rev. Hilary Westbrook, pastor of the Waynesboro (Miss.) charge. We do not doubt that he has reason to be pleased, since he has a choice membership.

Information has come to us that the Rev. E. H. Smoot, of Glen Allan, Miss., is giving fine satisfaction in his charge. He is reported to be exhibiting an aggressive missionary spirit, and opening work at some new places.

The Church Point charge, which was formerly known as the Prudhomme Circuit, has a most faithful pastor in the person of Rev. H. B. Vandenburg. In each of the four churches composing the work, there is a good Sunday school.

Rev. A. L. Davenport, of Walnut, Miss., says: "We expect to send many more subscribers soon. He has our thanks in advance for those he expects to get, and our present thanks for the fine list which we received from him this week."

Rev. S. D. Howard, our energetic pastor at Baker, La., has our hearty thanks for some good work recently done for the Advocate. Brother Howard states that he had a most impressive communion service at Deerford on Sunday, February 11.

Mrs. J. F. Evans, who is highly esteemed throughout North Mississippi for her noble Christian character and activity in the woman's work, is visiting relatives in Chattanooga, Tenn. Her address while tarrying there will be 700 Montague Avenue.

Rev. L. A. McKeown is preaching to large congregations at Cleveland, Miss., and the work is going forward under his wise superintendence.

Rev. W. M. Brownlee has started well at Arcola and Hollandale (North Mississippi). The people are reported to be delighted with his pulpit ministrations.

In a communication to our office, Sister J. W. Mason, of Benoit, Miss., states that Brother Wasson, our new pastor at that place, is very much liked by the people. This is not surprising, since this gifted young minister is both consecrated and well equipped for the work.

An interesting union Sunday School Convention was held at Starkville, Miss., on Feb. 11. Among those taking an active part in the proceedings were Dr. T. C. Wier, Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, and Hon. W. W. Magruder, the efficient superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school in that city.

"The Advocate is a good paper, and we ought to help to make it better." The foregoing extract from a letter received from Brother F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., is in the right spirit. Brother Howell is in a position to offer such a suggestion, since he both reads and works for the Advocate.

The Advocate office was honored last Friday with the presence of a number of the brethren whom we delight to see. Among those in the office at one time were Bishop E. D. Mouzon, Dr. J. M. Moore, of Nashville, Tenn., Dr. J. M. Henry, Dr. J. W. Moore, Rev. A. G. Shankle, and Rev. C. C. Selecman.

Rev. J. A. Price, who serves the Bernice (La.) charge, has been panned the second time since Conference. He writes that his people know how to treat a Methodist preacher. Judging by the way they have heaped material blessings upon him, he has reason for making this complimentary assertion.

Rev. R. M. Brown is one of the youngest men in the Louisiana Conference, but his ministry at Boyce is fruitful in results for the Master. He is popular with his people, and most effectively looks after the circulation of the Advocate among them. He has our thanks for a splendid list of names sent in last week.

Rev. A. S. Briscoe, our pastor at the Prairie charge, North Mississippi Conference, favored us with a list of subscribers a few days since. He reports that the people received him cordially, and that they have been unceasing in their kindness. There is no choicer flock than that which it is his good fortune to serve.

We publish this week the first of a monthly series of sermons which it is our purpose to give our readers through the columns of the Advocate. It is our plan to secure these discourses from the preachers of our three patronizing Conferences alternately. The one appearing this week is well worth reading and preserving.

The Mississippi Intercollegiate oratorical contest will be held in Meridian on May 10. Four institutions will compete for the prizes awarded: the State University, the A. and M. College, Millsaps College, and Mississippi College. Millsaps has borne off the honors in these annual contests much more frequently than any one of its rivals.

Rev. H. N. Brown, who has begun his fourth year as pastor at Morgan City, is a wise and efficient leader, and the work is prospering under his administration. A new parsonage will soon be built on a lot adjoining the one on which the present manse stands, and the old parsonage lot will be used as a site for a new church to be erected later.

Mrs. A. F. Watkins, of Hattiesburg, Miss., desires to call the attention of the corresponding secretaries of the missionary auxiliaries in the Seashore District to the fact that Mrs. L. N. Dantzer, of Biloxi, Miss., has consented to serve as district secretary until the annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Society. All communications and reports should be sent to her.

Dr. J. M. Moore, secretary of the Home Department of the General Board of Missions, spent a few days in south Louisiana last week and honored this office with a brief call. He has been looking over this field with a view of strengthening the missionary forces working here. He is interested in our French mission work, particularly in that which is being done at Houma.

Rev. R. H. Wynn, the presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District has announced that Rev. J. O. Bennett has been appointed pastor of the Eunice and Iota charge, and that Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir has been changed to Jennings and Estherwood. Estherwood was formerly a part of the Eunice charge, and Jennings was a station appointment. The new adjustment will doubtless add strength to both charges.

In a letter accompanying a fine list of renewals from the New Albany (Miss.) circuit, Rev. J. A. Goad, the efficient pastor, says: "The most of this list was secured by Brother J. H. Jamieson, one of our faithful laymen." Such a layman is an asset to any charge. If more of the laymen would assist the pastors in advancing the interests of the Conference organ, both the Advocate and the Church would be greatly benefited.

Rev. J. D. Nesom, who last December completed four years of much appreciated service in the half-station charge of Sulphur and Vinton (La.), has entered energetically upon another half-station pastorate at Gueydan and Abbeville, with the promise of success in his new field. It is an excellent recommendation when the people of a charge cling to a pastor until the time limit forces them to relinquish their claim upon him.

The church in Lafayette, La., of which Rev. H. N. Harrison is pastor, is well organized, and has the missionary spirit. The Sunday school, which is superintended by Brother D. P. Upton, will give $100 this year for the equipment of a school in Korea. The Philathea Class, taught by Sister E. R. Kennedy, clothes two orphans and contributes $25 to the missionary special. Brother Harrison is reported to be much pleased with his work.

In a business note to the office, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Sardis, Miss., adds: "In spite of the unusually bad weather, Brother Dorman is out among the preachers, and is making full proof of his ministry. The people up here say that they have the best presiding elder in the Conference." It scarcely needs to be said that Brother Gladney is active in his new field, and that he is looking faithfully after all the interests of the Church.

In renewing her subscription to the Advocate, Sister J. J. Rogers, of Tupelo, Miss., takes time to write a few words commending the paper, for which she has our hearty thanks. It is impossible to conduct a church journal without incurring the displeasure of some people, but though there are thorns in the editorial path, it is also strewn with occasional flowers. There is no one who is not made stronger by the knowledge that his work is appreciated.

We acknowledge the reception of a copy of a printed address to the Mississippi Legislature, entitled, "Compulsory Vaccination Is Unrighteous," by Rev. Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Brother Peebles is a graduate in medicine, and handles his theme in a forceful and impressive manner. Whether one agrees with his conclusions or not, he cannot but admire the earnestness and candor with which the author presents his cause.

Rev. H. T. Carley, of Ellsville, Miss., favored us with a fine list of subscribers from that progressive town a few days since, and declined to take any commission from our regular subscription price of $1.50. It is needless to say that we are grateful to this efficient pastor for his kindness. We trust that the Advocate as it finds its way into the homes of his people will exert a wholesome religious influence, and re-enforce him in his work for the Master.

By request of President M. A. Beeson, we make the following announcement: "The Meridian College revival will begin on March 1, and will be in charge of the Rev. W. Huff, of Sioux City. He is an evangelist of note, a most devout man, and is considered one of the greatest orators in the field of evangelism. We ask the prayers of our friends and all interested for this revival. We also extend a cordial invitation to all to come and be with us during the ten days of this meeting."

Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Arcadia, La., whose resourcefulness as a pastor is well known, suggests a study course in the choice psalms as a means of awakening an interest in the mid-week prayer meeting. In this connection he offers the following suggestions: "Choose the short ones that are easily memorized. Use the blackboard in outline. Give the historical setting, literary figures and gems, and, above all, the devotional and spiritual interpretation. Try this and note the results."

Without publicly assigning any reason for their action, the Hon. J. S. Sexton, of Hazlehurst, and the Hon. I. C. Enochs, of Jackson, resigned a few days ago their places on the Board of Trustees of the educational institutions of Mississippi. There are no more competent men for such service in the State than are they, and their retirement will be very generally regretted. The Governor will find it extremely difficult to fill the vacancies on the Board with two representatives of the strength and fitness of these retiring members.

Rev. L. E. Alford, of Sumrall, Miss., was a pleasant caller at the Advocate office Thursday of last week. He brought his daughter to New Orleans for medical treatment, and was in the city for three or four days. Brother Alford was in fine health and spirits, and spoke most encouragingly of the work in his charge. He was especially complimentary in his remarks concerning his board of stewards, which he said is composed of men who are both competent and faithful. We are pleased to know that this congregation is planning for the erection of a commodious brick church in the near future.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Field Secretary of the Memphis Tri-State Hospital, writes: "I spent Sunday, Feb. 11, with Brother E. H. Cunningham at Myrtle, Miss. The weather was bitter cold, and the town was suffering from a coal shortage; but we had a fair congregation and a sympathetic hearing. The subscriptions for the Hospital amounted to $263, and an effort will be made to increase the contributions to $1000 and give the charge a room in the Hospital bearing its name on the door. I found Brother Cunningham with a good grip on his work, and enjoying the full confidence and affection of his people."

The Huntington Advertiser (West Va.), of February 9, contained a most complimentary account of the meeting in that city which was being conducted by Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La. It stated that large crowds were in attendance upon the services, and that penitents were flocking to the altar at the close of nearly every discourse. It was the general feeling of the community that a great work of grace was being wrought. Brother Harbin's many friends in Louisiana will be pleased to know that God is so wonderfully blessing his labors in the far-away field in which he is now filling some engagements.

We are indebted to Mrs. H. R. Singleton, of New Orleans, for the following important news item: "Beginning on March 12, Mrs. W. F. Barnum, of Fort Worth, Texas, one of the most experienced workers of the Woman's Missionary Council, will conduct a series of institutes within the Louisiana Conference. The following are her dates: Shreveport, March 12-13; Arcadia, March 14; Monroe, March 15; Alexandria, March 17; Lake Charles, March 18-19; Baton Rouge, March 21; New Orleans, March 22. She will be accompanied by one of our Conference officers, and we request all our workers to join in prayer that her tour through the State may be productive of much good."

Bishop E. D. Mouzon has transferred Rev. W. W. Holmes from Monroe, La., to New Orleans, and appointed him associate pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, in which position he will be a co-laborer of Dr. John W. Moore. Practically the whole of Brother Holmes' ministry has been spent in New Orleans, where he has wrought well and made a host of friends, who will be delighted to have him among them again. Rev. C. C. Selecman, who was transferred from the St. Louis Conference last December, will assume control of the pastorate left vacant in Monroe, which is one of the choicest appointments in Louisiana. He is a bright young man, who is admirably equipped for the work of the ministry, and we take pleasure in heartily commending him to his new parishioners.

DEATH OF REV. F. M. WILLIAMS.

My Dear Brother Meek: It is my sad duty to notify you of the passing of a prince in Israel, Rev. F. M. Williams. Brother Williams, after an illness of but seven days, died in great peace, in the 88th year of his age and the 63d year of his ministry. He was attended in his last hours by all of his children, many of his grandchildren, Dr. J. M. Weems of Laurel, and myself. He was buried from the church, in the Waynesboro Cemetery. Dr. W. H. LaPrade, Rev. W. H. Lewis, Dr. J. M. Weems and the pastor officiated. He died at 2:30 o'clock a.m. Friday, Feb. 16. An extended notice will be furnished you in due time.

W. G. FORSYTH.

Waynesboro, Miss.

AN EXPLANATION.

By request, we print the following statement: "The printed minutes of the Louisiana Conference for the year 1911 fail to credit First Church, New Orleans, with the payment of the Conference education assessment, amounting to $132. Dr. Werlein, the former pastor of this church, by an oversight, omitted in his statistical report to give this credit. The amounts for education—educational extension, $50, and education, Conference, $132—were paid to the Conference auditor by Dr. Werlein, and both credits should have been inserted in the latter's report. Dr. Werlein assumes all the blame for the omission, as in the nature of the case the publisher of the minutes, Rev. R. W. Vaughan, did not know that the assessments had been paid in full."

ROBERT CHARLES LYONS was born April 5, 1856, and died January 10, 1912. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church at old Mt. Pleasant, at 18 years of age. Soon afterwards he was made superintendent of the Sunday school and served in that capacity for many years. He loved his church and pastor, and was a great believer in prayer. He was married to Miss Charlotte E. Barnes, January 17, 1878, and eight children were born unto them, seven of whom are living. He was taken sick two years ago with tuberculosis. His last days, though he suffered much, were filled with happiness and joy. The writer visited him often, always found him happy and cheerful, talking of heaven and of home. The Lord granted his prayer and gave him a peaceful hour in which to die. Death was no leap in the dark for him, for he knew in whom he believed, and committed everything into his care. He worked while it was day, and laid down to rest when the night came. May God ever bless his loved ones, that they may gather with him, making an unbroken family around the throne of God.

JAS. M. LEWIS, P. C.

Mrs. SARA JANE KOGER, of Brooksville, Miss., died February 5, 1912. Sister Koger was the daughter of Walter and Ruth Elder, and was born near Dover, Del., September 25, 1827. When but a child her parents moved to Mobile, Ala., where she grew to womanhood. Sister Koger was educated at the Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga. She joined the Franklin Street Methodist Church in Mobile when about 16 years of age. She was married on February 6, 1850, to Rev. T. J. Koger, of the Alabama Conference. He was killed in the battle of Perryville, Ky., thus leaving his wife and five small children. God permitted her to live to see four of her children grow to Christian manhood and womanhood, the fifth died when quite young. She was a woman of the old type. Her will was like iron; her faith in God absolutely unshaken by the wildest storms of sorrow or distress; her love for her church was quiet, unassuming, yet as deeply rooted as her own soul. She knew God through Jesus Christ. She leaves three daughters and one son, not to mourn her loss, but amid their grief to thank God for the heritage of such a mother.

S. L. POPE.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. B. SAUCIER, was born in Harrison County, Miss., August 21, 1835. He was married to Miss Martha Ann Moore, January 1, 1862. Nine children were born of this union, only three of whom are now living to mourn his departure. He died November 26, 1911, and was laid to rest in the family burying ground where six of his children already sleep. He was the son of Roman Catholic parents and remained in that Church for forty-eight years. He was then converted and joined the Methodist Church, and for twenty-eight years was a faithful and devoted member of that Church. He made his home the preacher's home, and, in the struggling days of Methodism in the coast country, many a weary preacher found rest under his roof. I was his pastor for four years, and was often in his home, and loved him very much. He was a devoted husband, a loving father, a true friend. A few years ago, when a Methodist Church was built in his town, he made it his business to see that no shoddy material went into the house; and it will long stand there as a monument to his watchful care. I was with him in his last illness. He talked freely of his future hope, and left the sweet assurance to the sorrowing loved ones of the full assurance of his faith. May the Father of mercies guide each of these loved ones to the city of light, where he waits to welcome them. May it be one united family over there.

G. A. GUICE.

MRS. KATE BRANTLEY AUGUSTUS was born at La Fayette, Chambers County, Ala., April 22, 1842, and fell on sleep at Macon, Miss., Jan. 20, 1912. She was the youngest daughter of Captain Green D. Brantley and Elizabeth Brantley. Her father was a successful planter and a prominent member of the State Legislature of Alabama when she was born. In 1854 the family moved to Vernon, Jackson Parish, La., where she enjoyed a happy girlhood as the pet of a large family, surrounded by the comfort, leisure and refinement that characterized life on a Southern plantation before the war. Inheriting splendid gifts of mind, reared in a well ordered Christian home of culture and educated in the best schools of New Orleans, she naturally developed into a highly accomplished woman. At the close of the war, having lost both parents, she made her home with her sister, Mrs. Anne E. Heard, of New Orleans. And there she enjoyed a life of usefulness in the expression of her talents as the charming presence in a congenial social circle, as a teacher in the Magnolia School, as a contralto voice in the choir of Christ's Church, as a member of the Literary Club of New Orleans, and as a Sunday school teacher in Trinity Church. She was married to Wm. B. Augustus, of Noxubee County, Miss., July 7, 1875, a man of lofty ideals and noble character, eminently useful in Church and State. Her honored husband passed to his reward Sept. 19, 1909. From this union Anne, George, Kate, Paul and Mrs. Gertrude Dent were born. Mrs. Augustus was a woman of rare beauty, gifted in conversation and in song. She delighted in literature and in art. She had that spiritual insight that saw the beautiful and the good in all the handiwork of God. She had no difficulty in discerning between the right and the wrong, and did not hesitate nor fear to speak and act the right, when occasion demanded. She was generous, tender-hearted, and loving to all. Especially did she exhibit the Master's spirit in her ministrations to the unfortunate around her. The true beauty of her character shone in the home; there she was her best and brightest self. Her daily sacrifice and loving spirit came to full fruition as a mother. It was as a mother that she poured upon her children all she had drunk in communion with her Lord. She loved her church, her Bible, her pastor, her family, and, above all, her ever present Savior. More than once she expressed to the writer her willingness and readiness to depart and be with her risen Lord. She said: "Speak no words of praise of me when I am laid away." She was reared in the Episcopal Church, but after her marriage joined the Methodist Church with her husband in Macon, and served God until she was called up to be with the blood-washed throng on high, where she now more fully realizes that faith is the victory that overcomes the world.

Fruit Crops must be Nourished to Yield

Fruit crops take plant foods from your soil just as do cotton, corn, tobacco, wheat, oats, vegetables, rice, sugar cane, peanuts or any other crop. Not only do your trees need fertilizer, but they need the best to be had. You will make no mistake in buying and using

Virginia-Carolina High-Grade Fertilizers

They will give fruit trees just what they are hungering for—that enables them to produce their utmost. Apply 15 or 20 lbs. of these fertilizers per tree—spread around from eighteen inches to two feet away from the tree, according to its size—working them into the soil about the roots. They will wonderfully increase the yield—if the pruning, spraying and cultivation has been properly and carefully done.

Our 1912 Year Book will interest all fruit growers. A copy will be sent free to you upon request. It may help you to pay off a mortgage or buy another farm.

Tidings From the Field

Waynesboro, Miss.

Dear Editor: Our presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Lewis, was with us on February 10 and 11, and held our first quarterly conference at Fedora. He also preached us two soul thrilling sermons. His sermons were seasoned with salt (grace).

In spite of the bad roads and the inclement weather, we had a very good delegation on this occasion. Hebron, Fedora, and Big Rock were represented. The outlook for the new year bids fair to be a good one. We are praying and looking forward to this end, that God will bless and save souls this year in our midst on the Waynesboro circuit.

HILARY WESTBROOK,
Pastor.

Grenada, Miss.

We were given a warm welcome by the good people of Grenada. We were getting a very nice start when I became ill. We have had 13 accessions; received 11 the other night at prayer meeting. I have not preached for over a month. The doctors say I may take up my work again in a week or so. But while I have not been preaching for several Sundays my pulpit has been well and ably filled by Rev. J. R. Counts, the prince of preachers, and by Rev. R. A. Tucker, our presiding elder. Brother Tucker spent the 4th inst., with us. He preached two very fine sermons from the texts, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and, "What will you do with Jesus?" Our people were highly pleased with Bro. Tucker and were delighted with his messages.

J. A. HALL.

Walnut, Miss.

At our Conference last December at Macon, Miss., Bishop Wilson assigned me to the Chalybeate Circuit in the Corinth district.

I arrived here December 10, and found a noble hearted people, who know and love God. We have been well pounded.

Our people certainly know how to bring their preacher under obligations to them. May God help me to be efficient in His name during this year so that many souls will be brought to Christ, and believers edified. We are kept very busy because this is a new charge and the membership is badly scattered. But we are not forgetting the dear old Advocate.

We are enclosing a list of five, with a post office money order to correspond with same. Hope to send in many more soon. Our first quarterly conference was held last Saturday (Feb. 4). Our new presiding elder, Brother J. H. Mitchell, was with us and delivered a great sermon to the instruction and edification of all present, his theme being, "Christ as the Way."

Our quarterly conference was harmonious throughout. The preacher's salary was fixed at $600. To God be all the glory. May He bless the Editor and the many readers of the dear old Advocate.

A. L. DAVENPORT, P. C.

North Carrollton, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Possibly a word from the North Carrollton charge would be of interest to some of the Advocates' many readers.

We arrived here in due time after Conference and were royally received and kindly entertained in the homes of this good people until the arrival of our baggage which came more than a week later. We have a good parsonage, very well furnished throughout. We have been very much hindered in getting hold of the work by the unfavorable weather. Services have been both rained out and frozen out. However, we have made a complete round, and met with some of the good people at each place, and, so far as I have been able to see, the outlook for a good year is encouraging.

I am sorry to say that I have not met with or found the "assistant pastor"—New Orleans Christian Advocate in very many homes. I am surprised! It is a reflection upon any charge or Methodist home not to be acquainted with the Advocate. Everybody here seems to be acquainted with its Editor and proudly say, "Yes, he is from our County."

I want to begin a campaign for the Advocate soon, and hope to introduce it into every Methodist home on my charge.

Our "beloved," Rev. Ben. P. Jacob, has been with us, and preached to the delight of all who heard him. I have married one couple and held three funerals.

May the Lord bless the Advocate and all who read its pages.

W. A. BOWLIN.

Ruston, La.

Our work here is having a steady and substantial development; all of the organizations of the Church are active in good works; the Woman's Missionary Society, in addition to its regular devotional and business meetings, has a monthly literary and social meeting that is largely attended; the "Willing Workers" are constantly active in looking after various local interests of the Church; the Sunday School continues to grow, and we expect to begin the erection of the Sunday school annex in a few weeks; the attendance and interest in both the Epworth Leagues are growing steadily, and new work is being enterprised. Although the weather has been cold, we have had large congregations at the preaching services. Each Sunday morning the pastor preaches to a full house of intelligent, earnest listeners. The twenty-four strong capable business and professional men composing the Board of Stewards have adopted and are successfully carrying out a most excellent financial system, which includes the collecting of the benevolences, weekly contributions, and the monthly payment of salaries. Having always tried to get every member of the Church active in some good work in the belief that the necessary counterpart of worship is service, and that both together are conducive to spiritual growth, the pastor rejoiced to see not only large Church attendance and faithful service, but also evidences of an increasing spirituality, which at last is the heart of the whole matter.

Our presiding elder preached us a great sermon last Sunday evening. He said, "The idea that a presiding elder never makes a new sermon is incorrect; for this one is brand-new."

Our Orphanage, under the able management of Supt. Vaughan, with the assistance of his capable wife as head matron, is doing a great work for the seventy-eight homeless children under its fostering care.

With greetings to all the brethren cordially,
WM. H. COLEMAN,
Pastor Trinity Church.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Under the leadership of Rev. A. J. Gearheard, the pastor, assisted by Brother E. B. Troy, the superintendent, Miss Amanda Towner and other teachers, the McDonoghville Church has opened a mission Sunday school in our Church at Gretna that has been closed the past year. The field is needy, though hard, and we hope for the greatest success to his effort in this "free State of Jefferson."

A Sunday school workers' counsel is held each first Monday night in the parlors of the Parker Memorial Church, and among other things under consideration in this growing church is better Sunday school equipment. We expect nothing else where Brother Ellzey, the former chairman of our Sunday-School Board, is superintendent and Brother Baker, our present chairman, is a worker.

Dr. Wilkinson, of Tulane University, has a Bible class of seventy-five negroes. He is attempting to make of them effective teachers for colored Sunday schools. This is a "teacher training" class that ought to have been organized many years ago and should be duplicated at many places in the South. The negroes believe in religion, the church and the white people, and the thing they most need is teaching. Who has grace, consecration, tact and initiative to do this at other points?

In the recent death of Mrs. Lena Parker, of Monroe, we have lost one of our finest workers, and most exemplary Christians. From a few disorganized members not many months ago to a class of 175 members, doing splendid work, is the record of her "G. R. O. W." Class. Her grief-stricken members are determined to magnify their work as a monument to their departed leader. All walks in life are represented in the class, the manager and entire orchestra of a moving picture show being among the membership. It has a male quartette and a female sextette. Having been associated with her in church work and knowing the purity of her unselfish heart, we too, would lay a white flower of love upon this newly-made grave.

The Executive Committee and the Field Secretaries of the International Sunday School Association have just closed a week's session in New Orleans. This committee consists mostly of laymen, some of whom are men of large means and high rank in the business world and whose best talents, without stint of time or money, are given to the Sunday school cause. One of the things planned at this meeting, was the establishing of a summer school for Sunday school workers at Lake Geneva. A plan was also launched to carry five shiploads of workers, taking different routes to Zurich, Switzerland next year to the world's Sunday school convention. Several magnificent banquets were given by individuals that brought them together in delightful fellowship. The workers filled many of the pulpits on Sunday in New Orleans and the surrounding country.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Mr. Lamb, of Courtland, writes that there are now 70 in his school, and that all are doing good work.

An exchange says: "Its up to the teacher to get boys to Church, its up to the pastor to keep them there."

Rev. E. S. Lewis of West Point has a splendid Sunday school, but is planning an organized class to add to its efficiency.

Rev. A. L. Matheson, Red Bay, Ala., will re-organize his Wesley Adult

Class at an early date, and seek to make it the element of usefulness it should be in church work?

How is your 'teen-age class of boys progressing? Do you give them something definite to do? If not, you cannot imagine what difficult tasks they will undertake, and so cheerfully. Remember with Du Bois, "You must put the whole boy to school and to church"—not just the Sunday morning, for 30-minutes-or-an-hour-part of him. You should help him to consecrate his whole life to the cause of Christ.

The real treasure of Southern Methodism is in her childhood and youth. They are bright and full of life, active and ambitious. They will be at the helm in the State and nation to-morrow, and the chief business of our Sunday school is: (1) To win these boys and girls to Jesus Christ; (2) to train them for Christian service; (3) to send them out to win others to the Master, and to solve the moral and social problems of society. This little vista of our great possibilities should set every Sunday school nerve a tingling to make beautiful Christians of the present and next generations.

Mrs. W. Scales, Jr., Starkville, the accomplished president of our Conference Home Mission Society, has a splendid young men's class of 85. Twenty-six have been "perfect in attendance every since the A. & M. College opened, and from 35 to 60 are present every Sabbath. One member is a Spaniard from South America. This class has a handsome pennant and a fine class spirit. Mrs. Scales entertains them in her home, and is the vital moving spirit of this fine class, as well as a leader in the Home Mission work.

Cartercars are adapted especially for farm use

Simplicity, reliability and easy control make the Cartercar ideal for the country man.

The friction transmission gives any number of speeds. There are no gears. It is quiet, without any waste of power.

You can follow along behind a flock of sheep or drove of cattle, never crowding them in the least—or you can speed around everything in sight.

With the self starter anyone can operate the car easily. The Car-tercar is a great favorite with ladies.

The chain-in-oil drive is the most economical means of transferring power to the rear axle. It is noiseless. The chain runs in a constant oil bath, which prevents wear.

Three strong brakes, full floating rear axle, three-quarter elliptic rear springs, and other excellent features.

Touring Cars, Roadsters, Coupes, from $1200 to $2100. Send for complete information.

SOME MISTAKES.

In looking over the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference of 1912 I find the following mistakes: The Campiti charge is reported as not having paid the presiding elder anything at all, whereas the amount paid him was $60. Probably this mistake was due to my report, as I might have failed to write the amount down. Also on page 7, Question 9, it is stated that I am a deacon of one year, while I am in elders orders and was advanced to the class of the fourth year.

Yours in Christ

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

OBSERVATIONS FROM NORTH LOUISIANA.

On account of the extreme cold weather and the impassable roads, several of the pastors have not been able to meet all their appointments this winter, but in spite of these difficulties some of the preachers have not missed a single service.

The presiding elder of Ruston District, Rev. R. W. Tucker, has begun his fourth and last year with nine prospects. In addition to his marked pulpit ability, he looks after all the interests of the Church. During his three years on the district, it has built and repaired more than 30 churches, and has had hundreds of conversions and additions.

The Ruston church was never more prosperous than it is to-day, under the guidance of that superb Christian gentleman and vigilant pastor, Rev. Wm. H. Coleman. Large congregations attend upon his ministry; $5000 have been raised for an annex to the Sunday school room, to make room for the rapidly growing school.

Rev. Eldred K. Means is beginning his fourth year at Minden with nine success. This is one of the most pleasant and appreciative charges in the Louisiana Conference. Brother Means has had a substantial growth in all departments of church life.

Monroe is delighted with her new pastor. She is planning to erect a larger Sunday school room and social hall for the young peoples' work. Brother W. W. Homes is rapidly winning his way into the homes and hearts of his people. He is a "sui generis" in pastoral work. He does it because he loves to do it. He has begun the issue of a handsome Church Bulletin, containing a fine cut of his church.

The Murrah Men's Bible Class, at Arcadia, held their anniversary banquet on February 2. Rev. W. H. Coleman, State Adult superintendent, was the guest of honor. Addresses were made by Prof. D. G. Lunsford and Major D. M. Atkins. The class will give a banquet every two months.

Several of the pastors are taking their collections for Missions in January. This is the proper time. Our General Mission Board needs the funds. It is about as easy to pay in the early part of the year as at any other time.

Homer is well pleased at the return of their pastor, Rev. A. S. Lutz. He wrought a fine work there last year—raised $1500 on the church debt, held a successful revival, and had growth on other lines. Brother Lutz is one of our strongest preachers and evangelists.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan and his energetic wife are doing heroic work at the Ruston Methodist Orphanage. Everything works with clock-like precision and smoothness. Some of the children are making their way in the High School and Industrial Institute. They are taught domestic science in the orphanage by a competent teacher. Additional children are arriving almost weekly. Let every pastor bring up the Orphanage collection in full this year.

EVERY MONTH NEAR DEATH.

Foster, Ark.—Mrs. Fannie Ellis, of Foster, says: "I was sick for seven years, and half the time could not stand on my feet. Every month, I was very near death. I tried Cardui, and in two months, I was cured, and am now stout and healthy. My friends all ask me now what cured me. No matter how serious or long-standing the trouble, Cardui will help you. It is a mild, vegetable, tonic remedy, especially adapted to relieve and cure the common womanly ailments. It relieves womanly pains and restores womanly strength. Try Cardui.

GO SLOW AND BE SURE

It's wise to decide that you need an engine. But don't spoil your good intentions by buying a cheap one. Don't be blinded by a low price or by wild claims. Go slow and be sure. Buy an engine that has proved its worth, from a concern that has proved its integrity. You can't afford to make a mistake—it's much costlier than the price of an engine.

I H C Gasoline Engines

are in use on thousands of farms throughout the country, running the many farm machines, such as the cream separator, churn, feed grinder, pump, fanning mill, thresher, washing machine, electric light plant, etc. They guarantee you reliable power for every requirement at a surprisingly small cost.

I H C gasoline engines are marvels of simplicity, strength, economy, reliability, and durability. They run steadily and smoothly, year in and year out. They make and save money every time they are used, and if, by accident, you should need repairs, you can get them promptly with little trouble or delay from the I H C dealer in your locality.

Don't you think it would pay you to investigate an I H C engine before you buy any? They are made in so many sizes and styles that you can select just the right size and style for your work: Vertical type—2, 3, 25, and 35-H. P.; horizontal—1 to 50-H. P.; semi-portable—1 to 8-H. P.; portable—1 to 25-H. P.; traction—12 to 45-H. P.; sawing, pumping, spraying, grinding outfits, etc. Built to operate on gas, gasoline, kerosene, distillate, or alcohol—air-cooled or water-cooled. Ask the I H C local dealer for catalogue and all information, or, if you prefer, write direct.

Utterly Wretched

Nervous Prostration Long Endured Before Remedy was Found.

Miss Minerva Reminger, Upper Mer Rouge, La., writes: "For several years I have been in a state of nervous prostration, and was utterly wretched. I lived on bread and butter and tea because my stomach would not retain anything else. I took many remedies, but obtained no relief until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, when I began to gain at once. Am now cured."

Pure, rich blood makes good, strong nerves, and this is why Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies and enriches the blood, cures so many nervous diseases. Get it today in usual liquid form or in chocolate tablets called Sarsatabs.

Wm. H. Coleman, Ruston, La.

Let any pastor desiring the assistance of Brother Turner, or any one of the above, write the chairman of the evangelistic committee, stating date desired.

Let any pastor who will join this evangelistic movement agreeing to give ten days to the work, also write the said chairman. Fraternally yours,

WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

ITEMS FROM PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

The attendance in our college at Port Gibson has been a little better since Christmas than it was before. The enrollment of pupils up to date for the present session has been 134, of whom 87 are in the boarding department. These pupils are from 32 different parishes and counties. The health of our student body has been excellent up to the present time.

During the past two seasons the college herd of Jersey cows has furnished all the milk and butter required for the school. These products are of splendid quality. Our college butter during the summer of 1911 found a ready sale each week at 33 cents per pound. Last summer we fed our cows on kaffir corn and lespedeza hay, or in the language of our negro janitor who assists with the cattle, on "Catholic corn" and "Ebenezer hay."

Recently we have been giving some attention to our pecan trees on the college grounds, transplanting and thinning out where they were too thick. On the college square we have now twenty-eight growing trees, young and old. Six of these bore nuts the present season, and one of them produced five bushels, besides what the students picked up at recesses. These nuts are served in the dining hall two or three times a week as part of our menu. Besides the twenty-eight trees on the college square, there are eighteen pecan trees on the half block at the rear of the college owned by the President of the school. Two of these are bearing, one being a huge trunk with nuts of not very good quality; the others are just beginning to bear nuts of very large fine variety. It is our expectation to have many of the young ones grafted and budded. If this is successful, and if these trees can develop satisfactorily, ten or fifteen years from now they will prove equal to an endowment of several thousand dollars for the institution.

Saturday evening, February 10, the Junior class entertained the Freshman class; and the Primary department gave, on the evening of February 14, the little operetta, Red-Riding Hood's Rescue. Our Lyceum Entertainment course, held at the college this session, consists of four high class entertainments, two of which have already been given, viz: The Parland-Newhall Quartet and Bell Ringers, and the Rounds Ladies Orchestra. These two attractions cost $235.

One of the trustees, Mr. J. T. Drake, of Port Gibson, gave $200 to our Annex fund last fall, and a lady friendly to the cause gave $500 last summer.

This leaves only about $750 indebtedness upon our Annex property, $250 of which is covered by the 1912 assessment of the Mississippi Conference. Our art studio, this week, is being re-floored. The expense of this improvement is being borne by Mrs. Hawkins.

Several of our students of recent sessions hold good positions as teachers, and several of the present Senior Class (ten in number) expect to teach. We ask for the sympathy and co-operation of all who are interested in the woman-hood of the land, to the end that our girls may go out to be a blessing and a help in society.

H. G. HAWKINS.
Port Gibson, Miss., Feb. 15, 1912.

FROM THE WINONA DISTRICT.

Dear Brother Meek: Please announce in the Advocate that the Winona District Conference will be held at Kilmichael, Miss., May 1-3.

We are going right on with our work in the old-time way of this grand district, where so many noble people serve God. T. J. Halfacre is busy and happy at Kilmichael, with the splendid co-operation of his intelligent people, who advanced the assessment materially. This is also true of W. V. Shearer at Mars Hill, whose salary was increased about 50 per cent. The most exceptional thing yet, was the making of so liberal an assessment for J. W. Roper at Ruleville, and the payment of $500 or more at the first Quarterly Conference. Dr. J. W. Price had the best Conference for years at Tutwiler. He has begun revival work already.

Bro. W. M. Campbell with characteristic zeal and tact is cultivating thoroughly his field at Minter City. His many friends will be rejoiced to hear that, although Bro. J. A. Townes has been feeble this winter, he is very much improved now. No man among us surpasses Rev. A. L. Pope at Itta Bena for constant, painstaking, and successful work. His new church is going steadily on toward completion. He has also kindled the revival fire. Bro. Thomas was with us in Bro. W. A. Bowlin's Quarterly Conference yesterday, and by his good humor, insight, and forceful talks added much to the occasion. Bro. Shaws' activity on the Winona Circuit will soon yield much fruit.

BEN P. JACO.

SIX PAMPHLETS IN TITHING FREE.

I hereby offer to send without charge, postage paid, a package of six pamphlets on tithing, three of them new, to all ministers, church officers, and Sunday school teachers; also to all members of missionary societies, Christian endeavor societies and kindred organizations who will write for them during the months of February and March, 1912. Most of these pamphlets are written from the financial standpoint. The author believes that tithing pays; that it furnishes more money for the spread of Christ's Kingdom than it is possible to obtain by any other method; that it pays the Church in its temporal interests and in spiritual blessings, and pays the tithers themselves in personal happiness and financial prosperity. All orders must be personal. Requests to send pamphlets to others are not included in this offer. This literature is not published for personal profit. The writer believes in tithing and this offer is made in the hope of inducing others to study the object especially from the dollars-and-cents standpoint. It is absolutely necessary that you mention the paper in which you see this offer.

The Best Cough Syrup is Easily Made at Home

Costs Little and Acts Quickly.
Money Refunded if It Fails.

This recipe makes a pint of cough syrup, and saves you about $2.00 as compared with ordinary cough remedies. It stops obstinate coughs—even whooping cough—in a hurry, and is splendid for sore lungs, asthma, croup, hoarseness and other throat troubles.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours. Tastes good.

This takes right hold of a cough and gives almost instant relief. It stimulates the appetite, and is slightly laxative—both excellent features.

Pinex, as perhaps you know, is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and the other natural healing pine elements.

No other preparation will do the work of Pinex in this recipe, although strained honey can be used instead of the sugar syrup, if desired.

Thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada now use this Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe. This plan has often been imitated, but the old successful formula has never been equaled. Its low cost and quick results have made it immensely popular.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SOME VICKSBURG REMINISCENCES.

Dear Doctor Meek: Will you give me space in your paper to write of a visit I made to Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., as I was on my way home from the late session of the Louisiana Conference? After my stay in New Orleans, I visited relatives in the Hill City. On Sunday morning, December 10, I attended services in the Crawford Street Methodist Church, and had the pleasure of listening to Dr. I. W. Cooper, who occupied the pulpit in the absence of the pastor. It is needless to say that the sermon was both interesting and instructive.

But as I sat and listened to the Doctor in that modern building, with the light streaming in through the pretty stained-glass windows, my thoughts wandered back to the old church building around which clusters so many memories precious to me, of the days gone by, then, just upon the threshold of young manhood, I united with the Methodist Church during the pastorate of Rev. C. B. Galloway, afterwards our beloved Bishop. It was in the old building that I was recommended for the ministry, and licensed to preach. There I was also recommended to the Mississippi Annual Conference for admission on trial. How great have been the changes since those days! My heart was sad as I looked over the congregation and missed so many among them. Dr. C. K. Marshall, the grand yet genial Christian gentleman and minister, the friend of young men and Thos. Mount and W. G. Paxton, who wrought so efficiently as Sunday school superintendents—but space would not be granted me to write of a host of others who were associated together in Sunday school and church work when we met in the old church building. As long as memory holds sway, I shall not cease to be thoughtful for the inspiration and impetus I received there to help me in the Christian life and work. By the grace of God, I want to meet them some day in the Eternal City. After lingering among those scenes of my boyhood days, I started homeward, bound for Southwest Louisiana, where the harvest is white, and where, by appointment of the "powers that be", I am expected to do my best this year to persuade men to be reconciled to God. And so I expect to do, the Lord being my helper.

H. B. VANDENBURG.

Church Point, La.

AN IMPORTANT EXPLANATION.

In connection with the "Financial Methods for Methodists" in the "Every-member Canvass" under the management of the Laysmen's Missionary Movement, a duplex envelope is used for making weekly contributions. The right-hand end of this envelope has upon it four blank spaces in which to set down the amounts contributed each week to four great causes of the Church. They are Foreign Missions, Home and Conference Missions, Church Extension, and Education. It is of great importance to understand what "Education" is here referred to. The annual conferences all take collections for two sets of educational interests, namely: those for which the annual conference assessments are made, and those for which the General Conference assessments are made. It is intended that the contribution made weekly through the duplex envelope shall be for Conference and General Conference education combined, and the whole amount thus collected to be divided pro rata.

This explanation is necessary because several of the Annual Conferences separate the annual conference assessments for education from that of the General Conference. Where this is done, to use the duplex envelope for raising either one of the assessments alone, would doubtless work an unfair discrimination against the other.

STONEWALL ANDERSON,
Secretary of Education.

Mrs. ELIZABETH (WEEVER) RYE, the oldest and one of the first members of Antioch Church, Smithville Circuit (Mississippi), passed to her heavenly reward, January 1, 1912. Sister Rye, "grandma," as she was familiarly called, was born on the line of North and South Carolina March 4, 1819, and in childhood removed with her parents into Georgia, where they resided two years, thence to Mississippi and settled on Weever's Creek, in Monroe County, where she spent the remainder of her long and eventful life—92 years, 9 months, 26 days. She was happily married to W. D. Rye, February 3, 1842, to whom were born five sons and four daughters, three of whom, with the father, who died in 1863, preceded her to the spirit-world (a widow 49 years.) Sister Rye was born in a Methodist family. Her grandfather, several uncles, one son, two grandsons, and a nephew were Methodist preachers. She assumed the vows of the Church, and Christianity in early life, at Antioch, under the ministry of Rev. Hopkins and Rev. Box. It was my pleasure, as pastor, to attend the anniversary of her ninety-second birthday, when she related to me some interesting incidents of early life and pioneer Methodism which was the first and only Church, for a long time, to evangelize that country. Her home was always open to the preachers, where many an itinerant has found shelter and rest. "Grandma's" last illness and suffering was short, and the end triumphant. Her mind was clear, and she sang and talked of heaven and, with seeming impatience at times, would say, "Why don't the Lord call me?" Her declining years were blessed with watchful care and tender nursing by her only maiden daughter, Miss Martha, who was with her to the end. Funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. M. Young, and her remains laid to rest at New Hope Cemetery, there to await the resurrection morning. Three sons, three daughters, and a host of relatives and friends are left to mourn. But they have the assurance that she is at rest.

—W. A. BOWLIN.

WILLIAM TOWN, a native of Kent, England, was born July 22, 1821. When about 12 years of age he came to New Orleans, La., and later to Bayou Sara, La. Here and in St. Francisville he labored and lived a long and most useful life. His Scotch-Irish wit always gave animation and expression to everything he said. He was a well informed man. The New Orleans Christian Advocate came to his home for about fifty years. The Advocate, the Christian Herald and the Bible were perfect love letters to him. He imbibed their spirit until one would almost think as he prayed that he was reading a portion of the Bible or some doctrinal book. He was a noble citizen; he served four years during the civil war; was a true Mason for over sixty years, and, at his death, was the oldest member of the Masonic Lodge of the State of Louisiana. He filled all the layman's positions in his local church with great credit. He attended Sunday school regularly to within a month of his death, which occurred on Nov. 29, 1911. While his body was being interred at Grace cemetery, St. Francisville, La., by the rites of the Church and Masonic body, his spirit was with God and his devoted wife, who had preceded him fourteen years before. Truthfully may we say, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth." There survive him three sons and two daughters: Wm. M. Town, of Mansfield, La.; Geo. Town, of Crowley, La.; Thos. Town, St. Francisville, La., and Misses Hannah and Mary Town, who so devotedly rendered every attention possible to their father to the close of his life. In the death of Brother Town the country has lost a great man, the church a devout Christian and his loved ones a most affectionate and good father. His home was always bountifully supplied both with material and spiritual things. May his memory ever be cherished and his example emulated by his posterity.

NORTHEAST MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

Rev. H. M. Ellis has been through this territory recently campaigning for the Tri-State Methodist hospital at Memphis. The Pott's Camp charge will furnish a room in the hospital, raising $1000 for same, it is thought, and already several pledges have been secured with that end in view. Dr. Ellis filled the pulpit, morning and night, at Myrtle last Sunday, the 11th inst., and was given a splendid hearing and opened the eyes of the people. Myrtle, too, will help along this worthy cause.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Corinth District, is well pleased with his new location. The district parsonage has been moved from Booneville to Corinth, which is much more convenient for the presiding elder. The district parsonage is a beautiful piece of property and is well located.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Booneville, recently held some week-time services for the young men, and gave them deep and helpful sermons, which all seemed to enjoy and appreciate.

Rev. J. H. Holder, of Okolona, was active recently among his people in the interest of the temperance movement of the Anti-Saloon League, and saw that the Legislature, now in session, heard from the good people of Okolona in regard to the liquor traffic in our State.

Brother Porter, of the Hickory Flat charge, has recently been confined to his home on account of the mumps, but is about again and progressing finely with his work.

Rev. R. M. Evans, of the Second church at Corinth, uses the city papers to announce his themes and plans, and is building up the interests of his church. He is loved by his people.

Plans are now being made for the various Sunday school country associations which are to meet in spring and summer in these parts.

FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT.

Between science and religion there is a fundamental difference. The one is a discovery, the other a revelation; the origin of the one is human, that of the other divine; the one has been built up slowly by the fallible finite reason, the other is a disclosure made by the Omniscient Mind, full-orbed and complete. The fact that God took centuries to unfold fully his revelation to mankind may seem to conflict with this position, but in reality it does not. A people had to be raised up who were capable of receiving the Lord's message and embodying it in language, that it might be preserved and transmitted to succeeding generations until the end of time. But there were no errors in God's teaching in any age; revelation did not progress, as science has done, by finding out its mistakes and discarding old things for the new. The religion of the Bible in its fundamental principles has been one and the same in all the dispensations and centuries. The relation of Judaism to Christianity is not that of a new and different plant crowding out an old one, with which it has little or no connection, and taking possession of the soil whereon it grew. It is rather that of the stock of the vine to the outstretching branches, or that of the bud to the flower. Jesus said, "I am come not to destroy, but to fulfill." He proclaimed no new doctrines, but merely amplified and enriched those already in existence. He opened up to men not a different, but a fuller and clearer vision.

When God spoke to the world through his Son, he gave to it his complete and final message. The writers of the New Testament were only the inspired chroniclers and interpreters of that wonderful communication from the Heavenly Father. When they fell asleep the Canon of Revelation was closed. There was no more to follow. The Holy Spirit comes not to make additional disclosures of truth, but to illumine, to vitalize, and to make efficacious that which we already have. The pretended later revelations do not even rise to the dignity of good counterfeits of the message that has been given us from above. Mohammedanism, Mormonism, Eddyism, and all the other modern isms are of the earth, earthy, with the marks of their human parentage plainly stamped upon them.

This essential difference between science and the Christian religion needs to be recognized in this day. As the imperfect creation of the feeble and blundering human intellect, science must continue to change as the knowledge of mankind increases. Doubtless it will ever be going on toward perfection as long as the human race exists upon the planet. But the Gospel of Christ is incapable of being improved upon. In the more than nineteen hundred years of its history, not a single new religious truth of consequence has been added to those set forth in its pages. We know no more of the plan of salvation than the early disciples knew, nor are we producing better Christians now than those of the apostolic period.

To be sure, erroneous interpretations of some parts of the Scriptures have sprung up from time to time, and later have been exposed and abandoned; but in every period of history there have been those who had as clear an understanding of the essential things in the written Word of God as we have in this age. Who doubts that God, if he so desired, could give us in a volume an explanation of the laws, forces, and phenomena of nature so full and perfect that no new scientific discovery would be possible? Such an unfolding of moral and spiritual truth is what he has given us in the Book of Holy Writ.

It is not our duty as the representatives of Christ in the world to seek to bring to light some new religious teaching, but to carry to all the peoples of the globe the old, old story of the Cross. Not the improvement, but the extension, of the Christian religion is our mission. Its full and universal acceptance would lift the race to the summit of its possibilities. It would leave nothing else to be desired except the final translation of the millions of mankind to their imperishable home in the skies.

HOSTILITY AT THE HUB.

In the last issue of the Christian Advocate, Dr. Ivey utters some very plain and much needed words concerning the attitude of Nashville towards Methodism as there represented by her great and growing connectional enterprises. The most recent manifestation of hostility seems to be from the banks of the city, which have entered an agreement to withhold their advertising from our publications, as well as those of other religious organizations having their domicile at Nashville. The reason for this boycott is not stated by Dr. Ivey, but it is not improbable that the liquor interests had enough power to control the banks, the violent antagonism of the former being aroused, as a matter of course, by the attitude of the church press in the Tennessee liquor fights.

The position taken by the Nashville banks in this matter amazes us, for banks are usually directed by men of too much sagacity to admit of their being drawn into any such folly. Can it be possible that the banks of Nashville have forgotten the panic of 1893, and the long lines of depositors demanding their money, lines extending from the tellers' windows far out into the streets? Can they so soon forget the figure of Dr. Barbee as he walked up and down those lines, exhorting them not to withdraw their deposits and attesting his own faith by daily depositing the money of Methodism which had been placed in his care? The moral value of his example would be difficult to estimate. And Samuel J. Keith would remember it, but he, too, has passed over the river.

Periodical attempts have been made to mulct the Church for taxes despite the fact that the Constitution of Tennessee exempts the Church; and in recent years it was only saved from this penalty by virtue of the presence on the Supreme Court of that State of Judge John S. Wilkes who was both a great judge and a devoted Methodist.

It seems proper to inquire: what injury has Methodism wrought to Nashville? Has it cost the banks or any other institution of that city or of the State of Tennessee a single farthing? Has it not upon the other hand contributed largely to the prosperity of all interests? Who can estimate the importance of the intellectual and moral deposit which Methodism has made in Nashville? And who will be bold enough to undertake to state the significance of the wave upon wave of young life annually cast upon the city of Nashville through the energy of Methodism?

But, after all, it is gratifying to reflect that Methodism is not bound to Nashville as was Ixion to his wheel. Her headquarters, like her men, are movable. She would not have to leave the State of Tennessee to find at least two cities that would give her a warm welcome; and we venture to say that there are a dozen other cities in the South that would welcome her with wide-open arms, and some of them would pay a large bonus to secure the location of such valuable enterprises.

We take the liberty of inviting the General Conference to remove the headquarters of the Church to New Orleans, the most romantic city in the Union, the gateway to the Panama Canal, and rich in Methodist history. Here, at least, the Church would be located in a city and a State that believe in the Church owning what it has, and which would tolerate no suggestion of penalizing her possessions.

A BRILLIANT ADDRESS.

The address at the Forum last Sunday afternoon was delivered by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, the distinguished pastor of the famous Plymouth Church of Brooklyn, New York. The audience that assembled to hear the noted speaker overflowed the spacious hall of the Progressive Union, and many stood throughout the entire speech which was more than an hour in length. Dr. Hillis' theme was "America, To-day and Tomorrow," and though the subject was a trite one, he handled it in a manner most striking and original. There was not in it a single spread-eagle platitude, but it was pointed, practical, and informing, and evinced a knowledge of the history, geography, and topography of the United States and other countries that was both accurate and comprehensive. It was optimistic in every note, and interspersed with a wit that frequently evoked enthusiastic applause. It was convincingly argued by the lecturer that the Panama Canal will shift the world's commercial center of gravity to the Western Hemisphere, and that the Southern States will be the chief beneficiaries of this change.

The personal appearance of Dr. Hillis is pleasing and impressive. He is fifty-three years of age, somewhat above medium height, fairly stout, and has a well proportioned head, covered with a thick suit of hair, streaked with gray. He has bright eyes, and a baritone voice of somewhat more than ordinary compass. At times, his enunciation is indistinct, though he can usually be understood without difficulty. A gentleman who had heard Beecher, after the lecture was over, remarked that Dr. Hillis has none of the distinguishing characteristics of his illustrious predecessor in the Plymouth pulpit, except his humor; that the ringing voice, the graceful gestures, and the polished periods that gave Beecher world-wide fame are all lacking. Yet Dr. Hillis is an uncommon man and has platform ability of a very high order. He has a marked individuality, and easily ranks as one of the first preachers of the nation.

THE LOGIC IN THE GOSPEL IS THE FORCE OF FACTS.

Bishop John C. Kilgo.

Doctor Meek, the strong editor of the New Orleans Advocate, has a very apt and direct way of dealing with questions of vital worth, and in a recent issue of that excellent paper gave his readers this striking editorial paragraph.

"The test of any teaching is its fruit—what it accomplishes. The higher critics claim that they have made the Bible a new book. This theoretical contention sounds well, but what great revivalists do these gentlemen number in their school? How many people have they led to Christ and into the Church? If they have poured such a flood of light upon the sacred writings, as they insist they have, surely these writings, thus illuminated, should prove more effective in impressing and reaching men when expounded from the pulpit. A sound theology must be a workable theology—it must produce results. Where are the triumphs of higher criticism in the field of actual service? If it has any such credentials, it is high time its votaries were bringing them forward. It sadly needs something else to sustain it besides oracular assumptions of scholarship."

That really brings the whole matter of new, or supposedly new, notions, doctrines, and schemes into court and tests them by the standard which Christ announced when He said, "Wisdom is justified of her children." For the followers of Christ this is the final rule of judgment, and while it is a stern law, it is a fair and a safe law. The simplest of saints, having regard for it need not be led astray by the subtlest sophistry, nor need the most vigorous mind fear to investigate any worthy realm of human study. Besides, it is really the test employed in the so-called "scientific method," a method that keeps close to facts and demands demonstrations instead of resting in vague postulations. But it is amazing that those who are most boastful of science and "scientific methods" in practice show least fidelity to them, using a "perhaps" with the assurance of a fact, and resenting with impatience even a mild suggestion that there is a difference between obvious certainty and obscure conjecture.

Mr. Lincoln became at one time annoyed with the inactivity of General McClellan and gave him to understand what the nation wished was victories, not endless preparations and laborious explanations. A military science that never drew an army in line of battle or swept the field of an enemy may have good rank in academic circles, but it has no claim to the respect of an invaded nation. Nothing under such circumstances will satisfy except vigorous fighting. Such conditions demand deeds, men who can do things and who will do them. And the convincing proof of their plans will be found in the results of their efforts.

The theology that makes God real, that keeps the cross of Christ within view of penitent souls, that creates a sense of sin, that stirs the spirits of men with moral condemnation, that drives the convicted sinner with broken heart to God, that regenerates the soul, and keeps up a deepening fellowship with the Father and His Son, Jesus Christ, carries its own proofs and needs not the seal of scholastic ratification. The theology that brought Abel to the altar as a true worshipper still speaks, though it is as old as the first family of the human race. And the truth which stopped young Saul in the way and made of him the revolutionizing Apostle to the Gentiles is too well established in the course of history to need revising at the hands of men who would not know what to tell a mourner in Zion if they should come upon one.

Common observation of the disposition and the deeds of those who busy themselves most to revise theology, especially to scorn what is called by them "traditional theology," is sufficient evidence that earnest men do not need their teachings. There is no evidence in them that it creates a deeper hungering for righteousness, a profounder reverence for holy things, a greater passion for the salvation of sinners, a more unselfish devotion to God, a more earnest spirit of prayer, a deeper insight into spiritual truths, and a mightier power in preaching the gospel of the Son of God. A noted German scholar was compelled by simple facts to say, "The traditionalists have one thing we have not, and that is power." And so they have and always have had. The Holy Ghost has always spoken through a ministry that has preached the gospel as it is recorded in Holy Scriptures. It is scarcely to be expected that He would inspire men to state truth which in these last times He inspires scholars to repudiate, directing His administration in the twentieth century to the correction of errors He inspired in the first century.

Mr. Wesley, in the examination of his preachers, was particular to inquire into the effects of their preaching whether men were convinced of sin and converted to God. And, as Methodist people, we should strictly follow this gospel method, admitting no doctrine that has not the credentials of saving power upon it. To undertake to hide a fruitless ministry behind a display of learning, of wealth, of impressive forms, of attractive services, of leading music, of advanced theology, and vulgar boast of broadness will neither deceive sinners nor mislead saints. John the Baptist, in his rude raiment turning the land upside down, stirring the consciences of hypocrites, and awakening a spirit of repentance among the multitudes, was worth vastly more than all the fine little priests who loafed about the temple in Jerusalem and discussed questions of law and propriety. And we well know that the gospel of our fathers saved men, hundreds of thousands of men; and we also equally know that the vagaries of modern speculators do not save men, therefore, by the power of God let us be steadfast in a proven faith and earnest in preaching the doctrines that have led men to God.—From the Southern Christian Advocate.

"A NAME THAT NEVER GROWS OLD."

"Far away in dark Africa a native Bible woman was out on a missionary journey in the uplands. One day she met a company of natives whom she judged were heathen, and asked them where they were going. A woman, answering from the company, said they were going to a Christian service to hear the 'Name that never grows old.' She said she had heard it many years before, from one of the missionaries sent by the American Board; that she had heard it ever since, and that it never grew old!"

It matters not where the experienced Christian may live; it matters not what the color of his skin may be, nor the consistency of his hair; nor the thickness of his lips; it matters not whether he be American, African, Asiatic or European, if he has heard "the name that never grows old," he has heard the sweetest sound that can ever greet mortal ear.

This is the omnipresent name, the everlasting name. It shall live when the sun shall die, when stars shall fade and nature shall perish.

It is as blessed to people of culture in civilized lands as to untutored natives in the dark recesses of Africa.

This is the name that Christians are obligated to make known everywhere, even to those "sitting in darkness, and in the region of the shadow of death."

It is a name that has already accomplished wonders, and will accomplish more.

"Jesus, the name high over all
In hell or earth or sky;
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils' fear and fly."

Whence the power of this name? Who lifts it above the name of Socrates or Zoroaster, as the power to expel evil, exalt in goodness, and charm the soul with sweet assurances of blessing and of peace?

Who makes it the day-star that "lights up with unearthly luster the painful and cruel deaths of a great multitude which no man can murder?"

Who causes it to charm even the skeptical mind, until a Renan is heard to describe the character it represents as "the purest among the mighty and the mightiest among the pure," "the incomparable man," "without whom all history is incomprehensible, to whom every one of us owes all that is best within himself," and who "has advanced religion as none other has done, or probably ever shall do," until a Strauss recognizes "a beautiful nature from the first, which only needed to develop out of itself" (but whence that nature from the first?); until a Mill confesses the "unique figure, not more unlike his predecessors than his followers, even those who had the direct benefit of his personal teaching," and declares that neither the first apostles nor St. John "was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or of imagining such a life and character;" and until Goethe owns the four gospels of Jesus as unquestionably genuine, for there is in them the reflection of a majesty, radiating from the person of this divine man.

"If I am asked," he says, "whether it is my nature to pay him reverential homage, I answer, Undoubtedly. I bow before him as a divine revelation of the highest principles of morality."

Whence, we inquire, the power of this name and character? How is it that the religion of Christ established lives, on in cumulative grandeur through the roll of advancing years? Why does its strength not decline, its light not go out?

"Where are the religions of Egypt, Babylon and Tyre? They are dead; they are buried in somber and profound sepulchers. It is seldom that a lonely student spells out painfully the inscription upon the walls of their funeral vaults.

"Where is the bright and romantic religion of Greece and Rome? This also is dead, the sweetest poetry could only embalm it; we gaze upon the fair features, but there is no voice nor any to answer us—'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more."

"And if the religions of the East live on, they are bed-ridden, blind, paralyzed, and imbecile, and only serve to emphasize the difference between senility and eternal youth.

"But where is the religion of Judea? It lives, transmuted and exalted above its former self; its temples overtop our proudest palaces; its narrow intolerance has been shaken off, like the husk of a chrysalis from the winged and lovely creature whose flight is to be henceforth unfettered as the winds."

What, but an influence from heaven, a might like that which holds the universe in its order, could give to any system such sway over the minds and consciences of all enlightened peoples as Christianity holds?

It is the energy of the Infinite displaying itself in the grandest scheme for human uplifting that mind could devise. The Father conceived this holy plan for the redemption of his fallen creatures; Christ executed it, gladly, perfectly, gloriously; and the Holy Ghost is crowning the proclamation of it with the sanction of his own presence and power.

Sometimes the horizon of the church seems to darken; the future looks portentous; errors appear to be in the ascendant; misunderstanding, hatred, scorn and blasphemy, hold a momentary sway; the eternal Son of God seems crucified afresh, and more successfully crushed than when on Mount Calvary he died; but the majesty and power of the gospel soon break through the dread eclipse, souls cry out for pardon, for the hope and cheer and consolation which only Christ can give, and then the "old, old story of Jesus and his love" regains its hold upon believing hearts.

Christ is beloved. Great men are venerated for what they have done, but Christ is loved for what he is. He is the Sovereign Lord of hearts, and holds in unflinching steadiness the love of all who know him.

And he is, and ever shall be, adored. Temples rise to his name in endless succession on every shore. The purest saints repeat it; children lip it; savages learn it, and with it learn to live and love as did the great Exemplar. The name of Jesus is the one name that shall live when time shall be no longer; it is the talisman of spiritual progress among all coming generations, and the shibboleth of all holy people throughout the eternal ages.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

CONQUERING FORCES OF THE KINGDOM.

Bishop Mouzon has reflected honor upon himself, and brought the Church under lasting obligations to him by contributing to modern literature the biography of the late Bishop Seth Ward, of sacred memory, and including in the same volume fourteen of the deceased Bishop's best sermons.

The author of this admirable volume states in his preface that what actuated him to give to the Church these sermons was a persuasion that they are well worth printing and reading. I am sure that any one who is at all appreciative of clear expositions of the Scripture and a terse development of sermon topics will concur in the author's verdict of the value of these discourses.

The sermon styled "The Conquering Forces of the Kingdom," from which the volume gets its title, is indeed a masterpiece. In the introduction of this sermon, the preacher transports himself to the rocky pits of the Isle of Patmos and intimately associates himself with the exiled Seer who wrote the Apocalypse. He graphically portrays the vision of contending armies, in which Death, Hell, the False Prophet, the Beast, the Dragon, and Babylon were all arrayed against the Lamb and his followers; which vision the Seer beheld with bated breath till the black horse, on which rode the commander-in-chief of the forces of darkness, came down on his haunches and his rider bit the dust; and the Lamb that was slain became the conquering Lion of the tribe of Juda, plumed and mailed, and stood on Mount Zion crowned with all power and great glory, while Babylon suffered utter destruction and the Beast and False Prophet were consigned to eternal torment.

The preacher then recounts the forces by which the followers of the Lamb overcome the powers of darkness, and make their way to an eternal throne in the city of God, where they shall reign as priests and kings with the Captain of their salvation. These forces are not the might of man, or the power of worldly wisdom, but "The blood of the Lamb," "The word of their testimony," and unselfish living. ("They loved not their lives unto death."—Rev. 12:11.)

Should I attempt to discriminate in favor of any of the other thirteen sermons recorded in this book, I think I would give preference to "The Armor of Light," "The Christian Ministry," and "The Greatness of Service."

It is interesting to study the ancestry, nativity, boyhood, conversion, and call to the ministry of the good Bishop, and to follow him in his active ministry from his first pastorate, the West Corsicana Circuit, in the West Texas Conference, in 1882, to his election to the bishopric in Birmingham, Alabama, in 1906; and to note how he magnified and adorned the episcopal office from the time of his consecration till he doffed the episcopal robe to don the priestly mitre. But that which is most interesting and attractive to me is the fortitude with which he endured the sufferings attending his last illness in Kobe, Japan, and the hallowing effect of his patience in suffering and his glorious ascension, on the heathen nurse, Miss Kasawara, who kindly ministered to him till his spirit went home to be with God, and who then turned away to weep over the death of a man who died as she had never before seen a man die. When, three months later, she was relieved into the Methodist Church in Kobe, by the Rev. M. Hori, she testified that Bishop Ward led her to Christ. Dr. S. E. Hager said that, though the good Bishop's mind was badly deranged before his demise, he never uttered a word that would have shocked the modesty of the most refined woman. In none of his early or later life had the Bishop hung on the walls of his memory obscene pictures that would beget evil thoughts and provoke vulgar words.

I would commend his example to our boys and young men as worthy of duplication in their own lives. Surely no one at all sensitive to the helpful influences of a good book can read the "Conquering Forces of the Kingdom," so ably edited by our beloved Bishop Mouzon, without being benefited.

TRANSMITTING POWER.

By Rev. Hilary Westbrook.

Spiritual power is for use in service; grace is given that it may be transmitted. First comes the experience, then the testimony; first character, and then service. The fig tree was cursed because it appropriated what was given for transmission.

The only way to keep religion is to live it and give it. The saints of all ages have testified to the Lord Jesus, as being man's hope of redemption. I find from a close survey of the blessed old Book (The Bible) that the gift of Pentecost was a gift of speech. Fire is the soul of eloquence. And the glowing heart inspires effective utterance. They carried the Gospel of the Savior into the streets, and called upon all men everywhere to repent. They took it to the cripple at the gate of the Temple, and gave him strength. They stood before the rulers and preached Jesus unto them. At this time the Church was attractive and aggressive. The Master added to them day by day, such as should be saved.

For there is no other name whereby we must be saved.

Jesus! the name that charms our fears,
That bids our sorrows cease;
'Tis music in the sinner's ears,
'Tis life and health and peace.

When addition ceases, decline begins. I believe that sterility is the surest way to extinction. The early disciples did not pray for another Pentecost—they lived and worked out the power that they had received. This power is not a material gift, but a spiritual gift within the soul; it is a well of water springing up unto eternal life. There is only one baptism and many fillings, in which life and work find themselves fulfilled.

Thomas Hood, when asked by a sour-visaged church member if he did not wish to be a Christian, replied, "If it means feeling as you look, no, I don't." My dear Christian friends, you plainly see that if we would win souls to Christ in this present generation, we must guard against what the public calls a long-faced religion. The religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ dispels despondency in our Christian pilgrimage. It gladdens the heart, and puts a shine upon the face and a shout of triumph in the soul as nothing else will or can do.

I find that this power gives us a buoyant spirit to enter into the harvest fields of the Master. I suspect the Church member that asked Thomas Hood about being a Christian was on the wrong side of Pentecost. Let us see to it that we are on the right side always.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF WESLEY.

The further the world gets away from the days of Wesley, the nearer Wesley gets to the world. He looms higher and higher all the while. Not since the days of Paul has there arisen a more apostolic man, or a man whose heart was fuller of Christian charity. Certainly none has surpassed him in holy zeal, and none have been more successful in winning souls to Christ. There seems to be no end to the making of books devoted to Wesley and his work. An intelligent and progressive Sunday school superintendent in a letter to me a few weeks since said that he was "deeply interested" in the Life of Wesley which he was reading—that he "read everything about Wesley" that came in his way, and never got tired. This man is but one of a great company who know how to appreciate a world's benefactor.

How many biographies of Wesley have been written I do not know—they are legion. One of the latest, though not technically a biography, is Studies in the Life of John Wesley, by Dr. E. B. Chappell, Sunday School Editor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is one of the books of the Methodist Founders' Series, edited by Bishop W. A. Candler—a series designed to give our young people a knowledge of their Church, its doctrines, polity and history, and its makers.

The book is a unique bit of Wesleyana, in that while it does not purport to be a "complete biography," the "studies are so arranged as to give the main outlines and the striking features of Mr. Wesley's marvelous career." The book is fascinating from beginning to end, and it not only gives and holds the sympathy of the reader, but forces him to accept the author's conclusion, viz: that Wesley was the greatest man of his day, and among the foremost of the great men of the world. This conclusion Dr. Chappell reached notwithstanding a few defects which are pointed out and frankly discussed. Even those, who are wont to regard Mr. Wesley as perfect, will admit the fairness of Dr. Chappell's "Studies."

I feel sure that all who read the book will thank Dr. Chappell, and, when through, will lay it aside with greatly enhanced views of the founder of Methodism, who in my humble judgment was second only to the great apostle of the Gentiles—a man wonderfully used of God for the revival of Evangelical religion, and "who being dead yet speaketh." I advise every Methodist who desires to know more of Wesley and his work, to get the book and read it.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

At the Annual Conference held in New Orleans, in December last, it was recommended by the Sunday School Board that December 24, be made a special day for missionary work in our Sunday schools, the collections of that day to be used by the Sunday School Board for the needy schools of the State and to pay the salary of the Sunday School Missionary, Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Up to this time only 18 schools have sent their collections to the treasurer.

The schools reporting are as follows: Alexandria, $3.55; Lake Providence, $1.50; Montgomery, $3.30; West Monroe, $1.00; Rochelle, $1.70; Mary Werlein Mission, $1.80; Ponchatoula, $6.20; Parker Memorial, $5.50; Eunice, $1.61; Benton, $2.00; Berwick, $4.55; Bernice, $2.75; Bastrop, $2.50; Minden, $3.84; Pioneer, $2.00; Hodge, $1.62; Clarence, 85c.; Greenwood, $4.50.

A second notice was sent out on Feb. 6, asking those schools that did not observe Dec. 24, to appoint another Sunday and respond with a liberal offering. The Board is in need of funds to assist needy schools and pay the salary of the Missionary. Sunday, March 10, is suggested as the date for all the Sunday schools of Louisiana to present the needs of the board and take an offering.

Church News

Of Alaska's population of 71,000, 16,000 are Roman Catholics.

The Baltimore Conference will meet at Roanoke, Va., on March 27. It will be presided over by Bishop W. B. Murrah.

Rev. W. F. Evans has been appointed Field Secretary of the Henderson-Brown College (Southern Methodist), at Arkadelphia, Ark.

Rev. J. N. McMillan has resigned the pastorate of the Second Baptist Church of Jackson, Miss. He is a forceful preacher, and a most brotherly and agreeable Christian gentleman. Any charge may count itself fortunate to secure his services.

Dr. Frank De Witt Talmage, a son of Dr. T. De Witt Talmage, the world-famed preacher, died after a brief illness on February 8. He was forty-four years of age, and had been pastor of the Chambers-Wylie Memorial Church, Philadelphia, for about two years.

The new way of teaching missions by reproducing heathen conditions in miniature in the home land, so that the public may observe them, seems to have at least the merit of popularity. It is announced that more than 800,000 persons looked over the "World in Boston." A similar exhibition will be given in Baltimore next November.

The Central Christian Advocate calls attention to the fact that to a limited extent the United States is a Mohammedan power. The Moros, who came from Ceylon about two centuries ago and made themselves masters of the Sulu Archipelago, a part of the Philippines, are said to be adherents of that faith. Comparatively little is being done for the Christianization of this tribe.

Hardeman County, Tenn., reports the possession of a pastor, Rev. W. M. Norment, who has served the same charge (three churches) for 63 years. It is stated that he is still quite active, and that two new houses of worship are now being brought to completion under his leadership. The usual result of long pastorates is a lack of interest in the work and a failure to make progress; but there are exceptions to nearly all rules.

The St. Thomas Episcopal Church of New York City, which lost its house of worship by fire in 1905, has made a great record since it was overtaken by that disaster. It has increased in membership approximately a thousand, and has given more than a million dollars to missions. With a vast building project on hand, it raised last year for its current expenses $48,000, and gave six times that much to outside causes.

At a reception given in the parlor of the Central M. E. Church, South, of Fort Worth, Texas, a fine structure recently completed under the leadership of Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker, the present pastor, Dr. J. A. Rice delivered an address on "The Preacher's Personal and Public Use of His Bible," which a correspondent of the Texas Christian Advocate characterized as a really great utterance. Dr. Rice is the pastor of the First Methodist Church in the same city.

Dr. D. C. Huntington, Chancellor Emeritus of the Nebraska Wesleyan University, after a brief illness succumbed to pneumonia on February 8, in the 82d year of his age. He was one of the outstanding figures of Northern Methodism—a ripe scholar, a remarkable preacher, and a man of majestic character. Of him the Northwestern Christian Advocate says: "In the development of Nebraska Methodism, religiously as well as educationally, he was the most important single factor of the last half century."

From a recent issue of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser we take the following: "One of the most remarkable services in the history of the First Methodist church was held last Sunday, Feb. 18. This was known as Home Coming Day and Bishop Collins Denny of the M. E. Church, South, preached both in the morning and evening. After the sermon in the morning announcement was made that $3,000 was to be raised at this service to clear the debt of the newly remodeled church building. Generous response met this announcement, and in a short time subscriptions had been raised aggregating about $8,000, which insured the raising of the balance needed easily.

THE COLLECTIONS.

This is the season in which attention should be given, both privately and from the pulpit, to the "benevolent collections," or the "Collections ordered by the Annual Conference." Early collections may not always mean full collections, but there is a decided advantage in beginning "on time." I was once appointed to fill an unexpired term where the pastor had received $100 per month, up to about the beginning of October and not a dollar had been raised on the collections. This was very awkward for me—trying to get acquainted with the people, and at the same time to raise as much as possible on these worthy claims. By hard work, in the face of difficulties, we managed to raise a little more than a hundred dollars, which was some better than no report. However, I am satisfied that my conscientious efforts along this line were not understood by the people, and that the impression was created that I was what some people are pleased to call "a money preacher." There are preachers in the Louisiana Conference who require that stewards "pull up their end of the log" and make no effort to do likewise. If you doubt this, consult the statistical tables. "Brethren, these things ought not so to be." There is not a claim against his church which the pastor should not faithfully present, and upon which he should not give the necessary information. When this is done, some will respond, and some will not (I speak from experience). Nevertheless, let us do our duty, regardless of what others fail to do.

How easily every dollar of the assessments could be met! Twenty-five cents per member would enable us to build an $8,000 church at Opelousas, would pay eight-tenths of our Orphanage assessment, or put more into the treasury than we pay our Conference Claimants, and yet, it seems that we cannot get these amounts. Brother pastors, let us begin early and keep the subject agitated, and prominently before the people, and many dollars more will go into the Lord's treasury.

THE RECENT KENTUCKY-INDIANA INTER-STATE LIQUOR SHIPMENT DECISION.

A number of inquiries have come to me concerning the effect of this recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court on the interstate liquor bills pending in Congress. Simply to answer these and for the purpose of diffusing the information among the temperance people throughout the country who are interested in this matter, I submit the following, in which opinion friendly Congressmen and lawyers with whom I have talked concur:

As we understand it, there is nothing new in this decision. It is simply a re-affirmation of the decision of the Supreme Court under present laws touching the transportation and delivery of intoxicating liquors, to the effect that intoxicating liquors are articles of interstate commerce and as such they must be accepted for transportation and delivery by common carriers, and that State legislation is powerless to prevent their introduction into the State and delivery there to the bona fide consignee. This simply re-affirms what the court has held in numerous cases which it has decided since the case of Rhodes, Iowa, 170 U. S., 112, decided May 9, 1898.

The recent decision only emphasized the contention of the temperance forces of the country that remedial legislation should be enacted by Congress whereby outside liquor manufacturers and dealers should not be permitted to use the instrumentalities of interstate commerce to violate the laws of the various States. It is precisely this difficulty that the Sheppard-Kenyon Bill (H. R. 16214; S. 4942) is designed to overcome.

EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE,
Superintendent of National Temperance Association.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION.

Dear Dr. Meek: I would not feel satisfied if I did not lay a flower on the grave of my dear friend and father in Israel, the Rev. John A. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference. My heart was made sad when I read of his death, but I know where to find him. He was my pastor when I was converted in August, 1874. He was my pastor when I was licensed to preach on June 28, 1884. He was my pastor when I moved from Louisiana to Mississippi. On Tuesday, Oct. 27, 1885, I took dinner with him in the town of Haynesville, La. Before I left him that afternoon in his study he bowed with me in prayer, and after the prayer, he gave me my church certificate and letter of recommendation. This was the last time I had the privilege of seeing him in the flesh, though we kept up correspondence for several years. Brother Miller was a great man, a man of God, one we all loved. That God's richest blessings may rest on his loved ones left behind, is my prayer. From his son in the Gospel,

TO LOUISIANA WORKERS.

The pastors of Louisiana Methodism are requested to preach a sermon on Christian Stewardship on March 17, or as near that date as is convenient. The third vice-presidents in the Missionary Societies are asked to speak to their pastors about it.

During the past two quarters nine different books have been studied, "Western Women in Eastern Lands" taking the lead in popularity. I will send out shortly, report blanks to the various auxiliaries, and would appreciate being advised, by the various secretaries, of the names of their third vice-presidents or other officers having charge of mission study. I have not been able to form a very accurate list of these officers.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER.

The President of Whitworth College received the following letter from Prof. Huddleston, of Jackson, Miss. The letter should be read by parents who have daughters to educate:

"I am very much pleased to say that the work in examinations for professional license by students of Whitworth College shows that their training has been thorough, accurate and broad. Most of your students have submitted excellent papers, and several very excellent ones. I am gratified, really proud that our Church Schools are doing such fine work, and I most heartily congratulate you for the part you have in it.

"Sincerely and truly, your friend,

A lecturer recently addressed a New Orleans body on the futility of program advertisements. He alleged that churches, lodges and other organizations use the program sheet as an excuse to get the local merchant to pay their printing bills. There is possibly some truth in his assertion. When the Church begins trafficking in other things besides the free gospel, it is not an assured fact that all her wares are guaranteed.

The 22,000 strikers in the textile factories of Massachusetts have been materially strengthened in their cause by their fellow laborers in adjoining States. The people of the United States consumed 7,670,000,000 pounds of sugar during 1911, or a total of 82 pounds per capita. Ten years ago the per capita consumption was ten pounds less, and forty years ago the average American ate but 36 pounds of sugar per year. The United States produces one-fourth of the sugar it uses, but in spite of this the imports of this article increases every year. The American has a sweet tooth that will not be satisfied with anything less than sugar.

MESSAGE FROM THE JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference promised quarterly payments to our worn out preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers. These are our Conference claimants. There are sixty (60) in all, and some have large families. We have assessed the sum of $12,000 for their necessities. This assessment is distributed through the Districts as follows:

Brookhaven District, $1,900; Hattiesburg District, $1,650; Jackson District, $1,900; Meridian District, $1,700; Newton District, $1,525; Port Gibson District, $1,325; Sea Shore District, $1,500.

Now in accordance with our Conference promise, $3,000 of this is due the claimants by April 1.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

To be sure to be ready to meet that promise, the Conference ordered the collection to be taken by the first Sunday in March.

I am sure I can promise compliance with this conference order by the members of the Board of Finance. Those members clerical and lay scattered through the various districts are as follows: Rev. J. M. Morse, S. A. Tomlinsen, E. J. Bomar, T. B. Lampton, D. W. Heidelberg, Rev. W. W. Moore, Rev. B. F. Jones, Reuben W. Millsaps, G. G. Beaman, M. N. Blount, Rev. P. D. Hardin, Rev. W. D. Dominick, Rev. N. B. Harmon, and Rev. F. B. Ormond. Some of these who were called upon for help contributed largely to the success of the work last year, and all of them can always be counted on to do their duty.

Every man will need to do his duty if we are to collect $3,000 by April 1. The necessities of these old preachers are very great and, as it is, we pay them all too little. Let us pay the little we have promised them systematically and regularly, so that they can use it to the best advantage. Remember the day! The first Sunday in March. Remember the order! Collection for our worn out preachers. Remember who gave the order! The Mississippi Annual Conference. Remember to whom the order was given! To every pastor of the Mississippi Conference in charge of a station, circuit or mission. Remember the amount needed! Three thousand dollars. Remember the Conference expects every man to do his duty!

J. M. MORSE, President,
N. B. HARMON, Secretary.

SERVICE AND REWARD.

Mr. Editor: I have been delighted with the "Reminiscences" of Brother H. Armstrong. I have a tender feeling for those veterans who stood in the forefront of the battle, defending what they thought involved their best interests. Not only have they defended their country in time of war, but they have stood boldly up for Christ, and have gone through many a hard-fought battle in trying to make this world what Christ would have it to be. They are resting here for awhile, but some of these days the Lord will take them to a more perfect rest. I have been impressed that it is a hard task for a soldier to lay down his implements of war and give place to some one else; but there is always a Joshua to take his place. God's work goes on. Every servant of the Church rounds out his work and passes out into the great ocean of eternity, and still the tide of time, like a river, is sending its flow seaward, day after day, with endless force. May the Lord help us to carry on the work begun by these faithful men of God. The way is not always strewn with flowers and hatched in sunshine, but beyond the shadows and the clouds the priceless goal of life is looming up in matchless glory, to greet us in the beautiful beyond.

BRAZILIAN NEWS.

It is a fact of significant interest that all the Protestant Mission schools in Brazil have been well attended for the year 1911. This special department of mission work assumes larger proportions year by year, and the demands for schools are increasing constantly. Most of the Evangelical institutions of learning have been filled to their utmost capacities this year. The attendance and interest of the patrons and friends at the closing exercises and the enthusiasm of the student bodies on these occasions have indicated a high appreciation of the efforts put forth by the directors and teachers.

The branch school of the Granbery College at Cataguazes, under the wise and efficient management of the Rev. W. B. Lee, has made a record in this first year of its history that may be very difficult to maintain. The enrollment was 109; the attendance most excellent throughout the year, and every account due for board and tuition was paid up in full. A very large percentage of the pupils made fine grades on their monthly and final examinations. The interest and progress in Bible reading and study are very encouraging. The situation at this point is a most unusual one. Sixteen citizens have invested about $20,000 in a small farm and school equipment. The building, located just outside the town of Cataguazes, is reached by street car, thus being easily accessible to day pupils. These gentlemen urged the Board of Trustees of the Granbery College to take charge of the plant and guaranteed all expense, including the Missionary's salary for a period of two years. The income for 1911 was sufficient for all purposes, but does not leave much of a profit as interest on the investment. The owners would like to sell the property to the church at any time. Perhaps the wisest course will be to interest them in holding on to the plant as their contribution, in a large measure, to the cause of education. This seems to be the opportunity, if only this end can be obtained.

The Granbery College has had another prosperous year. There were 397 students matriculated in the different departments. The final examinations indicate that excellent work was done through the year by teachers and pupils. The financial management has been economical and the showing is most satisfactory. There are rather more accounts for tuition in arrears than ought to be; perhaps a little more attention to these will bring finances into more perfect accord with the condition at the Cataguazes branch.

The small attendance of students with a declared purpose to study for the ministry awakens serious apprehension. However, there are indications that the number may be largely increased for the coming year. The scope of the Granbery Colleges widens year by year and the Institution develops potentialities for good all the time. The demands for increased American missionary force and methods and for emphasis on evangelical teaching and influence in the school are enlarging all the while. The Church is creating for herself a tremendous responsibility and a great opportunity at this point. She will have to stir herself to measure up to the requirements.

This school has sufficiently ingratiated itself into the favor of the Brazilian public and is doing a work for Christian education that warrants an appeal to men of wealth, both in this country and the United States to provide the buildings and equipment indispensable to its progress and the achievement of its largest purpose.

The College Mineiro, in the same town of Juiz de Fora, under the Woman's Council, has also had a most successful year. About 160 children were taught there and enjoyed daily contact with efficient consecrated Christian women. The workers superintended a parochial school in the town for the small children of the community. About 60 were in attendance. The total for these schools mentioned would then be 726.

The schools at Rio, Petropolis, Bello Horizonte, Riberao Preto and other points have enjoyed equal prosperity during the year. Time and space will not allow the mention in detail of the work and progress of each.

At the People's Central Institute (Central Mission), Rio de Janeiro, in the course of the year 1911, there were matriculated in the day school, 233 children; and in the night classes 99 girls and young women and 116 boys and young men, making a total of 448 young lives whom the workers had an opportunity to instruct and influence for good. In these schools there is Bible study and reading, prayer and song services daily and many of the children and young people attend the Sunday schools and Church services.

The Sunday school at the People's Institute closed the year with 146 attending during the last quarter; 25 of these had not missed a single Sunday for that time. In the infant department alone, no less than 125 children had been enrolled for the year. As is the case in all great centers of the laboring classes, there is much fluctuation in the population surrounding the Institute.

At Christmas the workers, aided by friends, provided a Christmas supper for the sailors. A number of the poor in the community were not forgotten. Entertainment, presents and the usual good things at Christmas were provided in the Institute for not less than 500 persons. The religious exercises were enjoyed by many.

The pastors in Rio, Petropolis and elsewhere report very large attendance at the Watch Night services. I think, without an exception, that those who have reported say the attendance was larger at midnight than their usual Sunday night congregations are. The New Year begins with bright prospects for a great work for the Master during 1912. Let there be earnest prayer everywhere for the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the laborers and their labors.

Rio de Janeiro, Jan 5, 1912

THE PASTOR'S DUTY.

Has the Pastor accomplished his duty, when he fills his place in the pulpit? I say, no! There is an unlimited amount of work to do outside of the church. I have been watching the pastors closely for a number of years, and almost invariably the one who spends the most time in the homes of his people does the greatest amount of good. A dear old pastor told me on one occasion, that the best way to get people to attend services was to go into their homes, and talk and pray with them. In other words, the first place to preach is in the home, and next in the church.

Dear pastor, do you think you have completed your work, when you fail to visit every home that contains members of your church? Perhaps some of them are perishing for the gospel, and possibly you could, in a few minutes, persuade them to look to Jesus, and cause them to plant their feet on the steadfast rock, which is Jesus Christ. Then you could go on your way rejoicing, because you had helped some one to lead a new life.

You may say that it is the duty of every Christian to do home work for the Master. I agree with you, but we do not have the opportunity that the pastor has. It seems to me that our pastors should be careful about letting these opportunities slip.

The pastor in my home town told me of an instance that caused me to think very seriously. He said he visited the home of a dear lady who had been ill for several days. She invited him to call again. He intended to do so; but, through innocent neglect, failed. In a few days he was called on to conduct the funeral services of the lady. At the cemetery he hung his head, then looked up, and said that if the dear Lord would forgive him for not going to call on this lady again, and mentioning the name of Christ to her, he would never be guilty of such neglect again.

Not long since I visited a lady who is a member of the church to which I belong. She had been an active member, and seemed to take great interest in the work, but of late it seemed that she had grown cold. I approached her on the subject. She gave me more than one reason for her absence at the services, the most important being, that her pastor did not visit her the year before, although she invited him a number of times.

The result is, that this family is constantly drifting backward. She is seldom seen at her post on Sunday morning. I admit that she is partly responsible, but I fear the pastor did not do his whole duty. The Bible teaches us that "we are our brother's keeper."

One pastor tells us, that in devoting his time to the cause of Christ, thirty-six per cent of the people who were saved in twelve months were saved in the homes. Then does it not behoove the pastor to do more home work, especially among the people who do not attend any services? You may say, that it is the fault of the people who do not attend. It may be their fault or it may not. Any way our Bible tells us to preach the gospel to every creature. To obey this command, it may be absolutely necessary to go into the homes to preach.

In helping to take the religious census of our town, I came in contact with an intelligent lady, who refused to give us the desired information. The reason she gave for taking so little interest in the church work was, that her pastor had paid no attention to her whatever. He passed her home weekly, but never had time to speak an encouraging word to her and her family when they were sick or when they were well.

So many of our best people go astray when they move into strange vicinities because they are neglected by their pastors.

A FATHER'S LOVE.

A little incident which beautifully illustrated the words of David, spoken so long ago, came under my notice recently. It so impressed and comforted me that I want to pass it on.

We were seated round the tea table in my friend's pleasant home, when it seems the little daughter reached to help herself with undue haste. Her father reproved her, and it must have been very gently, for there was not any interruption in the cheerful conversation. But a lady seated by the child's side told me afterward that Jennie's eyes filled with tears, and she slipped quietly away from the table. But I did notice Mr. H— excusing himself and also leaving the room.

Immediately after tea I had occasion to visit the adjoining sitting room, where I found the little one nestled in her father's strong arms, the tears still falling from the blue eyes, but looking up trustfully into the brown ones bent above hers and glistening with sympathy, while the voice, tender and manly, was saying: "There, there, darling; papa would not hurt his little pet's feeling or spoil her supper if he could help it. See, papa could not eat any more when he knew you were feeling so badly. Now, sweetheart, let us go and see if there is anything left for us. Mother will attend to us, herself."

For some time they talked softly; then I heard a little ripple of laughter, and they went to finish the meal, her hand clasped in her father's.

But I had my lesson. What a sweet remembrance for that child. Thank God for our Christian fathers, and while the tears dropped down my cheeks I cried silently: "Does God love me so?" And the answer came and stayed: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him."—The Christian Guardian.

FUZZY.

Fuzzy Jarvis was a "newsy" in one of our large Southern cities. His short, curly hair had earned for him the title "Fuzzy," and he had been called by it so long now that nearly every one had forgotten that he ever had any other name.

One morning a man drove up in front of one of the large business houses and, tossing the reins to Fuzzy, who happened to be standing near, he hurried inside. Presently he re-appeared and, smiling at the faithful Fuzzy, said: "Thank you, my boy; I was in a big hurry and your happening along just then helped me out, for they don't stand very well," nodding at the prancing horses. Dropping a quarter into the boy's hand, he drove away. But all the rest of the day that smile and those pleasant words lingered in Fuzzy's mind and brought a smile to his face. Far more did he think of the kind words than of the quarter—for had he not earned quarters often before? But kindness was a rare thing to Fuzzy.

The next morning he lingered near the same corner, hoping that by chance he might see his friend again. Just as he was leaving his post the pretty team halted and again the same gentleman alighted, this time in less haste, but seeing Fuzzy standing expectantly, he tossed him the reins, saying, as he did so, "Ah, you are here again, my friend. Are you always on this corner to hold people's horses?"

"I'm generally 'round here in the morning, sir," he answered.

"My friend!" Those words rang through Fuzzy's mind, and over and over he repeated them. The gentleman had actually called him a friend. Had you asked Fuzzy to define the word love, he could scarcely have done so. Deprived of parents at an early age, and with no near of kin, Fuzzy had little reason to know what love was. But there certainly was a strange feeling springing up in his heart whenever he thought of "the gentleman." Fuzzy didn't call it love, simply because he didn't call it anything. He finally asked another "newsy" who the gentleman was.

"Why, that's Judge Barron," was the reply. "Lives in the big white house up on the corner of B— Street." Fuzzy knew the house—a palace, he called it.

One morning the judge drove up and stopped, but he was not alone. With him was a lad of about Fuzzy's own age; his son, Fuzzy soon discovered. His eyes were just as kind as those of his father, and, as they came out of the building, he took from his pocket a handful of peanuts and held them out to Fuzzy, who had been carefully guarding the team meanwhile.

Once after that Fuzzy saw the judge's son. That time he did not go in with his father, but he sat in the carriage and talked with Fuzzy. And he tossed him a coin and asked him to get some oranges from the fruit stand near by; and then, when Fuzzy had brought them, the lad held out one, saying: "Here you are; catch it." And Fuzzy did catch it and it formed the principal part of his dinner that day.

It was a few days afterward that he learned that the judge's son was sick. Then for several days he saw nothing of the judge, and when he finally did come, he seemed in a great hurry and there was a sad look on his face.

"How is your son, sir?" ventured Fuzzy, as the judge came back to his carriage.

"He's no better to-day; in fact, I'm afraid he is not so well." It was a sad smile that he gave Fuzzy, but it was a smile, and one that Fuzzy never forgot.

That afternoon the newsboy pulled the change from his pocket and counted it. A dollar and a half there was, and Fuzzy did some thinking. Suddenly two tears splashed down among the coins.

"He's an a-awful nice n-an," Fuzzy said to himself between the catches in his breath, "an' the boy g-give me 'n orange, an' I'm a-awful sorry he's sick." He had wandered along until he stood in front of a large window where were displayed many kinds of beautiful plants and flowers. "'N' he called me his friend," mused Fuzzy. "'N' he always smiled at me—even when the boy was sick—'n'—'n' I'm awfully sorry—'n' I'd like him to know it." Then he went inside and began to inspect the flowers more closely.

"What do you want here?" asked the clerk not very pleasantly, for Fuzzy did not look like a probable customer.

"I'd like something pretty for a sick boy," was the reply.

At sight of the tears which were still in Fuzzy's eyes, the clerk's tone grew less harsh, and he replied, "This is a pretty one, here."

"How much are these white ones?" asked Fuzzy. "Two dollars."

Fuzzy's face fell as he passed on to another. He next selected a white lily, which he was told cost seventy-five cents. Ah, that was better. He again counted his money. "That'll take just half of it; yes, I guess I can afford that."

A few minutes later he stood at the door of the big white house. He asked to see the judge, for to no one else would he intrust his gift. Having left it, with a few timid, faltering words of sympathy, he departed, wondering if the judge would understand how sorry he was.

A few days later, when the judge stepped out of his carriage, instead of entering the building as usual, he came directly up to Fuzzy.

"My son would like to see you, my friend. He wanted me to bring you home with me. So if you'll jump right in here, I'll take you up to see him. Can you go now?"

"Sure, sir," said Fuzzy, and he followed the judge into the carriage. As soon as he entered the room the judge's son held out his hand, saying, "Good morning; I wanted to thank you for that flower you brought me, and then I want to ask another favor of you."

"Sure, I'll do anything I can for you," was Fuzzy's reply.

"Well, you see, I've taken quite a fancy to you. I've liked you all along, but I've liked you more ever since you brought that flower. And the doctor says it will be a long time before I'll be strong enough to go out much, and it's dreadfully lonesome lying here all day. So I just asked father if he didn't suppose you'd come and stay here, and—well, just pretend you're my brother, you know; I've always wished I had one—and you could play games with me, and we could have jolly times together, I know. You'll do it, won't you?"

"Why—er—'twould be awful nice, but—are you sure you want a poor lad like me? I ain't even been to school much, 'n' I ain't got no clothes fit to wear, here, n'—"

"Of course I'm sure I want you, and I'll help you to study from my books when I get a little stronger, and you'll stay with me, won't you?"

Of course Fuzzy stayed, and the friendship which began then lasted all through their lives, and Fuzzy often says now that he would not be the man that he is if it had not been for the judge and his son and their kindness to him.—R. F. Knapp, in Baptist Boys and Girls.

For One Year (regular subscription rate)... $1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)

Eight Months 1.00
To Preachers 1.00
To widows of preachers 1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription to cover expense of remitting, etc., provided they remit by money order, or New York exchange, or stamps, or registered letter. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or stamps, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

BISHOP HOSS IN A NEW ROLE.

A short time since Bishop E. E. Hoss appeared before the Congressional Committee on the Library, at Washington, which has under consideration a bill to erect a monument to General William Campbell, one of the heroes of the Battle of Kings Mountain, and spoke at some length in opposition to the measure. The ground of his opposition was not that General Campbell was not a brave soldier, or that he did not take a conspicuous part in the historic struggle, but that Gen. John Sevier, of Tennessee, and Gen. Isaac Shelby, of Kentucky, did quite as much to bring success to the colonial arms as did their Virginia comrade, and that if a monument is to be set up by the National Government to commemorate the great victory won, it should be designed to honor not merely one man, but all the leaders and patriotic men who participated in the battle. The Bishop justified his presence as an opponent of the pending bill by stating that he is a Tennessean and a descendant (if we mistake not, he is a grandson) of Gov. Sevier, and that he was unwilling to see the Volunteer State and her first Governor deprived of their part of the glory justly due them by the action of Congress. He affirmed also that the passage of the measure in its present form would do injustice to other States, whose worthy sons were in the thick of the fray when the British were dealt this staggering blow.

On February 15, after some introductory remarks in which he paid a high compliment to Bishop Hoss, Congressman Byrns, of Tennessee, asked unanimous consent to print the Bishop's address in full in the Congressional Record, and it was granted. This was most fortunate, for the speech deserves a wide circulation and ought to be preserved for all time to come. It is pitched upon a high plane; is rich in historical information, and is a model of beautiful and vigorous English.

The more we see of Bishop Hoss the more we are amazed at his versatility and brilliancy. There is no occasion that he does not adorn, and he illuminates every subject that he discusses. It would be difficult to say whether he most excels as a writer or speaker. He is great both in head and heart. He is scholarly, yet simple; profound, yet spiritual; a deliverer in hooks, yet a man of the people. He is a loyal Southern Methodist, proud of the past traditions of his denomination, and optimistic as to its future. The Church owes him a debt that it can never pay for his courageous and able fight to maintain its hold upon Vanderbilt University. There are some who seek to discredit him by declaring that he is of an impulsive temperament and erratic in judgment; but it is a sufficient answer to this charge to say that he has never taken a position in which he has not been sustained by the great mass of his fellow-Methodists of the South. Taking him all in all, it is difficult whether American Methodism has ever produced a more remarkable man than this stalwart and devoted son of Tennessee. Indeed, after reading in the Congressional Record Bishop Hoss' masterly advocacy of his cause, we could not but wish that it were possible for him to serve in our Federal Legislature, as well as in the Christian ministry. The South is sadly in need of men of his intellectual stature to represent her at the National Capital.

IN THE INTEREST OF HISTORICAL TRUTH.

An academic issue has lately arisen between Senator John Sharp Williams and the Legislature of Mississippi as to whether a State Legislative Assembly has the right to give instructions to the representatives of the State in the Federal Senate. The origin of the controversy was as follows: Several weeks ago, after exonerating Senator-elect James K. Vardaman from certain charges made against him, the Legislature forwarded to Mr. Williams a statement setting forth its action, and "instructed" him to have it inserted in the Congressional Record. To this, Mr. Williams replied that he had no objection to acceding to the wishes of the Legislature, but that he denied the right of that body to "instruct" him. In addition to this, he drew up a statement defining his position in regard to the matter and had this placed in the Congressional Record at the same time that he did the resolutions relative to Mr. Vardaman, and he also requested the State Legislature to spread this formal expression of his views upon the journal of its proceedings. This the Legislature did, along with a declaration, which it adopted by a large majority, affirming its belief in its right to "instruct" the Mississippi Senators.

It is not our purpose to meddle to the slightest extent with Mississippi politics through the columns of the Advocate. This is a field which it is well for a church paper to let alone, and this we shall most assuredly do. As to the merits of the issue between Mr. Williams and the Legislature, we will express no opinion, though we have strong convictions on the subject. But we have been positively amazed to hear it proclaimed that Jefferson Davis occupied the same position on this question as Senator Lamar and Senator Williams. The truth is, Mr. Davis held exactly the opposite view. In a letter written from Beauvoir on December 14, 1878, and published in the Jackson Clarion of January 15, 1879, soon after Mr. Lamar had disobeyed the instructions of the Mississippi Legislature to vote for the Bland Silver Bill, he expressed his views on this subject (see "Lucius Q. C. Lamar: His Life and Times," by Edward Mayes, Page 363). Solely in the interest of historical truth and without any design to affect any one's political fortune, we quote, in part, Mr. Davis' statement:

"The Government of the United States is essentially representative, the necessary consequence of the admitted sovereignty of the people and the individuality of the State. If the people of a Congressional District were to assemble in mass and instruct their Representative upon any particular question, who will gainsay their right to do so, or his duty to obey? In the compact of the Union it was provided that the Representatives of the States, their Senators, should be chosen by their respective Legislatures. Those Legislatures, do in that connection, express the voice of the State; and the Senator who accepts his election by the Legislature as such expression of the will of the State would seem to be estopped from contending at any future time that the Legislature was not the proper channel through which the State should speak to him. It has been the practice of Democracy either to obey instructions or to resign the office held from the people, so that their constituents might, if they so desired, select some one else who would more truly represent them. * * * In opposition to the right of the constituency to instruct, I know of no argument which deserves notice, unless it be that which denies the people the requisite amount of intelligence. If that be true, the corner stone of our temple is crushed, and it were vain to attempt to prop the superstructure. But is it true? I hope not, I think not, and repel the assumption of any man that he has more wisdom than the aggregate of his neighbors."

We will only add that this letter was written after Senator Lamar had so ably defended Mr. Davis from the aspersions of Blaine, Hoar, and others in the United States Senate, and that it was used against him in his memorable campaign for re-election to that body in 1881. But in spite of the great opposition which it and other things aroused, by his ability and eloquence, Mr. Lamar overcame it and won one of the most signal triumphs in the history of American politics.

BISHOP MURRAH IN THE UNITED STATES.

A New York dispatch from Bishop W. B. Murrah, dated February 25, reads as follows: "Announce that I am in America. Correspondents may take notice." After their long absence and journey around the world, the many friends of Bishop and Mrs. Murrah will be delighted to know that they are again beneath the flag of the stars and stripes. We are not informed as to their immediate movements, but we suppose that they will reach Jackson, Miss., in a few days. Having been appointed by his colleagues last May to hold our Mission Conferences in the Far East, the Bishop left home last summer, and sailing from San Francisco, reached the Orient by crossing the Pacific Ocean. After discharging his official duties, he set out upon his homeward journey, travelling westward and visiting along the way the Holy Land and several of the most interesting European countries. Mrs. Murrah accompanied him on every part of the trip, and has shown herself to be a thoroughly good traveler. We dare say, however, that after their wanderings abroad they will be glad to be at home and among their friends again. It scarcely needs to be said that they will be given a cordial and enthusiastic welcome by the people of Jackson, and, indeed, of all Mississippi, as well as by many in other States.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, was in the city last Monday, and honored our office with a call. He spoke hopefully of the work under his supervision.

In a short personal note Rev. W. E. Dickens, of Pelahatchie, Miss., says: "The Lord is with us and we feel hopeful of a good year. The prospects are very encouraging. We shall not forget the Advocate." He enclosed a nice list of subscribers.

Brother C. J. Coppedge, of Farrell, Miss., has our thanks for his own renewal and for two dollars to be credited to our Help Fund. Brother Coppedge is a steward on the Friars Point charge, and is one of our most loyal and liberal Methodists.

Rev. George A. Baker, pastor at Belmont, Miss., is doing a good work on his charge. He announced that the prospect for a successful year is promising, and that his people are well pleased with the able assistance rendered the charge by the presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Mitchell.

Rev. W. N. Duncan, of Senatobia, Miss., favored us last week with a list of nine subscribers. We are most grateful to him for this service rendered the Conference organ. He is a young minister of uncommon gifts, and may be trusted to take care of all the interests of the Church.

The presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference met in Alexandria yesterday to confer concerning the work. They are a band of hustlers, and are freely spending their strength to promote the interests of Methodism throughout the State. And what is better still, they are succeeding at the task.

In forwarding his appointments for the second round, Rev. J. E. Thomas, the presiding elder of the Columbus District, adds: "Everything goes well with us." We would not expect them to go otherwise with Brother Thomas' hand upon the helm. It is his habit to do all in his power to promote the Master's work.

Writing from Mayhew, Miss., under date of Feb. 19, Rev. J. J. Baird says: "We had large congregations yesterday at both services. Our work has been progressing favorably since the Annual Conference, in spite of the severe winter." Brother Baird has recently been pressing the claims of the Conference organ upon the attention of his people, with good results. He will entertain the Columbus District Conference at Artesia this spring, and we are grateful to him for a cordial invitation to be present.

Rev. W. A. Bruner, of Pine Valley, Miss., has our thanks for a nice list of renewals, sent in last week.

Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Henry are the parents of a baby girl who came to the district parsonage on the night of Feb. 20.

Rev. W. B. Peritt, of Marksville, La., spent a few days in New Orleans last week. He reports that his work is progressing.

Rev. J. W. Thompson is doing a good work on the Topisaw (Miss.) charge. He is beginning his second year's work, and, true to his former practices, he is advancing the interests of the Advocate.

Rev. T. M. Bradley, our pastor at Rosedale, Miss., has brought us under obligation for some renewals to the Advocate. He is a growing young minister, and serves a kind-hearted and worthy people.

Rev. J. W. Price, who was assigned to the Percy Creek circuit (Miss.) at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, has been changed to Oak Ridge circuit, and his address is now Oak Ridge, Miss.

Rev. C. M. Thompson has begun his second year at Donaldsonville, La., under favorable auspices. His official board has raised the salary $150, and has announced that the entire amount is covered by subscriptions.

We are indebted to the following brethren for having recently sent us lists of subscribers: Rev. H. Armstrong, Olla, La., 3; Rev. A. H. Bennett, Pleasant Hill, Miss., 5; Rev. J. C. McElroy, Slate Springs, Miss., 6. Rev. L. Carley, 6 (additional.)

Dr. J. W. Moore began revival services at First Church, New Orleans, last Monday night and expects to continue until Easter. For the present he will do the preaching, and those who attend may rest assured that it will be of the purest gospel type.

Rev. Dr. McLean, former president of Southwestern University of Georgetown, Texas, now superintendent of the Methodist Orphanage at Waco, Texas, was in New Orleans last Friday on his way to Panama. While in the city he was the guest of Dr. J. W. Moore.

From Tyro, Miss., a community where we have many excellent people, Brother T. E. Gregory sent us a number of names for our subscription files on February 19. This promising young pastor has our hearty thanks for looking after the interests of the Conference organ.

Rev. Olin Ray, who is attending Millsaps College and serving the Grenada Circuit, forwarded us a nice list of subscribers a few days since. The Millsaps boys who have gone into the ministry may be counted upon to give a good account of themselves wherever they may be sent to labor. Not only in Mississippi, but also in other States they are making their influence felt.

"I have had the Advocate in my home for 41 years and don't know how to do without it. Don't ever stop the paper until you hear that I am dead." The foregoing extract from a letter from Brother M. G. Dubard, of Bew Springs, Miss., has the right ring to it. There are some things it is well that a man don't know and one of them is, how to do without his church papers.

Rev. J. S. Rutledge, pastor of the most exclusively rural station in Louisiana, Indian Bayou, announces that he has been hindered in his work this year. If Brother Rutledge does not have from three hundred to five hundred at church on Sunday, he feels like something is wrong. His membership are all farmers and the recent rains have made roads almost impassable in Vermillion Parish.

Bishop T. B. Neely, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was in New Orleans last Monday. He was just back from an official visit to Mexico, where he reported the disturbed conditions existing in that country as interfering considerably with the work of the Church. Whether Bishop Hendrix was able to hold our Mexican Conference at the appointed dates and places, we are not informed.

The Epworth League Union of New Orleans has decided to enterprise another church in the city. It has made partial arrangements for the funds, and will occupy itself in both raising the money and furnishing workers for the new field. The Union was responsible for the beginning of and advancement of Epworth Church, which is now one of the most promising congregations in New Orleans.

Rev. K. W. Dodson sounds an optimistic note at New Iberia, La. He says: "Our church is growing. The new members added last year have increased the assessment for the pastor $200. We have had 9 accessions to the church and have organized a Junior League since Conference." We thank Brother Dodson for a cordial invitation to visit his charge, which we hope to have the pleasure of doing in the near future.

Rev. T. B. Clifford, pastor of our Church at Yazoo City, Miss., who was injured in a wreck at Louise, Miss., about two weeks ago, is now in St. Augustine, Fla., where he is resting. He had a narrow escape from death and for a time it was feared that his injuries would prove fatal; however, he now expects to be in his pulpit by the latter part of March.

Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, the industrious pastor, send us the following encouraging report from the Houma Mission: "We have had since Conference 23 accessions by profession of faith and 5 by certificate. We also report 2 baptisms and two weddings. We have bought an organ for Baker's Chapel, and raised $271 with which to push the work. My assistant, Brother A. D. Martin, is rendering most excellent service."

Rev. J. C. Park, of Macon, Miss., in a recent note to the editor, among other things said: "I am in a delightful field. A more appreciative people I have never served." And, of course, Macon is pleased with Brother Park. They would be a queer sort of folk if they were not. Wherever he has wrought he has invariably won his way into the hearts of the members of the church, and blessed and strengthened them with his ministry.

The Lenten services that are being conducted in the Dreamland Theater by the pastors of the New Orleans churches are growing in interest. Dr. J. M. Henry, the progressive presiding elder, preached on last Wednesday. Rev. H. R. Singleton preached on Thursday, Dr. J. W. Moore on Friday, Rev. J. L. Sutton on Saturday, Rev. J. G. Snelling on Monday, and Rev. W. L. Doss on Tuesday. The services will continue throughout the Lenten season, and promise to be fruitful of good results.

On last Friday night the congregation at Crowley, La., voted to build a new church building to cost $30,000. Half of the money was subscribed at once, and an active campaign planned to raise the balance. Brother P. L. Lawrence was named as president of the Building Committee and Brother J. W. Fontenot as secretary. The congregation at Crowley has needed a new home for many years. The Sunday school has long since been forced to seek rooms elsewhere for class work. Rev. C. D. Atkinson is the pastor.

From the La Salle Ledger, published at Jena, La., we take the following: "The revival services being conducted at the Methodist Church by Rev. A. W. Turner are progressing nicely, and those who are attending are being treated to some fine discourses by this able divine. Mr. Turner is evangelist for the Louisiana Conference, and is one of the most forceful and eloquent preachers in the State. There is nothing sensational in his sermons; he seems to prefer to expound God's Word in a plain and simple manner."

From his two churches, Cold Water and Love (North Mississippi), Rev. D. W. Babb sent us last week 10 renewals and 7 new subscriptions to the Advocate. We make our most polite bow to this painstaking pastor, and assure him of our hearty appreciation of this good work. The names on the list which he forwarded awakened memories of the past, and made us not a little homesick for Mississippi. We trust that a kind Providence may permit us to grasp again the hands of our Coldwater friends in the not-far future.

The church in Lake Charles, La., has one of the best Epworth Leagues in the State. The Sunday school is under the efficient management of Brother A. M. Mayo, and in almost every particular measures up to the standard of excellence set by the International Sunday School Association. Brother J. B. Kent, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, is the teacher of the Men's Bible class, and is also active in the general work of the church. Rev. T. J. Warlick and family are comfortably settled in the commodious parsonage, and have been cordially received.

We received a few days since an interesting note from Rev. R. P. Neblett, of Houston, Miss., which brought instruction to continue to send the Advocate to some of his people for another year. He also furnished us with the following news item: "Mrs. Sallie H. Sage, widow of the sainted Rev. A. P. Sage, has been shut in with la grippe for several weeks, but is now able to be out. She loves the Church, and is a most faithful attendant upon its various ordinances." We regret to know that this cleft lady has been ill, but are pleased to be informed that she seems to have about recovered.

In our issue of last week we represented Rev. H. T. Carley as sending us a fine list of subscribers from Ellisville, Miss. That was an error; they were sent by our faithful pastor at that place, Rev. L. Carley. We most respectfully apologize for this substitution of the name of the son for that of the father. Brother H. T. Carley, now a professor in Centenary College, was formerly our associate in the Advocate office, and having so often written his initials, in an unguarded moment we were controlled by the force of habit and wrote them unwittingly. We make this statement in justice to all concerned.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, the president of Whitworth College, was in the city last Saturday on his way to Logtown, Miss., where he spent the Sabbath. This was Dr. Cooper's first pastoral charge, and he is held in high esteem by all the people residing within its bounds. On his way back home, the Doctor dropped into our office on Monday, and spoke most appreciatingly of the reception given by his old parishioners, making special mention of Brother Asa Weston, Sidney Otis, and Douglas Osborn. He also had many kind things to say of Rev. H. Mellard, our pastor at Logtown, who he said is in great favor with his flock.

Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Leland, Miss., has been taking care of the interests of the Advocate in his charge. Brother McCafferty has a most responsible and difficult field, and we have been much pleased to hear of the success attending his labors. His congregation has been sorely bereaved recently by the death of some of its leading members. Particularly do we regret to be apprised of the decease of Brother J. E. Rather, who for a long number of years was a leading worker in our Church at Leland. He stood bravely up for Methodism in that community when it was weak and struggling for life, and much of what it is to-day is due to his zeal and fidelity. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain the lonely widow left behind!

DISTRICT INSTITUTES.

To the Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies of the North Mississippi Conference:

Mrs. Arch Trawick, of Nashville, Tenn., and Miss Mae Ora Durham, head deaconess of the Institutional Church of Kansas City, Mo., will make a tour of our Conference from March 17 to March 31. An Institute will be held in each district to which each auxiliary, both Foreign and Home, is urged to send delegates. The following is a list of the places where institutes will be held: West Point, March 18; Tupelo, March 19; Corinth, March 20-21; Sardis, March 22-23; Grenada, March 24-25; Durant, March 26; Greenwood, March 27-28; Clarksdale, March 29-30.

To make this series of institutes a success, the hearty co-operation of each auxiliary is imperatively needed. Send list of delegates to the presidents of the societies where institutes are to be held.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE JOURNAL.

Mr. J. W. Tucker, the printer of the recent session of the Minutes of the Mississippi Annual Conference, the destruction of whose establishment by fire has delayed the publication of the journal, advises me that the work on the job has been resumed and will be pushed to a rapid completion. We expect to have the pamphlet in the hands of the preachers by the 15th of March.

WILLIAM JAMES POWELL, infant son of William Lenoir and Nettie May Powell, was born February 13, 1911 and died at Irene, Miss., Nov. 18, 1911. He was the only son this home has been blessed with. Four sisters mourned his going away so soon. Many were the plans formulated for the life of this sweet infant son and cheerful baby brother, but, alas! all these premature plans must needs give away for God's plan. His plans, though sometimes mysterious, are always the best. As the slowly unfolding petals of this precious little bud was sending forth its fragrance in response to the glowing of a mother's love, God saw fit to transplant it into his garden celestial. May God grant to the faithful father, the loving mother and each sister a place with William in that garden. His pastor, J. LOYD DECELL.

EDGAR WARREN CARRUTH, son of Benton Monroe and Minnie Bales Carruth, was born September 12, 1909 and died near Oryka, Miss., November 28, 1911. All that could be done was done to stay the hand of death. Though but little over two years of age, Edgar had won a prominent and distinct place in the family and in the hearts of all who knew him. He was, indeed, a precious child. He and William James Powell, who preceded him only ten days, were first cousins, their mothers being sisters. Though it was hard to see him, with such brilliant mind and sweet disposition, taken so early in life, yet we would not bring him back, but "will go to him." His parents, four sisters and four brothers mourn for him. May they be faithful to the end and join Edgar around "the great white throne" of God. His pastor, J. LOYD DECELL.

The sweet spirit of Mrs. LENA NISBET WILSON, daughter of V. E. and Susie Nisbet, and wife of R. P. Wilson, our esteemed brother and steward in the church at Pontotoc, Miss., took its flight, December 30, 1911, aged thirty-eight years. Her life was an open book, illustrated with kind words and noble self-sacrificing deeds. Sister Wilson had the inestimable privilege of growing up in a Christian home. She joined the Methodist Church in childhood, and loved it to her dying day. For thirteen years she was a devoted wife and a true mother. It was her desire that her two boys should grow up to be Christian men. For many years she was a constant sufferer, but no word of murmuring was allowed to escape her lips. Those who knew her best said, "It was a benediction to anyone to go into her home and realize the touch of her kind and happy spirit. One always left feeling refreshed and more determined than ever to live for God." Many times she overtaxed her strength to do the work of the Church. May our Heavenly Father watch over the loved ones left behind, especially, the dear husband and the precious little boys.

W. D. WENDEL

After several days of intense suffering, little LUCIUS EARL MCINTYRE, our dear little baby boy, died on Jan. 24, 1912. He was born, May 14, 1911, and was 8 months and 10 days old. He was the idol of the home. Everything was done for his care and comfort that a devoted father and loving mother could do for their precious babe. He was just sitting alone and beginning to talk, to the great delight of his parents. Little Lucius was a bright, sweet, pleasing child; but God had use for him in heaven; so he called him home. He stayed with us long enough to win our affections, and then quietly passed away from us; but we know where he has gone. He is with the Father in heaven. Weep not, father and mother, sister and brother, for him, for we know dear little Lucius is at rest. Can we bring him back again? We cannot, but we may go to him. So good-bye, little Lucius, for awhile; we shall see you in the not far future. MAMMA AND PAPA.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. SUSIE H. HORTON, was born at Arcola, Miss., Feb. 4, 1859, and died at Ada, Okla., Feb. 14, 1912. She was married to W. H. Horton, Jan. 30, 1901. To this union five children were born, all of whom, and the husband survive her. At twelve years of age, she was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in which she remained a faithful member to the end of her life. She recently came with her husband to Ada from Leland, Miss., and immediately began to adjust herself to the circumstances of her environment. On Feb. 1, I received her letter. She united with the Woman's Missionary Society and became interested in the work of the church. I visited her and talked with her about her Christian life. She had a bright experience. She was faithful in her attendance upon the mid-week prayer meeting and always enjoyed the hour. She attended preaching services the Sunday evening before she died. Soon after she came to Ada, an epidemic of meningitis appeared in the community. She at once became solicitous about the health of her children and took all the precautions the health officers prescribed. Feb. 12, she was attacked by the dread disease and died from it at 12:05 a.m., Feb. 14. We laid her away to rest in Rosedale cemetery the same day that she died. The undertaker, the pallbearers and myself were the only ones present, the health-officers having ordered a private funeral. Her spirit has gone to God who gave it. May the blessings of God be upon the bereaved ones. Her pastor, CHAS. L. BROOKS.

On January 12, at Bounds, Calhoun County, Miss., Brother G. C. BOUNDS died in the hope of a glorious immortality. When the sad news of his death became known, no doubt a wave of sorrow swept over the entire community where he lived. He was born March 24, 1859, and, when stricken down with the disease which terminated in death, he was possessed with all the powers of vigorous manhood. He belonged to a family noted for integrity, uprightness and good citizenship, and these sterling virtues were eminently conspicuous in his life and character. In young manhood he went to Texas, where, at Cleburn, January 13, 1889, he was happily married to Miss Lizzie Wylie. Ten children were born to bless this union. Less than two years ago the devoted wife and mother was called to her reward. In 1900 he gave his heart to God and joined the M. E. Church, South. How sad it is to know that his homecoming will be heard no more, but his influence will live to bless the world as the years roll away. May God have the fatherless and motherless ones always in his holy keeping is my prayer! R. M. DAVIS.

Best Fertilizers for the Farmer

On the Cotton plantations you will find some planters making one to two bales of Cotton per acre. If you ask them what fertilizers they use, you will find that the majority of the most prosperous farmers use Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers.

In the spring, thousands of tobacco planters in the Southern Tobacco Belts use

Virginia-Carolina High-Grade Fertilizers

Later they receive the highest cash prices for their big yields of excellent leaf.

Hundreds of thousands of cotton and corn growers, planters of rice, vegetables, fruit, peanuts, grain and sugar cane use Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers and make big money.

Tidings From the Field

Brookville, Miss.:

We have just closed a fine meeting in our Brookville Church. The preaching was done by Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., to the entire satisfaction of those who heard him. We had a fine time and 6 new members were added to our roll. This speaks well for this splendid town, when you consider that nearly everybody here already belongs to some Church. We are now in a much better condition spiritually for the year's work. Our church debt has been reduced by $235 since Conference, leaving only a small balance. The bad weather has greatly hindered our work in the country, but we intend to make up for lost time when the weather gets good.—J. H. Bass, P. C.

Prairie Circuit (North Mississippi):

Though we have been mud bound, I am glad to say that we still live and mean to go on. The people received us kindly, and we can hardly speak too highly of the many kindnesses shown us by them. There are many fine people on the Prairie charge. We have not had much chance to work for our worthy Conference organ, but it is my ambition, and I think it will be gratified, to be on your Honor Roll soon. I know of several others who, I am sure, will take the paper when urged to do so. I feel that a real work of seed-sowing has been done when a subscriber is secured. The Advocate makes a valuable assistant pastor, in that it usually goes, rain or shine. I mean to encourage my people all I can to take it.—A. S. Brisco, P. C.

Coldwater, Miss.:

This, in many ways, has been a hard winter to do church work, especially in this part of the State. We have been much afflicted with whooping cough and la grippe. The continued severe cold weather has militated against the progress of church work. But, notwithstanding all of these hindrances, the Lord has been with us. Our services have been spiritual, and peace and harmony abound. Our first quarterly meeting is past, and was good. Brother Dorman, our new presiding elder, did us good work, and the people were very much pleased with him. Though we have had some depression in finances, because of the low price of cotton, the liberality of our people is up to our former standard which equals the best. We have paid off our foreign missionary assessment, and more than half of that for home missions. Our prayer meetings and Sunday schools are good, considering the weather. The Advocate also is good. Our people brag on its improvement. I enclose you a list of new subscribers and renewals, to be followed by others. Pray for us. We are expecting a great year. We can have it, if we do the work assigned to us faithfully.—D. W. Babb, P. C.

Lake Cormorant and Hinds, North Miss. Conf.:

Notwithstanding the rough weather we have been having, I can see in this charge some signs of progress and development. At Poplar Corner the Sunday school has taken on new life, and promises to do a fine year's work. It will entertain the District Sunday School Convention on the 29th inst., for which an interesting program has been published and distributed. Come up and be with us, Brother Meek. Your many friends would be glad to see you. We have just been heavily pounded by the Lake Cormorant people. How we enjoy the hams and sausage! In fact, there is almost everything that is good to eat around here. May the Lord return unto these good people an hundred fold! I meet good congregations at every church. Brother Bennett, my predecessor, wrought well here last year, and left scores of friends, who are interested in his welfare. Our first quarterly conference was held on Feb. 3 and 4 at Hinds Chapel, where our efficient presiding elder preached his first itinerant sermon. It was also in that community that he was married. Brother Dorman preached two fine sermons, renewed some old acquaintances, and made many new friends while among us.—A. G. Hall, P. C.

First Church, Mansfield:

I am delighted with my field of labor in the Louisiana Conference, and have had a delightful reception. The ladies of the Home Mission Society have furnished the parsonage, connected every room for natural gas, and are planning to make some important changes in the house; the board of stewards have made a substantial increase in the salary, and are arranging to pay the pastor promptly and uphold him in many ways. We have organized a senior League with 27 members; a junior League with 40 members; a Sunday school workers' council to push the school; have received 24 new members, and have visited nearly the whole membership, notwithstanding the rain and mud. Brother Turner left many friends here, and all regard him as a fine preacher. Brother Joyner is becoming a familiar figure, and is faithfully and effectively pushing the interests committed to his hands. The college has gained slightly in attendance, and is otherwise at least holding its own in popularity and efficiency. Brother Sheppard, pastor emeritus, with his good wife, is in fairly good health, and is strongly entrenched in the love and respect of all the people of the city and parish, regardless of church affiliation. Brother Clide Clark, at South Mansfield, is plugging away in a new, hard field. He has in him the elements of success. Leap year may help him. Altogether, this pastor is happy and hopeful.—Thomas H. Morris, P. C.

IN MEMORY OF ROYCE WINSTEAD.

Whereas our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to send his death angel into the home of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Winstead, and take from our midst one of our beloved members in the very bloom of youth, therefore, be it resolved:

First—That in his going we have lost an excellent student, a worthy friend and a loving companion.

Second—That his death brought grief and sorrow to the entire school and community.

Third—That we have just reason to trust that he is, to-day, dwelling in a brighter and grander world, where sorrow never comes.

Fourth—That with grieved hearts we extend to his bereaved family and loved ones our sympathy and our prayers that their broken hearts may be healed by him who is kind and merciful.

The Sunday School.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. B. F. Lewis.

Do not forget the State Sunday School Convention which meets in Jackson, April 3, 4. Let every Sunday school arrange to send delegates. Entertainment will be free.

At Gloster, Bro. E. C. Gunn has taken in hand the complete and thorough organization of his school. The possibilities there are great. The only school today which can hope to do effective work is the organized school. It is encouraging to find so many pastors thoroughly awake to this fact.

A new Sunday school has been organized at Shipman on the Lucedale charge, Rev. J. Y. Bowman, pastor. Brother Broadfoot, of Forest, has also gone into hitherto unoccupied territory. Sunday school extension is the order of the day. There are many places where new schools are possible, and where only a little effort will bring similar results.

In a few weeks the good people at Capitol Street, Jackson, will go into their new church. The wide-awake pastor, Bro. Morse, has already ordered literature and helps with a view of putting the Sunday school fully abreast of the times. The Beginners Department will be organized on the Departmental plan, and the other departments will be organized as far as practicable, but without superintendents. We look for better work there than there ever before.

A week or so ago there was published in this column a question asking the Sunday school children to give the names of the seven men in the Bible who were named before they were born, with the places where found. From Merigold, North Mississippi Conference, comes the little Virginia Francis Park, age thirteen, who has partly answered the question. From the answer given, I think Virginia did not fully understand the question, and so think she is entitled to have her name published. She tried, and did not fail.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Keep moving. Things move so fast these days that people who say, "It can't be done," are interrupted by people who "do it."

Miss Sallie Kilpatrick's mixed class has put a phone in the parsonage at Verona, Miss., thus facilitating Brother Langley's work.

Work with Intermediate or Senior boys and girls means individual work with them. This is the only way. It must be personal. It means helping them to live completely that life that is their very own.

Mr. A. D. J. Glenn of Brooksville, has a fine Sunday school of 130, with an average attendance of between 60 and 90. He has a fine Primary Department in charge of a skilled leader in that line of work.

Six-sevenths of the Sunday school population of North America is in the country and in villages of 2500 or less, and here is an answerable argument in favor of better rural Sunday schools in every respect.

A Christian Korean purchased 1500 marked copies of the Gospel of St. Mark to give to his unbelieving neighbors, and still you say you can't get your class to join the Pocket Testament League. Weigh the Korean's advantages and yours, and then get busy and bring about results.

A Canadian exchange says there are three kinds of A. B. C. members in Ontario—the Willis, the Wonts and the Can'ts. The first accomplish everything; the second oppose everything, and the third fail in everything. It would be well if each Southern Methodist class should label itself.

"A good Bible scholar can teach the Bible, but it requires a real Christian to teach Jesus Christ." So teacher remember, times and seasons, dates and local color, and archaeological and exegetical accuracy, will never make you a successful Sunday school teacher. It takes a living, vital knowledge of Christ to do that; and both together make the ideal teacher we need so much.

So many times the question is asked, "What is the best time for doing hand-work?" Mrs. Bryner, out of her fullness of wisdom and experience answers, "Before the school opens; and the work should be that of the lesson taught the previous Sunday." This hand-work can be done on swinging shelves, home-improvised tables, or even on the chairs with the children sitting on the floor. Equipment is primarily the result of consecrated ingenuity and determination.

"Are you willing to forget what you have done for other people and to remember what other people have done for you; to ignore what the world owes you, and to think of what you owe the world; to put your rights in the background, your duties in the middle distance, and your chance to do a little more in the foreground? Are you willing to stop asking how much your friends love you, and ask whether you love them enough?" This excerpt from one of Vandyke's beautiful heart messages is well worth the reading and remembering.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, of Tupelo, celebrated a Girls' Day in his fine Sunday school not long since. The following paper, read by a girl in the Intermediate Department contains so much that is helpful for every grade of this great work, that it is given in full. It is as follows:

What a Girl Can Do To Make the Sunday School Interesting.

(1) I can be prompt; (2) I can do cheerfully what I am called on to do; (3) I can sing—nothing adds more to the inspiration of the service than singing; (4) I can be a self-appointed Look Out Committee all by myself—I can invite strangers to come to our Sunday school, and if I see strangers there, I can speak to them, and make them welcome; (5) I can always be kind in my judgments and not severely critical of any member of the Sunday school; (6) I can so take the interests of the school on my heart that I can really feel that it belongs to me, instead of my belonging to it; (7) I can help to beautify the church by placing flowers or ferns in an attractive way; (8) I can give at least an hour's preparation to the lesson, and, by doing this, I am sure to reap some spiritual benefit—in short, I can be just the girl I should be and live up to all the privileges I have, and if all the girls did this, the Sunday school would be more interesting."

It tells all about the manuscripts and versions of the Bible, all about the Latin and Greek Bibles, all about the Catholic Bible, all about the Protestant English Bible. It contains full Bibliography and Index. Contains over 200 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.
"I know nowhere in a single volume such well-digested and well arranged material on this great subject about which you have written so well."—Bishop Hendrix.

"It deals with a subject and in a way that should gain for it a wide reading and study."—Bishop Kilgo.

"This is in every way an admirable treatise. The statement is compact, scholarly. This volume is destined to prove of great value and popularity."—Bishop Atkins.

"Young preachers and Bible students will count you a benefactor."—Bishop Key.

"It shows vast research and careful and clear setting forth of a fund of information touching the Book of books."—Bishop Morrison.

"An excellent summary, bringing within brief space about all that is known of the history of the Great Book. I hope that it will circulate widely."—Bishop Wilson.

"It should find a place in the libraries of all our preachers."—Bishop Candler.

The price is $1.00, postage prepaid. Order to-day of the author.

LOUISIANA EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN.

Slate for Rev. A. W. Turner, Conference evangelist:

Centenary College—March 6 to 16.
Homer—March 24-April 7.
Gibbsland—April 7-April 14.
Mer Rouge—April 19-April 29.
Alexandria, First Church—April 29 to May 13.

The following pastors have agreed to hold a ten days' meeting wherever the evangelistic committee may designate, and to give all financial return therefrom, over and above expenses, to the evangelistic fund:

W. W. Drake, Baton Rouge, La.
C. V. Brethaupt, Houma, La.
R. H. Bamberg, Vernon, La.
W. W. Holmes, New Orleans, La.
A. I. Townsley, Arcadia, La.
Wm. H. Coleman, Ruston, La.

Let any pastor desiring the assistance of Brother Turner, or any one of the above, write the chairman of the evangelistic committee, stating date desired.

Let any pastor who will join this evangelistic movement agreeing to give ten days to the work, also write the said chairman. Fraternally yours,
WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

EFFECT OF ONE BOTTLE.

Crandall, Tex.—"After my last spell of sickness," writes Mrs. Belle Teal, of this city, "I remained very ill, and stayed in bed for eight weeks. I couldn't get up, all this time, and though my doctor came to see me every day, he didn't do me any good. I had taken but one bottle of Cardui, when I was up, going everywhere, and soon I was doing all my housework." Cardui helps when other medicines have failed, because it contains ingredients not found in any other medicine. Pure, safe, reliable, gentle-acting—Cardui is the ideal medicinal tonic for weak, sick women. Try it.

Convalescence after pneumonia, typhoid fever and the grip, is sometimes merely apparent, not real. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands so testify. Take Hood's.

Stone in Bladder Removed

Without Surgical Operation

In the Spring of 1904, I was confined to my bed with kidney trouble and thought that I would never recover. I took a lot of medicine but did not realize any benefit from anything. I finally saw Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root advertisement and sent for a sample bottle and thought the sample bottle helped me, so I bought more of the medicine from my Druggist, and after using a few bottles discharged a very large stone from my bladder.

After passing this stone my health was very much improved and I have been able to continue my business without any serious sickness.

J. L. KNOWLES,
Headland, Ark.

Personally appeared before me this 8th day of September, 1909, J. Loftus Knowles who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

MRS. JOHN DREW BETTER.

McLeansboro, Ill.—"About five years ago," says Mrs. John L. Drew, of this place, "I was afflicted with pains and irregularity every month. I suffered continually, was weak and despondent, and unable to do my housework. I took Cardui, and in one month, I felt like a new woman and worked hard all summer. I am now in perfect health, and recommend Cardui to all suffering women." Every day, during the past 50 years, Cardui has been steadily forging ahead as a result of its proven value in female troubles. It relieves headache, backache, womanly misery and puts fresh strength into weary bodies. Try it.

FROM LELAND, MISS.

Dear Doctor Meek: Since coming into this, the Greenville District, a little more than one year, I have visited quite a number of places in it, and every where I go I find the foot prints that you made when you were the presiding officer over this part of our Conference. It will take more than an overflow to obliterate those same tracks. It is not necessary for me to tell you what a great country this Mississippi Delta is. There is none superior in fertility of soil and adaptability to the successful cultivation of those crops essential to the support and prosperity of the people. And I might add that it would be impossible to find any where a kinder and a bigger-hearted people than these in this section.

There is just now a little feeling of gloom pervading our business circles. The boll weevils made their appearance here last year. The merchants and planters do not yet know just how they are going to come out. They believe that they are going to win in the fight against the weevils by raising hogs, corn and hay.

My church began the conference year under a great sorrow. On Saturday after our North Mississippi Conference adjourned, Brother J. E. Rather left us for his eternal home. Brother Rather was widely known throughout the Conference. He frequently represented this district in our annual gatherings. He was greatly beloved here in Leland. He was always ready to help the poor in their need, the sick in their distress, and the bereaved in their sorrow. His was a ripe Christian experience daily ennobled by communion with the Father through the Son. He was a good man. He leaves his wife, a noble Christian character, a brother, and other relatives to mourn his going.

In January we lost one of our best boys, Jesse Jennings. Jesse was a church member of nearly two years' standing. He was a splendid Sunday school scholar, and a boy whom we all loved and in whom we could place the fullest confidence. It is well with Jesse.

It seemed to us that our cup of sorrow was already full, but not so; because on the morning of the 14th inst. there came to me a telegram from Mr. W. H. Horton, of Ada, Okla., bearing the sad intelligence of the death of his wife. On the first of this year Mr. Horton and family moved from Leland to Ada, and a few weeks afterwards, I was requested to forward the church letter of Mrs. Susie Hill Horton to her in her new home. Sister Horton was a charter member of our Home Mission Society here, and one of our best church workers. She was a graduate of Grenada College; and besides her college training, she was a woman of considerable native ability. She was singularly free from little faults as well as large ones. She was one of those characters that always knew how to do the right thing just at the right time. Her life has been a benediction to this town.

Aside from the sorrows that have come to us, our church work is moving along well. We have a loyal membership, and better still, quite a number that are manifesting the signs of true spiritual growth. Rev. W. W. Woollard, our presiding elder, is urging the pastors of the district to give themselves to frequent periods of prayer that there may be this year a great ingathering of souls. I trust that the prayers of these itinerants may be answered with power.

JAS. T. McCAFFERTY.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if anyone afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 701 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

A FEW NEW BOOKS.

The attention of the readers of the Advocate is respectfully directed to the following new and needed books from our Publishing House.

First, "The Southern Methodist Hand Book for 1912." This has become an indispensable annual publication of up-to-date facts and figures concerning our own Church and of the whole religious world. It is the tool chest of the intelligent Methodist preacher and layman, in that it is a reference book which he almost daily needs. One should not mind paying 25cts each year for this ready reference book of up-to-date information as to the latest results of Christian work at home and abroad.

Second, "Songs of Praise and Service for Sunday School and Young People's Meetings." This is our latest and one of the very best to be found anywhere for the uses indicated in the title. It is in good cloth binding, round or shaped notes, at the following reasonable prices: $3 per dozen; $25 per hundred, not prepaid; sample copy, 25 cts post paid.

Third, "Proceedings of the Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference Held at Toronto, Canada, October 1911." This is a book of nearly 800 pages well-bound in cloth, and contains the addresses, discussions and a few of the sermons of that great convocation. Price, $2, post paid.

We are also handling that great and useful work for preachers, "The Expositor's Dictionary of Texts, Containing: Outlines, Expositions and Illustrations of Bible Texts," etc. in two large volumes. Price $10 net. Charges extra.

Let us have your orders, quickly and rapidly, for any of the above mentioned books accompanied with the cash or its equivalent (See Discipline page 233, paragraph 425). I hope all accounts made previous to February will be settled very soon as the financial year of the Publishing House closes March 1. Yours faithfully

G. W. BACHMAN,
Colporter.

Winona, Miss., Feb. 15, 1912.

REV. GEO. JACKSON.

Our hearts were made sad when the word came to us that Brother Geo. Jackson was dead. True he had traveled far past the "three-score years and ten" limit, still we were not prepared for the messenger, and were shocked at his coming. He passed away at the Sanitarium in Shreveport, Feb. 15, at 11:30 a. m., where he had been taken, and cared for by the Missionary Society of Shreveport.

He has answered to roll call in the Church Militant for the last time, and his Master has transferred him to the Church Triumphant. He loved his Church and loved to preach Christ and Him crucified. The Methodist Church has lost one of its truest members, his family a loving father, and we a friend indeed.

Therefore, be it Resolved, That while we bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, we will cherish the memory of our departed brother, and try to so emulate his virtues, that when our summons come, we, like him, may go with joy to our reward.

Be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the Lecompte Missionary Society, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy to the Lecompte Drummer and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. S. M. MUNHOLLAND,
Mrs. A. C. COLLINS,
Mrs. ANNA C. LYON,
Mrs. John BREWER,

THE TRUTH ABOUT ICEBERGS.

From Harold J. Shepstone's "Icebergs" in March St. Nicholas.

Many existing theories regarding icebergs require modification. For instance, it has generally been believed that for every cubic foot of ice above water there are seven below, and a berg, therefore, that towers, say 100 feet above the ocean level, has a total height of 800 feet. Lieutenant Peary, the conqueror of the north pole, declares that this is not always the case. "It is true," he says, "that the heaviest portion of the berg is submerged, but it is wrong to say that seven-eighths of its height is under water. I have noted several instances where only two-thirds of a berg was submerged."

It's not always temper—

That causes a horse to balk. It may be a Sore Shoulder, a Bruise or a Strain—maybe Colic or Bots. Dr. Tichenor's Antiseptic cures all of these troubles.

NOTES FROM THE NEWTON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The 31st day of January I was with Bro. C. C. Evans at Union. Both of the churches of the charge—Decatur and Union—were well represented at the quarterly conference, and all present were in fine spirits. The stewards made the assessment for the pastor the same that it was last year—$900. The reports of the preacher indicated progress in all the departments of the church work.

On February 3 and 4, I was at Lawrence on the Lake Circuit. I was greeted by quite a number of officials, possessed of such optimism as would add sunshine to any occasion. Bro. H. F. Tolle, the hustling pastor, reported that there is an active Sunday school at each of the four churches on the circuit; that the spiritual state of the Church is very good; that the debt on the parsonage has been recently paid off; that the new church at Eureka is finished, except seating (the pews are ordered and the first Sunday in May is the time set for dedication) and that plans are now being projected for a new church at Lake. One church which was carrying an assessment of seventy-five dollars was taken from the Lake Circuit at Conference, but the stewards made the assessment for the preacher the same as last year, $1,000.

On Wednesday, Feb. 7, I went to Montrose, where I found Bros. G. H. Galloway and H. G. Norseworthy. Senior and Junior pastor, respectively, with their work well in hand. Wednesday night I preached to an appreciative congregation, composed mostly of young people. Thursday morning I visited our Training School, and a busier and happier student body I have never seen. It is really inspiring to see the good work being done there. Brother Galloway and his corps of teachers are making an enviable record. In the quarterly conference Thursday morning, the stewards made a little advance over last year in assessment for the pastor.

I held the Chunkey quarterly conference at Chunkey, Friday, Feb. 16. As usual there were only a few officials present, but those who attended were in good humor, and we had a very pleasant conference. The stewards made the same assessment for the preacher that they made last year. Bro. C. C. Griffin, the very efficient and popular pastor has begun the new year's work very auspiciously. He and his family have received from their parishioners many substantial tokens of their appreciation of their return a second year on the circuit. On Friday night I was pleasantly complimented at the parsonage by a modest entertainment given by Miss Mary Griffin and one of her music pupils, Miss Clarine Harris.

Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 17-18, I was with our successful pastor, Bro. F. B. Ormond at Hickory. This is his third year on the Hickory circuit, and the indications are that it will be the best of the three. The quarterly conference Saturday morning was a pleasant occasion. The financial report was fairly good. The assessment for the pastor was made the same as last year. The services Sunday, both morning and evening, were very satisfactory.

T. J. O'NEIL.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Bro. Meek: As quite a number of my brethren of Mississippi and Louisiana have written to me since the death of our precious little daughter, I am going to answer them all together, through the dear old Advocate.

You will never know, my dear friends, until you have the same trial to pass through, what a comfort your words of sympathy have been to us. We have, indeed, been sorely bereaved in the loss of our little girl, who had just passed her fourteenth birthday. Though of a lively fun-loving disposition, she was also a consecrated little Christian, having given her heart to Jesus some two years ago during one of our regular services at Crowley. Though none of us knew of the serious nature of her illness until a few hours before her death, she was ready when the summons came, and assured us that she loved Jesus and was going to heaven. So, while our loss seems greater than we can bear, yet we know that Maud has entered into an eternal life of bliss.

I have gone into many homes to which the angel of death had come, and thought that I could enter into the grief of those who had lost a loved one; but I knew not then what they were passing through. We can never forget the dear good people of Crowley, who did everything in their power to help us by their tender loving sympathy, and every material aid that could be rendered.

We are now living at White Castle, a Catholic town, with a few Protestants, of different denominations, who all worship together, and to whom I am endeavoring to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, having been appointed to the work by the Home Mission Board of the Louisiana Presbytery. I also have a church at Plaquemine, where Bro. Wilson, the Methodist pastor, and his congregation gave me a brotherly welcome by worshiping with us at my first appointment there.

With best wishes to all for a successful year in things temporal and spiritual, I am, Yours fraternally,
W. H. BENTON.

45,000 BILLS IN THE LAST CONGRESS.

In an interesting article in the March Woman's Home Companion, entitled "How Laws Are Made," the Vice-President of the United States, James S. Sherman, tells exactly how the mechanism of legislation works at Washington. He goes on to say that in the last session of Congress 45,000 bills were introduced. Were Congress in session 300 days a year and working 8 hours a day, it could devote only half an hour to each of these measures. Where the average annual session is five months and Congress sits less than five hours a day, each bill could receive but eight minutes consideration. The major portion of this mass of bills is of a private nature, relating to pensions and claims against the government, but there are thousands of measures pertaining to general subjects, such as the tariff and other important matters. It is obvious that this immense number of bills cannot be considered individually.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

4 - - BIG FEATURES - - 4

OF THE ADVOCATE PIANO CLUB

ANY one of the following features would make a good proposition by itself, but when the four are combined in a single offer, it becomes irresistible. The advertising manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate was in the office of Mr. Dorough, the President of Ludden & Bates, in Atlanta, early in January and read the letters from club members of the past year, 1911. These show conclusively that the attractive features of the club are fully appreciated by its members. Everyone expressed himself as pleased. If you could only see the piano and hear it, you would not be surprised at the big success which has attended this undertaking. If you have not yet taken advantage of the club offer, we invite your careful consideration of the following attractive features:

1. Life-Time Guarantee

In purchasing a piano the chief considerations should be "Quality and Durability." Your piano should last a life time and more. That is why we have selected for the club offer a piano that has stood the test of time, and has demonstrated its quality and durability, a piano that is backed by a life time guarantee. This guaranty promises something, means it, and is the strongest guaranty ever given by any piano manufacturer. Read it carefully.

"We hereby guarantee Ludden & Bates piano No. _____ style _____ to be free from defects in workmanship and material for a life time. Should same ever arise, we agree to make it good at Atlanta, Ga., or replace with another, without cost to purchaser. We also give you the privilege of exchanging your piano at any time within one year for any other make of high-grade piano we handle, allowing you full credit for all payments made. We require from you only proper care of the piano while it has been in your possession. Ludden & Bates."

2. The Saving in Cost

Total quantity discounts on lot of 100 pianos..... $10,300

Saving to individual club member $103

There are no extras or contingencies. Everything is fixed and guaranteed. Ludden & Bates assume all risks and liabilities. The price mentioned above includes a handsome stool, attractive piano scarf and a complete and valuable course of lessons.

Music Lessons for Three Years

The amount saved through clubbing is sufficient to defray the expenses of your wife or daughter for a three years course in music under a competent local teacher.

3. Easy Monthly Payments

Some people look upon the purchase of a piano as an investment—not as a luxury. It is both. A good piano pays dividends of the most valuable kind—happiness, culture, refinement, education. What better financial asset can your wife or daughter possess than a good musical education? It has made many a woman independent. Has enabled her to win her way in the world when the bread winner of the family has been taken away.

That is why we encourage club members to take advantage of the easy monthly payments. The terms are made to suit your convenience—monthly, quarterly, annually, or if you prefer, cash.

4. Free Life Insurance

This feature provides "That in the event of your death after $60 (or six monthly payments) have been paid on your piano, all further payments are thereby cancelled, and your family is given a receipt in full." This removes every possible objection to the partial payment plan, and makes it easy for anyone to own a splendid high-grade piano. The life insurance feature makes the purchase of your piano a safe, as well as a sound investment. Protected by the life insurance you can afford to buy your piano in the same way you buy your groceries, clothing, etc.—a little at a time.

Many Other Attractive Features

We can't begin to tell you here all of the attractive features of the piano and the club. The four mentioned above are given simply to whet your appetite. The full menu is contained in the club catalogue. Won't you write us to-day for a free copy? You will then understand why club members write such letters as these.

Clemson College, S. C., Dec. 11, 1911.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.:
Dear Sirs—The piano which you shipped me on Nov. 22, 1911, was promptly received and in excellent condition. I consider it a very pretty instrument, and several good musicians who have examined it pronounce its tone and action very good indeed. It is quite in keeping with the "sterling silver" quality which an acquaintance of more than 20 years leads me to expect always from your house. Wishing you continued success, I am
Yours very truly,

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

VOL. 59—No. 10.

"Prove All Things; Hold Fast That Which is Good"

WHOLE No. 2825.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1912.

CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

"We have careful thoughts for the stranger,
And smiles for the sometimes guest;
But oft for our own the bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best."

Bishop Berry, in discussing the small percentage of growth in the Methodist Episcopal Church, is quoted as saying: "The pruning of records will no longer explain, nor should we be comforted by the fact that other Churches are doing no better. We are an army of conquest and we must advance or retreat. If the fires of evangelism die out on our altars, we shall be smitten with death." These earnest words have the right ring.

Sir Robert Perks, the distinguished British Wesleyan layman, in addressing the Methodist Preachers' Meeting in New York City, is credited with having made the following suggestive utterance: "In England, I am glad to say, it is not yet necessary to advertise special music and a picked quartette to induce Methodists to come to church. A preacher there does not subordinate himself to counter attractions. I have seen more of such sacrifice in the United States and Canada than I like to see. I think such sacrifice should cease. Methodism was born in a pulpit. When the pulpit declines, the whole fabric declines. And the pulpit does decline when it is overshadowed, as it too often is."

The question as to what effect the great revolution in China will have upon the cause of Christianity in that country is one in which all the Churches are deeply interested. The general impression is that it will be advanced, rather than hindered, by the sweeping changes that are there going on. The Chinese Recorder, a monthly missionary periodical issued in China, in discussing this subject says: "Unless the signs fail, the end of the present revolution will mean a wider field and greater freedom of action for Christianity, for many of the men prominent in the revolution have espoused Christianity; and of the rank and file, large numbers have been under the same influence."

It is interesting to observe that modern philanthropy frequently crosses racial and national lines. Mr. Carnegie has established "Hero Funds" in several European countries; the Nobel prizes are not restricted to any one nation; a short time since Mr. Rockefeller gave $11,000 to the citizens of Dole, France, to aid in the preservation of the home of Louis Pasteur, the eminent French scientist, and from every quarter of the civilized globe funds are now being sent to China to relieve her famine-stricken millions. The truth is, though greed and oppression and strife are yet far too generally prevalent, the inhabitants of earth, under the influence of the gospel of Christ, are coming more and more to recognize the universal brotherhood of man.

DR. CAMPBELL'S OBSERVATIONS.

Dr. R. J. Campbell, Joseph Parker's successor in London, after an extensive American tour lasting several weeks, has returned to England, and has been giving to some of the periodicals of that country his impressions as to religious conditions existing in the United States. He stated that there is more literalism and less liberality of thought among the clergy of this country than that of Great Britain; that our Churches have been more appreciably influenced by the prevailing materialism of the day than those of the Mother Country, "religion among us being more generally regarded as a one-day-a-week thing," and that there is "a wider gulf between the religious and social consciousness" here than in England. Dr. Campbell denied that he was coolly treated in the American cities because of his theological views, and stated that, on the contrary, he was given a courteous reception and a kindly hearing everywhere he went.

In his own paper, "the Christian Commonwealth of London, Dr. Campbell says:

"One of the things that impressed me most was the growth of the influence of the Roman Catholic Church since I was last in the States, nine years ago. The press shows more deference to Romanism than it does to Protestantism. Boston, once the home of Puritanism, is now under Catholic domination. On Thanksgiving Day the President of the United States, although himself not a Catholic, attended mass at a Catholic cathedral. Protestants attribute this increase to immigration, but a Roman Catholic Archbishop assured me that it is largely due to direct conversions also. The fact certainly needs accounting for."

Dr. Campbell is also represented as saying that he thinks "on the whole there is in America less of real and deep religious life than in England."

Though we have not had the privilege of firsthand observation in Great Britain, we are inclined to doubt the correctness of this last view expressed by Dr. Campbell. It seems to us to be out of harmony with the fact that in the United States the Churches are steadily gaining in numerical strength, whereas in the British Isles many denominations have for several years sustained a numerical loss, and in none of them has the percentage of growth been large.

We regret to admit that we think Dr. Campbell is right in his remark that the influence of the Roman Catholic Church with our Government and the press of the country has perceptibly increased within recent years. We do not, however, believe that this is due to a gain in the relative strength of the Romish Church as compared with that of other denominations, but to its greater activity in politics. Mr. Taft has shown a fear of the Roman Catholic vote far greater than that of any of our former chief executives, and has made a more obsequious effort than any other president to deport himself so as to secure it in his race for re-election. Indeed, his course ought to arouse the resentment of Protestants in every part of the republic. The change of New England from Protestant to Catholic territory has been brought about by foreign immigration. The Archbishop referred to by Dr. Campbell would find it a difficult task to prove that conversions have contributed materially to this striking transition.

THE SMALL COLLEGE COMMENDED.

There are many who seem to think there is merit in the mere size of an institution of learning; that a course at some renowned university like Harvard, or Yale, or Cornell is more apt to fit one for large usefulness in life than a course at one of the smaller colleges. But this is by no means certain. The instructors in a small institution can consider to a far greater extent the individual aptitudes and needs of the pupils than is possible in a school where the enrollment reaches up into the thousands. In an address to the Graduate Club of New York City, delivered on Lincoln's birthday, President Taft, who is a graduate of Yale and who began life in comparative affluence, made the following statement concerning the alumni of our smaller educational institutions:

"I am bound to say that the graduates of the smaller colleges have certain advantages over those of the larger institutions. Somehow, they seem to get started on the road to success with better adaptation. Sometimes, I suppose there is an added inspiration to show what greatness really is, in having to start from a humbler origin."

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING NEEDED.

The Editor of the Baltimore Southern Methodist recently wrote an editorial on "The Passing of Congregational Singing." He laments its decline, and says, "Few things would be more profitable than for the ministry to revive the old-fashioned way of singing, with its soul-stirring power." To this timely utterance, we desire to give a hearty amen. There are not a few churches scattered over the country that are suffering from an overdose of choir. There is no more justification for allowing a few persons to make a display of their musical talents in a service in the sanctuary, and thus waste an opportunity to bless the people through the ministry of really spiritual songs, than there would be for the preacher to forget his mission and use the sermon as a means of exalting himself. Nothing should be tolerated as a feature of public worship which does not honor God by bringing those in attendance closer to him.

The great English statesman, Edmund Burke, said: "The nerve that never relaxes, the eye that never blanches, the thought that never wanders—these are the masters of victory." This is but a rhetorical way of saying that it is the man who has mastery of himself that triumphs in life's fierce battles. Self-control is a tremendous source of power.

THE SECRET OF JOY.

By J. Saunders.

Do you wish to know the secret of joy in old age? Here it is. Keep young and sweet and hopeful. Still love and keep looking forward. Live in the future, not in the past. Dr. Alexander McLaren, the great English preacher who recently passed away, was one of the youngest of old men. He would often go long walks with young men, and he was the most active, sunniest member of the company. His mind fed upon the helpful and invigorating food; his hands had a congenial task; he companied with the young; he kept young; he kept growing, and so in the evening time there was light, because his soul was young, and the sun was shining. Listen to blind George Matheson:

"There is a life that remains ever young
All through the day, all through the day,
Singing at evening the song it has sung
All through the length of the day.
Love is the glory that never grows old;
Telling the story a hundred times told,
Keeping it light where the shadows have rolled,
All through the length of the day."

Old age has its dangers, but they are or should be really insignificant to the joys of the evening time. When Napoleon in his many European wars was hard pressed, he did not command the raw boys to be brought forward; he did not ask for the inexperienced men who were fighting their first battle. No, he called for the old guard, men who had been with him through thick and thin, men, many of them, whose hair was gray, men who had lived long. They were his chief support when the battle was fiercest and most anxious. Why did Napoleon rely so much on the old guard? Because they were men of experience and ripeness, with a history behind them. A life well spent in worship to God and service to men ripens with a rare meekness as year chases year.

What inspiration has come from aged people, and what mighty works have been done! I well remember two dear old souls who, wended their way to Church whenever the weather permitted in a little country town in Victoria, Australia. Their name was Church—Mr. and Mrs. Church—how appropriate! I tell you it was an inspiration to all to see these old saints in their accustomed place at the morning service. It is a beautiful tradition which has gathered around the last days of John the beloved. He was an old man, nearly one hundred years. The dark days of Patmos were forgotten. John was again with his faithful people at Ephesus. At the morning meeting he would mount the pulpit with tottering step and as the tears trickled down his dear, worn face, would talk as a father to his people: "My little children, love one another." That was all, and those simple words coming from such a heart were worth far more than thousands of the world's greatest sermons. Think of Milton—old and blind, yet he wrote "Paradise Lost," and "Paradise Regained." See W. E. Gladstone, the Grand Old Man, ruling the House of Commons at the age of eighty-four. Did you ever hear of Sarah Hosmer, that dear old Christian lady, whose heart ached for the millions of India? She was not in the limelight. She was only a poor, hard-working woman, but she made her life and work count for a great deal. She lived by her needle. Five missionaries already were at work in India sent out by her money, yet at the age of sixty she said: "Oh, if I could send out but one more I could die happy." With her needle and thread, stitch after stitch, she worked day and night, until at last another, the sixth missionary, was speeding toward India.

These are some of the joys of the evening time. How delightful to sit out on a lawn in the cool of a summer evening! The day has been long, and hot, and trying, but good work was done. The evening time is full of rest, happy memories, and quiet joy. So should it be with the earnest Christian. The heat and labor of the day have been trying; there was hard fighting and loads to lift; the day seemed too long, but now it is evening time. God's hush has stilled the turmoil of the day. And at evening time there shall be light.

The tallest lilies droop at eventide,
The sweetest roses fall from off the stem;
The rarest things on earth cannot abide,
And we are passing away, too, like them:
We are growing old.

We had our dreams, those rosy dreams of youth;
They faded, and 'twas well. This afterpine
Hath brought us fuller hopes; and yet, forsooth,
We drop a tear now in this latter time
To think we're old.

We smile at those poor fancies of the past—
A saddened smile, almost akin to pain;
Those high desires, those purposes so vast,
Ah, our poor hearts. They cannot come again—
We're growing old.

"Old? Well, the heavens are old; this earth is, too, Much have we lost, more gained, although 'tis true
We tread life's way with uncertain feet.
We're growing old.

"We move along, and scatter as we pace
Soft grades, tender hopes on every hand;
At last, with gray-streaked and hollow face,
We step across the boundary of the land Where none are old."

—From the Christian Century.

CHILDHOOD MEMORIES OF NEW ORLEANS METHODISM.

Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

No. 1.

About the year 1845 my parents transferred their church membership from Hawesville, Ky., to New Orleans. We boarded on Canal street, near "Stone's Hospital." I attended a Sunday school, conducted by the Goodwin brothers near the head of the New Basin. Richard Keene, a teacher, then living on the corner of Baronne and Common streets (a slave mart—now the site of a Jesuit Roman Catholic church), gave a Sunday school celebration at his residence, which I attended.

Brother Keene had daily employment as a refiner, in the United States Mint. He was born in England, and, while limited in education, was remarkably zealous for the Lord in Sunday school mission work. He never tired of devoting his Sabbaths, after church hours, to hunting about the streets for children and placing them in Sunday school. He gathered many pupils for the Poydras Street school. When he moved his residence to what was then called "Lafayette," now the fourth district of New Orleans, and having no near church home, he proceeded at once to gather a flock of children into a Sunday school, which, in time, developed into the Louisiana Avenue church organization.

My parents moved from Canal Street to No. 28 Tchoupitoulas street, where my mother opened up a large boarding-house, accommodating employees of business houses and transient travelers. My father caught the Mexican war fever, raised a company "The Orleans Blues," of Featherston's Regiment of six month's volunteers, and was elected its captain. There came to board with us two Methodist ministers. One, Rev. Mr. Clark, was a missionary to the French population, of what was then known as the Third Municipality, with head quarters at Moreau Street Methodist church. Perhaps he aided in organizing that church. He opened a night school, and, under his tutorship, I took my first lessons in French. Tiring of his mission work, he quit the Methodists and became Rector of a Protestant Episcopal mission church, in the now fourth district of New Orleans, but soon after was transferred to some town near Cincinnati, Ohio.

The other minister was Rev. S. L. L. Scott, of whom Rev. W. C. Black gave so graphic an account in the New Orleans Christian Advocate last year. Bro. Scott had a poetical turn of mind. While with us, he composed a war song, "To Arms—To Arms, Americans, Hurrah, Hurrah, Hurrah," which my father had printed for Brother Rialdo and me to sing, to help gather recruits for the "Orleans Blues." One other song was on the final judgment day, beginning, "The last lovely morning, all blooming and fair." I do not remember that he was in New Orleans for any special mission work. Poydras Street Church, corner of Poydras and Carondelet, was, I think, a brick structure with wooden steeple. It stood there for many years representing the best that Methodism could do in the gay Crescent City. It was destroyed by a fire about 1852, which originated in the St. Charles Hotel, and destroyed Clapp's Church (Unitarian) Scott's Church (Presbyterian), and our Poydras Street Church. Sparks lodging in the steeple after flying several blocks, started these secondary conflagrations. Dr. Palmer's church occupies the site of Scott's Church, while Carondelet Street Church supplied the loss of the Poydras Church. Rev. Wm. Nicholson was our first pastor at Poydras Street Church. He was born in the piney woods of Mississippi, but was well educated and became an orator, and a highly cultured minister, attracting large congregations, and made such an impression upon the Episcopalians, that he was led to accept their offer of a better paying church north of "Mason's and Dixon's Line." He afterwards became a Bishop of the Reformed Protestant Episcopal Church. While at Poydras, he proved to be a good revivalist. Protracted meetings were held that would continue from 6 to 8 weeks, during which he gathered in a large membership.

One mighty agency that helped was a consecrated band of sanctified women (preachers in those days were not afraid or ashamed to preach a full salvation from all sin) composed of Sisters Canue, DeRush, Deacon, and Downer, and later on was recruited by Sisters Brown and Lane. Those women were mighty in prayer, song and house-to-house mission work, and, in after years, helped the Carondelet and Felicity Road organizations. My mother, her husband in Mexico, and she with near a hundred boarders and several small children to look after, was never too tired to be on the alert to invite souls to Christ, and attend the nightly meetings which often continued until after the theatres were closed.

Four or five young boarders, children from Methodist homes in other States, but in New Orleans sowing wild oats, were persuaded to attend one of the protracted meetings. For a while they seemed greatly interested. Mother was hopeful of their conversion. Night after night they were prompt in attendance. One night mother missed them. She felt uneasy. My brother and I, though little chaps, accompanied mother to and from the churchhouse, and always managed to visit the "land of Nod" before starting on our homeward trip. The absentee clerks weighed heavily upon her heart. Upon nearing a whiskey saloon, corner of Tchoupitoulas street and Natchez Alley, we heard the singing of Methodist hymns, such as "Jesus lover of my soul," "Am I a soldier of the Cross," etc. As we came opposite the screened doors of the saloon, we heard voices within evidently engaged in a mock revival prayer meeting. We came to a painful stop while the meeting progressed as follows: "Sister Canue, lead us in prayer." Then quiet prevailed while some one impersonated sister Canue; then a hymn was sung; then "Sister Deacon, lead us in prayer," followed by a hymn. Thus the revelers continued, until "Sister Downer" was asked to pray, and instantly Sister Downer was in their midst to their supreme consternation, and in a motherly tone of voice rebuked their sacrilegious conduct. Of course, they asked and obtained forgiveness, and amended their ways. From Tchoupitoulas street we moved for a short while across the Mississippi River to Algiers, now within the corporate limits of New Orleans. Rev. Cyprian Gridley was the pastor there. While there, on one occasion, I attended an old time Love-Feast with my parents. For some time I had desired church membership, but being only 9 years of age, and no especial attention being paid to enlist children I was patiently waiting until I became older. In the closing moments of the Love-Feast Brother Gridley threw out the Gospel net at a venture, in this way: "If there is any body present desiring church membership, make it known by coming forward and giving me your hand." Instantly, I said to myself, "While I am not grown, I am some body, and I will test the genuineness of the offer. He can but tell me that I am too young, and must wait until more matured in years." Another boy, a few years my senior, named Frank Daniels, seemed moved by the same spirit. We were accepted; none other than these two little minnows were captured at that haul of the Gospel net. Yet these two child recruits are now superannuated veterans of our beloved Methodism. Bro. Daniels, as a Sunday school superintendent of the Algiers Church, and I, after forty years of active service, as a member of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

DICK GRAY.

By Rev. H. P. Lewis.

Yes at least that was what everybody called him. Of course, his name was Richard. He was everybody's friend, except book agents. He worked hard and wanted other people to make an honest living by the sweat of their brow.

It was in December 1882, when I met him and formed his acquaintance. For twelve years we had lived near old Holmesville, where seven of our children were born. I had served every circuit in reach, except one, from two to four years, the last being Adams and Bogue Chitto. In December, 1882, Conference met in Crystal Springs; Bishop Wilson presided. I was read out for Providence Circuit with J. A. B. Jones, presiding elder. After reaching our new charge, Brother Gray was the first one to come to see us and bid us welcome. News had gone ahead of us that the new preacher had a wife and fourteen children, just six more than we really had with us. My predecessor had no children, so it made some of the people open their eyes, etc., when they heard that the new preacher had fourteen. Brother Dick Gray was prepared for any emergency. He had a large family of his own, and seemed to enjoy having a preacher with plenty of children. He loved his preacher and family, no matter how many children he had.

He was one of the few who observed family worship in his home. He lived close to the Lord, and did much to keep down strife and trouble in the community. My predecessor failed to understand and appreciate why he was not returned to the work. He was so disappointed and wrought up over it that he wrote a curt letter to the president of the board of stewards. The president took the letter and showed it to Brother Gray. After reading it, Brother Gray said: "Now, brother, don't show this to any one else, but burn it and say nothing about it." The letter was burned. Again, he seldom, if ever, repeated anything that he heard that might cause trouble ("He taketh not up a reproach against his neighbor"). He was a hard-working man and wanted other people to be likewise. He seldom patronized an agent of any kind, especially a book agent.

I went fishing one day, and had to pass through his field to get to the creek, where I hoped to catch some fish, but didn't. When I drew near where Brother Gray was plowing, he, being hot and tired, said, "Brother Lewis, when I saw you coming I got mad, and I got madder and madder 'till I saw who you were." "What were you mad about?" I said. He replied, "I thought you were a hook agent." He was not the only one in those days who was worried with book agents.

Brother Gray was a Democrat and had but little patience in those days with a Republican, as the following incident will show. A neighbor of his, though a clever, good man in most respects was a Republican and had an inclination to want to get into politics. He said, at an election in 1883, that if he should be so fortunate as to be chosen to represent his county in the State Legislature, though he might be sent there by the vote of the negro, he would feel just as much honored as if he had been sent by the white people. This was just a little more than Brother Gray could well stand. He held in till the polls were closed, then started home. He had to pass the parsonage to get home. I had just heard of a tragedy at a point on the I. C. railroad, in which a man was killed who was known to be the leading Republican in the county. In a conversation with Brother Gray I told him the news. "Yes," said Brother Gray, "we have a Sam D. in our midst if we only knew it." "Whom do you have reference to?" said I. He told me, then added, "If ever he comes in my house again, he will do so without being invited." I said nothing, but saw that if the matter was not nipped in the bud, there was danger of his trouble in the church. The day following I had Brother Gray to come and take supper with us. Supper being over, I requested my wife to stay in her room with the children as I wanted to talk with Brother Dick. We went into the parlor and engaged in conversation for awhile, all the time I was planning to bring the matter up in a way that would not excite anger. I began in this way. "Brother Gray, you said something to me last evening that I hope you have not mentioned to any one else." "What is it?" he asked. I told him, and then added, "This brother is the best support we have in our day-school, also in the Sunday school where he is a teacher. His children have joined the Church this year, and now we must deal kindly and gently with him." Then he said, "Brother Lewis, I take back everything I have said about him and promise to treat him right." It all passed off quietly, and two years after that our brother voted the straight Democratic ticket. At a camp-meeting on the Providence Circuit on one occasion, Brother Gray did not get in till the preaching hour on Saturday. Brother H. D. Howell was in the pulpit, giving us one of his best and happiest pulpit efforts from the text; "The Lord God is a sun and a shield, etc." Ps. 84:11. Brother Gray entered at once into the spirit of the occasion, almost went into ecstasies. He said to me afterwards, "Brother Lewis, I thought one of our Southern Methodist Bishops was present and doing the preaching." Brother Howell was one of our best camp-meeting preachers. He went home to rest three years ago. Brother Gray was able in prayer—he was good anywhere you put him. He was so helpful to his pastor. He went home to rest a few years ago. I loved him like a brother, and I fully expect to meet him in heaven. We need more such men; men who, as Brother Gray, "dwell in the secret place of the Most High, and abide under the shadows of the Almighty." Jackson, Miss.

THE CHURCH COLLEGE.

Rev. A. H. Williams.

In his address, "The Future of the Small College," Dr. Blackwell of Asbland, Va., quotes from Dr. Ivey Killerman in the "Popular Science Monthly" as follows: "Of the 620 colleges and universities in the United States, 74 per cent are denominational, and they have in them 66 per cent of all the students attending college." In figures compiled from the Commissioners' Report of Universities, Colleges, etc., in ten states, Dr. Blackwell also mentions that 669 A. B. degrees were conferred in one year by private schools (chiefly church colleges) and, in the same States, 301 A. B. degrees were conferred by State schools; 135 B. S. degrees were conferred by private schools and 396 by State schools; that the number of pupils in private schools is 23,912 and in State schools, 14,235; that the value of the private school property is $13,354,619, and of State school property, $11,761,300; that the private endowment for private schools is $7,945,605 and for State schools, $7,622,321.

Dr. Blackwell also says that we must get rid of the idea that those interested in one kind of an institution have no concern for the other kind. Both State and private colleges are parts of our system of higher education.

Bishop Candler, in his great address in Montgomery, Ala., said last year: "We get our ministers, as a rule, from the country, the parsonage and the church college. City churches produce few preachers. I do not say that you cannot now and then get a preacher from a State University or secular institution of learning, but you cannot rely upon such institutions for the supply of preachers needed. You can get a prophet like Daniel out of a lion's den, but as a rule dens of lions are not desirable theological seminaries."

This distinguished churchman and former college president also mentioned the fact that "knowledge detached from religion" often produces fatal results. Also it was said, "The most and best people in the South live in the country. When our country churches suffer, the whole connection feels the effect of that suffering." At the "altar of the church school" will be found the men sufficiently competent and self sacrificing to do the work of the ministry in the country.

CHINESE FAMINE SUFFERERS.

Our Methodist people are by this time familiar with the vast distress and suffering in China. Perhaps there will not be in a long time so bitter a cry from so large a number of people. 600,000 families are suffering from the results of war, flood, and famine. In one small area in the Yangtse Valley 140,000 souls are encamped in straw huts on small mounds of mud. This is one of the sorest and most extensive famines of modern times. It is not only a call from a needy people to the great Christian heart of America, but it is an opportunity for us to show to the suffering children of China that we possess the spirit of the Master we are seeking to teach them to know and love. A generous response at this time will not only feed the hungry bodies of men, but it will also open the way for the feeding of the starving souls of generations yet to come. It is said that $15 will save a whole family from starvation.

We are pleased to say that contributions are coming into our mission rooms at Nashville daily from various sections of the Church. We would urge upon our Methodist people to send at once their contributions to Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., and they will be promptly forwarded.

(The foregoing appeal is worthy of the attention of every reader of the Advocate. Every starving person in China whose life is saved in the name of Christ will be a living witness among a heathen people of the true spirit of Christianity.—A. J. G.)

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

If I might write only one more sentence during my life, it would be this: Let the mothers of this land be the chosen confidants and companions of their daughters. There is something wrong in every mother, how good soever she may be, whose young daughter cannot lay her head on her lap and, without fear of reproach or repulse, give expression of her full thoughts. That mother may, or may not, approve her daughters' wish or opinion; she may think it premature, or every way inadvisable; but, O the relief and safety to that daughter, that she may "tell mother!" Let the two talk it over together, as young companions do—honestly and frankly.—New York Ledger.

I will strive to raise my own body and soul daily into higher powers of duty and happiness, not in rivalry or contention with others, but for the help, delight, honor of others, and for the joy and peace of my own life.—John Ruskin.

Rev. John Jamieson Willis was ordained a Bishop for Uganda, Africa, in Westminster Abbey on Jan. 25. He is the fiftieth missionary of the Church Missionary Society of England to be made a Bishop.

Rev. J. B. Hartwell, who served the Baptist Church as a missionary in China for 53 years, died on Jan. 2. He was the first man, other than Chinese, to enter the city of Tung Chow, which is now one of the leading Christian cities of China.

The Methodist Woman's College in Rome, Italy, is so filled with students that the Government has forbidden the school to receive more pupils until additional room is provided. The boys' school under the same management is also crowded with scholars.

Dr. R. S. MacArthur, the distinguished president of the Baptist World Alliance, has declined the call to become the pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle of Atlanta, Ga., the place left vacant by Dr. Broughton's acceptance of a London pulpit.

Commander Eva Booth, head of the Salvation Army in the United States, is touring the South delivering her lecture, "Bridging the Gulf." Her lecture is a strong endorsement of the methods of the 75,000 trained soldiers in the Salvation Army and also a plea for the ballot for women.

At the recent Ecumenical Conference at Toronto, Canada, the following statistics were given out regarding world-wide Methodism: There are 55,888 regular ministers; 99,497 church buildings; 8,768,616 members and 32,934,076 adherents. Of this number, more than four-fifths are found in America.

Rev. Fred J. Paton, the distinguished son of John G. Paton, one of the heroes of the missionary world, is now in America in the interest of a fund known as the "Paton Fund for the New Hebrides." He is giving his life to advance the cause of the New Hebrides people for whom his father died.

On Friday, Feb. 23, Bishop John H. Vincent of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), celebrated his eightieth birthday. He has for many years been one of the most conspicuous figures in American Methodism, or for that, in all religious circles. He has been a leader in Sunday school methods and has done not a little for the advancement of education.

Dr. Charles M. Meldon was inaugurated president of the New Orleans University for colored students last week. The school is under the control of the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), and has received a liberal patronage from the Southern negroes. Dr. Meldon was given a royal reception by the school men of New Orleans and also by a number of visiting educators.

The Executive Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church recently adopted a proposed budget for the year 1912-13. The total amount asked for home missions is $1,238,607.95; total for foreign missions, $1,300,359.43; total for all permanent agencies including missions, education, etc., $3,360,515.78. This is an increase of $300,000 over last year's budget, and is based upon a ten per cent increase over the actual contributions of last year.

The Jaro Industrial Institute, one of the most progressive schools in the Philippines, was recently burned. It was the property of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society and accommodated 349 boys. The school has as its purpose the training of native Philipinos to be self-supporting, and, at the same time, religious. The school will be rebuilt, and an active campaign is being started by its friends to secure the money.

Facts which the Christian leaders of the world must look in the face are these: There are nearly seven million Methodists in America, yet the combined circulation of all the Advocates, North as well as South, is but 240,000. The Episcopalian weeklies have less than 50,000 subscribers. Other church papers suffer in like proportion. The Conservation Congress of the Men and Religion Movement, to be held next April, is planning to discuss the question of the church paper.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement is lending its national leaders, J. Campbell White and William B. Millar, and its secretaries in various cities, to the China Famine Relief Committee, which seeks to induce American philanthropists to send $1,000,000 to feed the 600,000 starving families of Central China. The committee has requested that all churches in America take an offering on Sunday, March 10, for that purpose, and that all theater managers give benefits for the fund as near that date as possible.

On Friday, Feb. 9, Abbe Charles Jean Maris Augustine Hyacinthe Loyson, known in later years as "Father Hyacinthe," died in Paris, France. He began his public ministry as a Roman Catholic priest, but, after his marriage with a leading reform worker, he severed his relations with the Romish Church, and spent his life in the interests of reform literature and controversial theology. During his closing hours he called to his bedside leading Protestant ministers and as his last words said: "I am filled with a feeling of joy and well-being. I can appear before God, for I am at peace with my conscience and my reason."

The Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church is said to be the oldest Book Publishing House in New York City. Its beginning dates back to 1789; so it has behind it 123 years of history. At present the net value of the New York branch is $2,488,310, and that of the Cincinnati branch, at $2,110,322. Its real estate alone is valued at more than $2,000,000, and it has paid over three million dollars to superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased ministers. The amount thus applied annually has been increasing for several years. In 1911, it reached the sum of $250,000.

Bishop Berry assembled twenty-three district superintendents (presiding elders) at Rochester, N. Y., on Jan. 23-24, and had an informal, round-table conference with them concerning the problems of church work. It seems that there were no long set addresses, but that a question would be raised and considered colloquially in much the same manner that Mr. Wesley was given to conferring with his preachers. Though opposed to the multiplication of conventions and conferences, we are disposed to think that such a council as this is calculated to do great good.

The American Bible Society, with the co-operation of the Arabian Mission of the Reformed Church, distributed 4,550 copies of the Scriptures last year in Southeast Arabia. The report for the year shows the war in Tripoli and the disturbances in Persia to have affected the minds of the Arabs and awakened a spirit of pan-Islamism. Opposition to a Christian gospel was therefore most pronounced. It is admitted that it will be a difficult task to dispel this opposition. In spite of drawbacks, however, great progress has been made by evangelistic and medical tours in the interior of the country, especially in the mountains of Oman, where there are 1,000,000 people. In Behrein 1,500 copies of the Khuthas, or short sermons delivered in Moslem style, conveying the gospel message but written expressly for these people, were distributed. (When a follower of Islam is seen conversing with a Bible colporter his fellow Moslems are most suspicious.) Importance is laid by the Bible Society upon the need for friendliness among the Arab peoples.

AN IRREPROACHABLE MINISTER.

When Rev. John A. Miller took his departure for the better land the Louisiana Conference lost one of its oldest and best members, and a long life of great usefulness was transferred to another realm of service for the Master whom he served so faithfully here. It is a most difficult matter to put the proper estimate upon a human character, for "when we know all we can learn of a man, there is sure to be an area we have never discovered—an immeasurable tract stretching into the unseen infinity." Transparency is another hindrance to the proper estimation of character. Everything is so simple, so open, so guileless that definitions and descriptions appear like impertinences. Brother Miller was one of the most transparent characters I have ever known. His simple manners, his open heart, his guileless disposition reminded you at once of the simplicity and openness and guilelessness of childhood. All these qualities showed themselves in that tell-tale of human character, the handshake. When you felt his grip you knew it was the welcome of a real, true, child-like man, and somehow the impression was made upon you that "here is one you can trust to the utmost limit."

I am sure it can be said of him as it was said of Moses, "he was faithful in all his house." He felt that "he was called of God as was Aaron," and realized that the call carried him beyond the personal life to a life larger, fuller and more lasting. In an eminent degree he had that fine and accurate sense for fidelity and sacrifice which submerged the personality and lifted the service into the higher ranges. This is the reason that his preaching, though not what the world calls "great," was most effective in winning men to Christ. In conversation with an intimate and life-long friend of Brother Miller's several years ago, he remarked that "Brother Miller had been an agent in leading more men to Christ than any preacher he had ever known." I would say that that is the best evidence of great preaching. "By their fruits ye shall know them." If the object of preaching is to lead men to Christ, then, when all things are adjusted at the bar of judgment, John A. Miller will tower above many who have world-wide fame as great preachers.

To those who knew him well he answered the description of one in New Testament times: "For he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and faith; and much people was added unto the Lord."

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE.

By Rev. W. G. HARBIN.

Bound in Cloth and Gold. Price 50c, postpaid.

The book deals with a subject of vital importance to every Christian and reveals an insight into the movements of God's Spirit upon the hearts of men, which should make it of much spiritual benefit to all who read and study it. The simplicity of treatment, the beauty of diction, and the wealth of apt illustrations give to the book a charm which holds the reader's attention from beginning to end. The author has rendered a distinct service to his fellow Christians.—Rev. D. C. Hull, M.A., President of Millsaps College.

The official flag of the United States has been ordered remodeled by the 4th of next July. The old flag has but 46 stars in it, but the new one will contain 48 stars.

Nearly 1,000,000 coal miners have quit work in England and are striking for an adjustment of their labor troubles.

W. Morgan Shuster, the deposed Treasurer General of Persia, has taken to the lecture platform, and the curious-minded American people are running wild to hear him speak.

The Chinese of Chicago and other large cities of America celebrated the old Chinese new year's day on Feb. 25, but announced that from hence forth they would adopt the Roman calendar and celebrate Feb. 25 as their independence day.

A bill has been introduced in Congress providing for the taking over, by the United States, of all the Express Companies and operating them in connection with the Post Office Department. This would involve the transfer of $39,165,819 worth of property.

The Susan B. Anthony Club of Cincinnati, Ohio, has instituted a campaign for the purpose of insuring from $500 to $1000 to every mother who raises a child, either boy or girl, to the age of 21. The campaign is not likely to accomplish much besides notoriety.

Full honors will be paid to the dead of the battleship Maine before they are put aboard a ship for transport to the United States. The Cuban Government is making liberal arrangements to pay high tribute to the soldiers who died in her behalf.

The Fish and Game Warden of the State of Kansas has installed a fish hatchery at Pratt, Kan., that is the largest in the world. It is estimated by Prof. L. L. Dyche, the Game Warden, that within a few years the State revenues from fish alone will exceed a million dollars.

The total value of Louisiana's 1911 crops was $85,236,403, grown on 4,957,142 acres of land. Each cultivated acre yielded $17 gross. Besides the farm products the State yielded 12,247,750 barrels of oil valued at $8,606,000; 200,000 tons of sulphur valued at $4,600,000 and 80,000 tons of salt valued at $240,000.

A Bible, in the hands of the old Empress Dowager of China, from which it passed to the hands of the young Emperor who by it was inspired to issue the Twenty-eight Edicts, which legislated liberally for education, industrial development and constitutional government, is said to be the direct cause of Chinese freedom. Thus it is claimed that the Bible created a Republic.

The Union League Club of Chicago has expelled from Edward Hines, a millionaire lumberman, because of his refusal to appear and answer the charges filed against him in connection with the Lorimer exposure. The Club holds that its mission is to promote high ideals in business, and

Mr. Hines' conduct has been such as to injure rather than help in this purpose.

An undertaking establishment in Chicago recently placed on exhibition the bodies of three criminals who had been hung. The display was used as an advertisement to attract attention to the equipment of the undertaker. A firm of undertakers in a leading city of the South recently advertised a bargain sale of coffins. We wonder to what further extremes this commercialized age will go.

Julius H. Hardburger, in an address before the Executive Committee of the Free Sons of Israel, a Jewish order, stated that every nation that had ever prosecuted the Jews had been destroyed. He indicated that those nations that are now making the life of the Jews miserable would meet a similar fate. He also predicted that the 10,000,000 Jews of the world will eventually all live in America.

The Men and Religion Movement will hold a congress in New York City, April 19-24, at which time Miss Jane Addams, a well-known settlement worker, has been invited to speak. She will deliver an address on the social evil, and her address will be the only one delivered by a woman during the session. Three thousand delegates have been selected to attend the congress, and it is announced that some radical recommendations will be made to the Churches of America.

According to the last statistics the South has increased in population during the last 32 years, 14,434,975; has added $3,068,000,000 to its industrial capital; increased its farm acreage 72,006,825 acres, and spent $1,000,000,000 upon its public schools. It is not surprising that this section has made such gigantic strides, when it is added that the South is wealthier than the United States was in 1860, and that it has doubled its wealth in the last thirty years.

The 28th annual dinner given by the alumni of Harvard University was enjoyed in Washington, D. C., Feb. 21. Dr. Abbott Lawrence Howell, one of the speakers, told the banqueters that education should precede physical training and morals. We believe he is wrong. Train the body and neglect the mind and morals and you get a prize-fighter; train the morals and neglect the mind and the body and you get a fanatic; train the mind and neglect the body and morals and you get a nervous imbecile, a moral profligate and a spiritual corpse.

Prof. J. E. Swearingen, State Superintendent of Education in South Carolina, is a blind man, and has been blind since his eleventh year. He has done more for the advancement of agricultural interests than any other one man of his State. It is well to remember the words of Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, the founder of the first school for the blind in this country. He said, "Blindness is an inconvenience, but not an affliction." Blind people have made valuable contributions to music, literature, politics and education, and it seems that there is no field that the blind are unable to enter.

The amount of coal mined in the United States during 1910 was greater by 10,000,000 tons than the total tonnage that had been mined up to the close of the year 1871. The total amount mined during 1910 was 492,500,000 tons, and its value was $629,557,021. The value of gold mined during the same year was $96,000,000; copper, $137,000,000; lead, $32,500,000; zinc, $27,300,000; stone, $77,000,000; cement, $69,000,000; sand, $20,000,000.

An attempt was made to prevent the Confederate Veterans from marching in parade at the approaching reunion at Macon Ga., but the old veterans entered such a loud and strong protest that the order was rescinded. Forbid an old soldier from marching in a parade and you take from him a highly prized privilege. Let the veterans parade! Give them the fife and drum and the right of way at their reunions, and permit them to march shoulder to shoulder with their comrades, who marched with them when principle was at stake, and the world watched the parade.

A NEW BOOK.

By courtesy of Charles C. Cook, the well known New York publisher, we have received a copy of "Millennial Dawnism," a pamphlet of 80 pages, written by Dr. I. M. Haldeman, pastor of the First Baptist Church of New York City. It is a vigorous exposure of this pernicious heresy, which some are industriously striving to spread throughout the country. Among the agencies which are seeking to propagate it are the "Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society" and a magazine known as "The Herald of Christ's Presence." Many of our readers will doubtless recall the fact that a note of warning against this propaganda was sounded through the columns of the Advocate a few weeks ago, and that attention was called to the fact that many of our country weeklies are lending aid to this movement by carrying as plate-matter Pastor Russell's sermons. It, therefore, gratifies us to see that Mr. Cook is exercising his influence to combat this unorthodox and hurtful teaching. He requests us to state that he has on hand a large edition of Dr. Haldeman's pamphlet for free distribution, and that a copy may be had by writing him at 150 Nassau Street, New York City.

WHITHER HEADED?

By Rev. George R. Stuart.

Is there a constantly increasing number of young women past twenty-one years of age seeking and finding means of self-support in offices, shops, and factories? Is there an increasing number of unmarried men past twenty-one years of age who seem absorbed in their own business or pleasure, utterly indifferent to young women and apparently indifferent to the subject of marriage? Is the desire weakening in young men and young women for the marriage that means a quiet home with children, industry, economy, and piety? Are separate clubs for men and women increasing? There evidently should be an affirmative answer. This article is not to provoke controversy but through consideration of things that seem to have dangerous tendencies.

It goes without saying that no man can love whom he does not honor and revere. Woman, from her head to her foot, has practiced a manner of attire and ornamentation which has silently, gradually, but none the less surely, won the disgust of men and wrought in their inner hearts a revulsion which woman does not know and cannot explain. When man sees piled upon a woman's head various quantities of hair which he knows is not her own, and whose past growth history inevitably suggests the diseased, filthy, unkempt condition of the living or dead from which it was taken, there is born a disgust which increases as he sees it from time to time lying on dresser, table, bed, or floor in tattered wads, or slipping from its pins to right or left, exposing the joke and making as pitiable and disgusting the effort at ornamentation as the huge rings in the ears of the savage. When man sees the studied effort by various kinds of lace, ribbon, "peek-a-boo," etc., to expose the body, or with various colors to produce effect, or by the "almost" produce what is more effective, the association of purity with impurity, the chaste with the unchaste is a psychological sequence; and the dropping of the higher toward the lower is a mental act for which man should not be blamed. The hobble skirt, the sheath skirt, the harem skirt, the middle blouse, the short sleeve, the visible stockings—all tend in the same direction and mother the same insidious suggestion. When all this is crowned with the huge, awkward, even grotesque thing they call a hat, the entire outfit must of necessity impair the elements of honor and reverence that go, in a large measure, to make up the genuine love of man for woman. This general expose of the female figure is witnessed on the street, in the stores, at all social functions and places of amusement, in the theater, in the vaudeville, and in haunts of vice, carrying similar suggestions everywhere with more or less obtrusiveness. This must lessen the distance between purity and impurity, and tend to blot out lines of difference between different classes of women and lower in man, without his consciousness of the means, his deep reverence for woman and weaken the desire for marriage. Have not our young men drifted into dissipation, idleness, and worthlessness till the better class of girls do not care to risk their lives in such hands? The association of man and woman in offices and shop and store and factory, in every-day garb and grime, destroys, to some extent, the delicate thoughts of each for the other, and renders the sexes common to each other and indifferent toward each other. The rush of women to business, the sharp competition of the sexes in jobs and salaries, and the general masculine tone of the woman of to-day have done something to impair the respect and reverence of the young man for the young woman and helped to weaken his desire for the softer, tenderer, sentimental relations out of which love and marriage grow. Men, thus drifted from women, from the tender, sweeter relations of domestic life, become absorbed in business and in manly sports and amusements. Our American women are being used more and more as the French women—rather to play with in hours of leisure or dissipation than to be made wives, life companions, mothers, and home makers.

If all this is true, and an observation for ten years from ocean to ocean and lake to gulf seems to indicate so to me, what is the remedy? My remedy is the home—the old-fashioned home. The happiest marriages, the best homes, and the finest social, business, or moral conditions are obtained by adhering strictly to the simple, economic, all-stay-together home life of our earlier days. Parents become eager for better financial conditions, are charmed by the stories of financial success of other families, and quit the old home where all the family could be kept under the protecting, mollifying, character-making influences of home and home associations and influences, and move to a near-by town. The children are put in store and shop and office; more money, more financial ambition, more temptation—all modern conditions follow. Parents who start life in towns or cities become restless for better financial conditions and put their boys and girls out to shops and stores and factories with the same results. I know that dissipated fathers, divorce, sickness, and death have thrust out many; but many families have, in spite of poverty, through economy and industry kept the home together. In these homes the girls have been reared in modesty, purity, and industry, guarded by father and mother till marriage to sober, honest, industrious men. The boys have been kept at home till established in character, and then under the advice of father and mother have entered business and made men. The breaking up of the American home is the beginning of trouble.

The next spring of evil is the desire on the part of ambitious parents, who have succeeded financially, to get into what is termed "high society" with their sons and daughters. Foolish customs, silly fashions, extravagant and immodest dress are followed, and thus our present conditions are brought about.

Back to the simple, economic, modest, industrious home life of the earlier days! Back to quiet homes, modest girls, industrious, moral boys! Back to the romance of courtship and the life of genuine love!—Midland Methodist.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.

The first step is to give up sin, and trust Christ to save you from it. Then begin the Christian life in a humble and trusting way, as the child begins the alphabet at school. Don't look for marvels. Don't expect to see visions. Don't ask for raptures, but ask expectantly for power to live in a way to please God. Believe that the Spirit of Christ will come into your heart, and cause you to love God and delight in his will; not because you feel happy, but because you are definitely trusting him to do what he has said he will do. He says that if you will forsake your sins he will blot them out, and give you his Holy Spirit. Believe it, and accept salvation as his free gift. He says he will enable you to live as a child of God should. Believe him, and undertake it. He says he will help you to bear your troubles; trust him and try him. He says he will give you strength for labor, courage for conflict, power to resist temptation, and grace sufficient for your every-day need; take him at his word, and you will soon know for yourself how blessed it is to trust and obey. Commit yourself to the new life you have undertaken to live by uniting with the church of your choice, and then take your duties as they come, and perform them in a way you believe will please God. Read your Bible daily, and bring your life into line with what it teaches, and your doubts will soon be gone.—Ram's Horn.

A STRIKING CO-INCIDENT.

The following letter has been received and forwarded to Brother H. Armstrong at Olla, Louisiana: "My attention has been called, by an old time friend, to an article published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate by Rev. H. Armstrong entitled 'Reminiscents.' The article mentions some sweet Christian experiences which the author had during the war with a pious soldier friend by the name of Ed Smith. Since I had a similar happy experience with a young comrade by the name of H. Armstrong at the time mentioned I conclude that I must be the same party.

But I must throw the bouquet in the opposite direction by saying that it was his beautiful Christian character that drew my soul to him and knitted us together as David's soul was to Jonathan's. I am in feeble health and will not tax my strength by writing more, but request that you put me in communication with dear Brother Armstrong and publish my compliments concerning him.

THE WEAK SPOT IN THE CHURCH.

"May I tell you something?" asks Gipsy Smith. "The weakest spot of every church is its prayer meeting. I am not a pessimist on preaching, and in my travels I have a fair chance of judging. There never was a day in the history of the world when the ministry was so loyal to Jesus Christ as today. There are exceptions; but I am speaking of the great mass. There never was a day when the ministers of the different denominations stood by the Cross as they are doing to-day. We are not weak in preaching; and it is cultured preaching. We are not weak there. We are not weak in church buildings. You never had such church buildings as you have today. You never were so rich in organizations of the Church as you are to-day. There never was a day when you had such magnificent singing as you have today. There was never a day when the Church was giving so much to missions as today.

"It is true that in all these things we are improving, but we are not having prayer meetings such as we had twenty years ago. You can get your communicants and church members to a social, even if it is a wet night; but where are they when it is a prayer-meeting night? Let me see your week-night prayer meeting and I will gauge the spiritual life of your church. . . . The prayer meeting is the generating force of the Church of God."—Christian Intelligencer.

THE VALUE OF GOOD BOOKS.

Let your boy escape for a time from the meanness of the boy across the street, and let him roam the woods with Hiawatha, sail the seas with Sinbad, build stockades with Crusoe, fight dragons with Jason, joust with Galahad; let him play at quoits with Odysseus, and at football with Tom Brown. These are playmates who will never quarrel with him, nor bully him, but from whom he will learn to be brave, self-reliant, manly, quick to do for others, and set with his face toward the light. "Tell me what company thou keepest, and I will tell thee what thou art," says the old Spanish proverb. The child who lives on terms of intimacy with such heroes as these cannot fail to be strong and true.—Walter T. Fields.

LOST.

What? Lost your temper, did you say?
Well, dear, I wouldn't mind it;
It isn't such a dreadful loss—
Pray, do not try to find it.

'Twas not the gentlest, sweetest one,
As all can well remember
Who have endured its every whim
From New Year's till December.

It drove the dimples all away,
And wrinkled up your forehead,
And changed a pretty, smiling face
To one—well, simply horrid.

It put to flight the cheery words,
The laughter, and the singing;
And clouds upon the shining sky
It would persist in bringing.

And it is gone! Then do, my dear,
Make it your best endeavor
To quickly find a better one,
And lose it—never, never!

THE STORY OF MARGARET.

In one of the fairest parts of the city of New Orleans, is a unique monument. But one word is inscribed on it. That word is "Margaret." The monument is on a triangular-shaped, grassy plot named by order of the city council "Margaret Place." It is noted, also, as being the first monument to a woman in the United States.

The monument is an interesting one. A short, plump woman is seated upon an old splint-bottomed chair, its legs wrapped about with a cloth reaching to the floor, as you may have seen a kitchen chair in some old-fashioned kitchen. The dress is a plain, every-day calico dress. A crocheted sack, faithfully represented by a sculptor's chisel, covers her ample shoulders. Her hair is combed back tight from her full, round forehead and is fastened in a close coil at the back. Her face is strong and kindly. By her side, and leaning confidently against the woman, is a child, an orphan, who looks gratitude into the face of the woman, a face that one looks at with admiration.

And what did Margaret Haughery do to deserve so fine a monument and to have the honor of the first monument ever erected to a woman in this country?

"There is not much to tell," says Grace King, in her "New Orleans, the Place and the People," and yet the story is as sweet and simple as love itself. "A husband and wife, fresh Irish immigrants, died in Baltimore of yellow fever, leaving their infant, named Margaret, upon the charity of the community. A strong, young Welsh couple, who had crossed the ocean with the Irish immigrants, took this little orphan and cared for her as if she were their own child. They were Baptists; but they reared her in the faith of her parents, and kept her with them until she married a young Irishman in her own rank of life. Failing health forced the husband to remove to the warmer climate of New Orleans, and finally, for the sake of the sea voyage, to sail for Ireland, where he died. Shortly afterwards, Margaret, in New Orleans, lost her baby. To make a living, she engaged as laundress in the St. Charles hotel. This was her equipment at twenty for her monument.

"The sisters of a neighboring asylum were at the same time in great straits to provide for the orphans in their charge, and they were struggling desperately to build a larger house, which was daily becoming more necessary to them. The childless widow, Margaret, went to the Superior and offered her humble service and a share in her earnings. They were most gratefully accepted. From her savings at the laundry, Margaret bought two cows, and opened a dairy, delivering the milk herself.

Every morning, year after year, in rain or shine, she drove her cart the rounds of her trade. Returning, she would gather up the cold victuals which she begged from the hotels, and these she would distribute among the asylums in need. And many a time it was only this food that kept hunger from the orphans. It was during those deadly periods of the great epidemic, when children were orphaned by the thousands. The new, large asylum was commenced, and in ten years Margaret's dairy, pouring its profits steadily into the exchequer, was completed and paid for. The dairy was enlarged, and more money was made, out of which an infant asylum—her baby-house, as Margaret called it—was built, and then the St. Elizabeth training-asylum for grown girls. With all this, Margaret still could save money to invest.

"One of her debtors, a baker, failing, she was forced to accept his establishment for his debt. She therefore dropped her dairy and took to baking, substituting the bread for the milk cart. She drove one as well as the other, and made her deliveries with the regularity that had become as characteristic as her sunbonnet was.

"She furnished the orphan asylum at so low a price and gave away so much bread in charity, that it is surprising that she made any money at all; but every year brought an increase in business, and an enlargement of her original establishment, which grew in time into a factory, worked by steam. It was situated in the business centre of the city, and Margaret, always sitting in the open doorway of her office, and always good humored and talkative, became an integral part of the business world around her. No one could pass without a word with her, and, as it was said, no enterprise that she endorsed ever failed, she was consulted as an infallible oracle by all; ragamuffins, paper boys, porters, clerks, even by her neighbors, the great merchants and bankers, all called her 'Margaret,' and nothing more.

"She never dressed otherwise than as her statue represents her, in a calico dress, with a small shawl, and never wore any other head covering than a sunbonnet, and she was never known to sit any other way than as she sits in marble. She never learned to read or write, and never could distinguish one figure from another. She signed with a mark the will that distributed her thousands of dollars among the orphan asylums of the city. She did not forget one of them, white or colored; Protestant and Jews were remembered, as well as Catholics, for she never forgot that it was a Protestant couple that cared for her when she was an orphan. 'They are all orphans alike,' was her oft-repeated comment.

"When she died, it seemed as if the people could not believe it. 'Margaret dead?' Why, each one had just seen her, asked her for something, received something from her. The news of the death of any one else in the city would have been received with more credulity. But the journals all appeared in mourning, and the obituaries were there, and these obituaries, could she have read them, would have struck Margaret as the most incredible thing in the world to have happened to her. The statue was a spontaneous action. While her people were still talking about her death, the fund for it was collected; it was ordered and executed, and almost before she was gone, she was here again, before the asylum she had built, sitting on her same old chair that everyone knew so well, dressed in the familiar calico gown with her little shawl over her shoulders, not the old shawl she wore every day, but the pretty one of which she was so proud, which the orphans crocheted for her.

"All the dignitaries of the State and city were at the unveiling of the statue. A thousand orphans, representing every asylum in the city, occupied the seats of honor; a delegation of them pulled the cords that held the canvas covering over the marble, and as it fell and 'Margaret' appeared, their delight led to shouts of joy, and hand-clapping. The streets were crowded as far as the eye could see, and it was said—with, no doubt, an exaggeration of sentiment, but a pardonable one—that not a man, woman or child in the crowd but knew Margaret and loved her."

Such is the story of Margaret, as told by New Orleans's historian. The orator at the dedication of her monument said: "The substance of her life was charity, the spirit of it, truth, the strength of it, religion, the end peace—then fame and immortality."

As I took the picture of her monument one clear February evening, a working man stood by, "I knew her well," he said; "she was a fine woman; she deserves all the honor given her."—Watchword.

For One Year (regular subscription rate)....$1.50
(Commission to agents, 15 cents for each subscription.)

Eight Months 1.00
To Preachers 1.00
To widows of preachers 1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilege of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain 10 cents commission on each subscription to cover expense of remitting, etc., provided they remit by money order, or New York exchange, or stamps, or registered letter. We reserve the right to give the paper to poor persons, on recommendation of their pastors, for $1. Other than this, there will be no deviation from the conditions herein stated.

It costs us 10 cents to collect a personal check. We therefore request our friends, when making small remittances, to send by money order or registered letter, or stamps, or by bank exchange. Any bank will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. This is the popular way of sending money without cost.

JUDGE LINDSEY ON CHILD-TRAINING.

Judge Ben R. Lindsey, the noted Juvenile Court Judge, of Denver, Colorado, delivered an impressive address before the Tennessee Congress of Mothers at Memphis on Saturday, March 2. His theme was "Privilege—the Beast," and many of his earnest statements are said to have carried conviction to the hearts of his auditors. Among other things he declared that the mothers of the country can do more to put an end to corruption and graft than all our laws and lawmakers. He urged gentleness and patience in dealing with the child.

We quote a few of the distinguished speaker's most striking sentences: "Teach the children to be good for the sake of right. Platitude and cant never accomplish anything. Set a good example; actions, not words, count. Do not instill into the child's mind the idea that he should be good for fear that he will be caught. We must bear one another's burdens or we shall suffer for it. No home can be safe so long as another home is in danger. And you will have no safety in the home so long as 200,000 women are compelled to play the double role of mothers and bread-winners."

Undoubtedly the nation is realizing more and more the importance of conserving the welfare of its childhood and youth, and promoting its wholesome development. Not only the Church, but also the State, must take an active part in this necessary work. The talk of establishing a Children's Bureau at Washington in connection with the Federal Government shows the extent to which the public mind is aroused on this most vital subject. Of course, the chief work in child-training must continue to be done by parents in the future, as it has been in the past. But in discharging this essential duty fathers and mothers should be re-enforced in every possible way by the State, which must ever be interested in the rearing of upright and useful citizens. It is most regrettable that at this time when so many of the commonwealths of the Union are addressing themselves to this task, some of those in the South seem to be lagging in the procession, having refused to establish either juvenile courts or prison reformatories. But perhaps the example of the more progressive States will lead them to adopt a wiser course in the near future.

AN INJURIOUS PRACTICE.

It is stated that at a preachers' meeting in Baltimore a short time ago, it was developed that a single circuit in Maryland had forty members who had moved to the city, but who still retained their membership in the charge from which they came. Such a course upon the part of church members is most unwise. Both for their own good and the good of the Church, they ought to connect themselves with the congregation in the community in which they live. This class of Methodists are only a shade better than the trunk-letter variety. The pastor of the charge from which a member moves ought promptly to inform the preacher in the locality into which they go of their presence. And it is doubly important to do this, if they move to a city where it is easy for them to be lost sight of in the great mass of the population.

A CORRECTION.

In our editorial last week, "In the Interest of Historical Truth," we erred in stating that it was after Senator Lamar had so ably defended Mr. Davis from the aspersions of Northern Senators that the Confederate Chieftain wrote his famous letter, expressing the view that a State Legislature has the right to "instruct" the representatives of the commonwealth in the Federal Senate. Mr. Lamar's memorable tilt with Mr. Hoar and Mr. Blaine occurred a few weeks after the publication of Mr. Davis' letter. However, a short time before the Sage of Beauvoir gave out that communication he said, "Mr. Lamar has, in my adversity, remained my firm friend." Our purpose in making this point was not to reflect upon Mr. Davis, but to emphasize the fact that his convictions upon the question at issue were so strong that even feelings of gratitude and friendship could not constrain him to be silent. Both for him and Senator Lamar we have a very great admiration. The latter we regard as the South's foremost statesman since the Civil War. This additional statement has been made not because of any communication bearing on the subject that we have received, but wholly of our own accord. The Advocate stands for accuracy in the discussion of all questions of historic interest.

SERVANT OF ALL.

"Servant of all" is an expression, descriptive of Christ, that is full of meaning. In the history of the world we find two conditions of society. The first, in which everybody is working for one man, produced such men as Caesar, Alexander the Great, Pharaoh and others whose power was world-wide, who were feared by the masses and under whose reigns the life, property and happiness of no man were secure. During such periods the world suffered from sin in its most hideous forms. Idolatry was everywhere, virtue was scorned and murder was but a convenient means of advancing the interests of greed. The children of God were few and often faithless. The voice of the true prophet was stifled by the grapping hand of death appended to the arm of sin, or drowned in the din of howling worshippers of false gods. Oh, the tragedy of the world's history when everybody worked for one man!

The second condition of society which we note is that in which each one works for the interests of others. Christ introduced it. He was the "servant of all." His life was a beautiful example of self-sacrifice and love. He scorned every act that tended to advance his own interest and embraced every opportunity to help others. Christ did not come to earth to glorify himself. He had glory from the beginning. He came from the golden streets of God's celestial city, in which he was King of kings and Lord of lords, to a manger, to a pillow of stone, to the shadows of Gethsemane, to death on the cross and to the damp of the grave. Surely, that was not an attempt to glorify himself. He left heaven, where celestial bands made harmony divine and where angelic hosts sang continuous praise to his holy name, and came to this earth, where he heard the hiss of his chosen people, where the rabble shouted, "Crucify him," as he hung upon the cross.

Christ came to seek and save lost men, came to be the "servant of all," and when we forget ourselves and go forth for the sake of others, there is sure to be a great advancement of the interests of the kingdom. Each individual working for the betterment of all the world is indeed the acme of Christian civilization.

TRI-STATE EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE.

We desire to call special attention to this Teachers' Bureau, which is located at Covington, Tenn. A card seeking correspondence with instructors appears in this issue of the Advocate, which persons desiring positions to teach would do well to notice. One of the parties connected with this Exchange is Mr. E. C. Brewer, formerly of Black Hawk, Miss., who is an A.B. graduate of Millsaps College, and who also has an A.M. degree from Vanderbilt University. The fact that he is one of the managers of this Bureau is a guarantee of its reliability. We heartily commend it to the Teachers of Louisiana and Mississippi.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Bishop and Mrs. W. B. Murrah reached their home at Jackson, Miss., last Monday.

Rev. J. H. Bell, of Black Hawk, Miss., favored us with a nice list of subscribers on February 27. We appreciate his interest and good work in behalf of the Advocate.

The assessment for the preacher in charge at Ruleville, Miss., has been increased from $1,200 to $1,500. The pastor of this growing work is the Rev. J. W. Raper.

The Editor spent the most of last week in North Mississippi, looking after pressing personal business. This explains why his hand is not more in evidence in this issue of the Advocate.

Dr. J. Benjamin Lawrence, pastor of the First Baptist Church of New Orleans, has accepted a call to Columbus, Miss. He expects to assume control of his new pulpit about April 1.

Our wide-awake pastor at Okolona, Miss., Rev. J. H. Holder, sent us a nice club of subscribers a few days since. He serves a choice people, and the work is progressing under his guiding hand.

Brother J. M. Massey writes encouragingly of his work at Centerville, Miss. He forwarded us several names for our subscription files recently. We are pleased to have our paper circulate in this worthy community.

Rev. Theo. Copeland is meeting with gratifying success as pastor of Cabanne Church, St. Louis. He has received sixty members since the Annual Conference. Bishop Hoss was booked to occupy his pulpit last Sunday evening.

Professor Stuart G. Noble, the efficient Head Master of the Millsaps Preparatory School, thus refers to the work that is being done at that excellent institution: "The spirit this year is excellent. The standard of the work done is unusually high. All the faculty are sanguine with hope for the future."

Rev. W. W. Jones, our pastor at Calhoun City, Miss., reports that one of the churches on his charge was blown down on the night of the 20th ult., but that it will soon be rebuilt. He also states that many of the people suffered serious losses as a result of the cyclone. We extend sympathy to the unfortunate ones.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, who as a presiding elder has few equals, in a card to the editor makes the following reference to the work in the Sardis District: "Everything has been favorable in this section except the weather. The people are courageous, and have increased the assessment for the pastor in a number of places, and have nowhere decreased it."

We are most happy to learn that after an illness of six weeks, Rev. J. A. Hall was able to be in his pulpit at Grenada, Miss., on Sunday, Feb. 25. It is needless to say that his people were delighted to have him minister to them again. In a personal note to the editor, Brother Hall states that he now feels that his health is restored. This will be gratifying news to his many friends throughout the Conference.

Brother W. V. Shearer is having his usual success on the Mars Hill (Miss.) charge. He has been royally received, and his people have re-furnished the parsonage and advanced the assessment for the pastor $200. This faithful worker promises to send us a list of subscribers in the near future. It is his habit wherever he goes to extend the circulation of the Conference organ in his field.

We are in receipt of a card which contains the following: "Mr. and Mrs. Webb Parsons announce the marriage of their daughter, Nell, to Mr. Amos Kendall Eckles, Cleveland, Miss." The bride is a young lady of many graces and accomplishments, and Mr. Eckles is one of the leading teachers of his State and a Christian gentleman of sterling character. We extend hearty congratulations.

From Como, Miss., Rev. J. B. Randolph writes: "We are both well and happy in the work. The prospects are good for another successful year. Brother Dorman, our new presiding elder, has made a fine impression here and everywhere else that he has gone in the district. We expect to begin work on our new church about April 1." Brother Randolph is remembering the Advocate in his rounds, and enclosed in his letter a fine list of names for our subscription files.

The revival services that are being conducted at the Dreamland Theater by the pastors of the New Orleans Methodist Churches, continue with increasing interest. The speakers for the past week were Rev. J. W. Booth, Rev. C. C. Selcman, Rev. A. J. Gearheard, Rev. A. G. Shankle, and Rev. W. E. Thomas.

Rev. J. B. Williams, pastor of the Lishon (La.) charge sent us a list of subscribers last week. This is the second club of subscribers we have received from Brother Williams since Conference. When the Conference organ is widely read, it can be taken for granted that the other interests of the Church are not suffering.

Rev. J. D. Nesom, our pastor at Gueydan, La., has been much hindered in his work by the inclement winter weather, but is beginning to get things in hand. He has been visited by his capable presiding elder, Rev. R. H. Wynn, who held the quarterly conference. A liberal assessment has been made for ministerial support.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Colfax, La., has our thanks for 11 new subscribers to the Advocate and one renewal. In his letter he says it is his intention to place the Advocate in every Methodist home in the Colfax charge. We wish him success in his undertaking, and trust that other pastors will emulate his good example.

Ruston's (La.) popular pastor, Rev. W. H. Coleman, sent us a list of 5 renewals and 7 new subscribers a few days ago. Brother Coleman's charge is one of the most desirable in the State, and the work there is prospering under his efficient leadership. We are pleased to have our circulation extended in this cultured community.

Rev. H. E. Carter, of Monticello, Miss., has been sick nearly ever since Conference, but in spite of his illness he has found time to press the claims of the Conference organ. He recognizes in the Advocate an assistant pastor that never misses an appointment, and, though sometimes alling (typographically), one that always has a message.

Rev. L. I. McCain has begun what promises to be a good year's work at Bogalusa, La. Among the things that have already been done by this energetic pastor are the painting of the church, the purchase of an individual communion service, and the reception of 40 members into the church. The first quarterly conference reported more than $200 raised for ministerial support.

Among the distinguished visitors who heard Rev. A. G. Shankle at his last Sunday morning service at Rayne Memorial Church were Rev. G. B. Stone, a member of the Wyoming Conference of the M. E. Church and president of the Cookman Institute, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Rev. James T. Dochey, Ph.D., of the New England Conference and president of Rust University of Holly Springs, Miss.

Rev. W. J. Porter, of Lanesville, La., sent us last week seven subscriptions to the Conference organ. He kindly added the following in his letter to our office: "I think it has been forty years since I first began to read the New Orleans Advocate, and it seems a real necessity every week. I wish I could place it in every home." We are grateful to Brother Porter for his good work and also for this kindly sentiment.

Rev. Robert Selby began a series of sermons in his church at Brookhaven, Miss., on the general theme of "Men and the Kingdom," on Sunday, March 3. The several topics announced are as follows: "Man's Life Is from God;" "Do Men Need To Be Religious;" "Is Morality Sufficient;" "Christianity in the Making of a Man;" "Man's Relation to the Church." Brother Selby is pleased with his new field, and regards the outlook as encouraging.

The church in Lake Arthur, La., is splendidly organized, with an active Epworth League, Woman's Missionary Society, and Sunday school. The Board of stewards operate a good financial system, have increased the pastor's salary to $1,000, and will raise the Conference collections. The people are much pleased with their new pastor, Brother A. S. J. Neill. Rev. R. P. Howell is chairman of the board of stewards and superintendent of the Sunday school.

With characteristic energy, Rev. R. I. Collins continues to push the circulation of the Advocate among his people on the Cockrum (Miss.) charge. His first quarterly conference was held on Feb. 14, and as the presiding elder was providentially hindered from being present, the preaching and presiding were done by the pastor. And they say that he acquitted himself well. Precisely what kept Brother Tucker away, we are not informed, though, of course, his absence was unavoidable. A correspondent suggests that he probably got lost on Hicholahala Creek between Buck Snort and Wink Out. We sincerely trust that no such misfortune befell him.

"The outlook for the Bernice (La.) charge is good," says Rev. J. C. Price, its efficient pastor, in a letter containing a club of subscribers.

The ladies of the Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans, on last Sunday, presented that congregation with an elegant individual communion service.

Prof. David Spence Hill, of Tulane University, will deliver an address to the young people of the Rayne Memorial Church next Sunday evening on "The Psychology of Habit."

Rev. L. F. Alford, of the Mt. Olive (Miss.) charge is pushing the interests of the Advocate, along with the other work of the church, and is meeting with gratifying success.

The revival meeting that is in progress at the First Methodist Church of New Orleans is attracting large crowds. The church has already felt a new impulse of life as a result of these services.

John G. Wooley, twice a candidate for President on the Prohibition ticket, will be in New Orleans next Sunday in the interests of the Anti-Saloon League Field Day. He will speak both in the morning and at night.

Rev. W. W. Holmes reached New Orleans the latter part of last week, and has begun his work as associate pastor of the First Methodist Church. He preached at the First Church last Sunday morning, and at Mary Werlein Mission on Sunday night.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, pastor of the Washington Street Church, Vicksburg, expects work to begin on the new house of worship for which his congregation is planning about June 1. The consummation of this enterprise will be a great achievement.

Rev. C. A. Northington has our thanks for a club of 25 subscribers to the Advocate, which we received last week. Brother Northington gives an encouraging report from his charge, the Corinth (Miss.) Circuit, in the Tidings from the Field Department.

We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Rev. J. D. Boggs, of Dumas, Miss., for several subscriptions to the Advocate. Brother Boggs says: "The work here is moving on nicely. These people love God and stand by the preacher." This is a good recommendation for any flock.

The Chickasaw County Sunday School Convention was held in the Baptist Church at Okolona, Miss., on February 13. Among those taking part in the proceedings we note the names of Rev. W. Fred Long, Rev. J. H. Holder, Rev. T. J. Durrett, and Rev. R. P. Neblett. The occasion is reported to have been an interesting and profitable one.

Rev. W. L. Broome, who is in charge of the Holly Springs Circuit, writes: "The outlook in my work is very promising. Our new presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Tucker, was with us at Lamar, Miss., on Sunday and Monday, Feb. 18 and 19, and preached three sermons which greatly pleased the people. All the churches were represented at the quarterly conference. This is a choice flock, whom any pastor might count himself fortunate to serve.

A great revival has recently been held in the Main Street Methodist Church, of Somerset, Ky., of which Rev. C. K. Dickey, D.D., is pastor, by Rev. L. B. Bridgers of Bath, N. C. Reports sent out from Somerset claim between 400 and 500 conversions and nearly three hundred accessions to the Church. Dr. Dickey, in writing about the revival, says that the old-time power was manifested from the first night, and that shouting was not uncommon.

In forwarding the list of his second round of quarterly conferences for publication, Rev. W. H. Lewis adds: "A good spirit prevails throughout the district, and the brethren are hard at work." We have a vigorous Methodism in this territory, and a capable leader in the person of Brother Lewis. We are grateful for a cordial invitation to attend the Meridian District Conference, which will convene at Waynesboro, June 10, and we hope that a favoring Providence may permit us to be present.

In a recent note to the Advocate office, Mrs. W. W. Scales, Jr., of Starkville, Miss., says: "There have been a succession of sorrows in our little city recently. Dr. J. S. Montgomery, Mr. Andy Carothers, and Mr. Lester Richey have passed away within the past few weeks." The grim Reaper has, indeed, been making heavy requisitions upon this goodly community. We extend sympathy to the stricken households, and pray that the Lord's healing hand may be gently laid upon every bleeding heart.

Referring to the Memphis Tri-State Hospital enterprise, Rev. H. M. Ellis, the efficient Field Secretary, says: "Wherever the cause is fairly presented, it wins its way. I spent Sunday, Feb. 18, on the Holly Grove and Marvell charge, two small villages in Arkansas, and it will provide for a thousand-dollar room in the Hospital, having about raised the money while I was with them." This is gratifying news. We are pleased to see Arkansas taking a hand in the enterprise. This Hospital is going to be built.

In a note written on the 20th inst., Rev. S. M. Thames, of Carrollton, Miss., says: "Everything is moving on well here. I received two members into the church last Sunday." Brother Thames is remembering the Advocate in his rounds, and we are grateful to him for the good work he is doing in its behalf. A finer Methodism than that which exists at Carrollton would be difficult to find. It has been blessed for many years with the leadership of that prince of Methodist laymen, Mr. J. R. Bingham, whose devotion to the Church is so widely known.

The work at Corinth, Miss., is going steadily forward under the capable leadership of Pastor J. H. Felts. Forty-five members have been received since Conference, a number of them on profession of faith. The prayer meeting has reached the 75 mark, and is still growing. The morning and evening congregations on Sunday, Feb. 18, numbered more than a thousand. We congratulate Brother Felts upon the fine beginning that he has made, and especially do we appreciate the interest he is showing in the circulation of the Advocate among his parishioners.

Rev. J. M. Morse, of the Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., states that the pews are now being placed in the beautiful new house of worship which his congregation has been engaged in erecting for several months. An order has been given for a pipe organ to cost $4,250, which is expected to be installed by April 1. Everything else is finished. The construction of this handsome church in the capital city of Mississippi is a notable achievement, and reflects credit upon all who have aided in carrying the enterprise forward. Already a Methodist stronghold, Jackson promises to become still more so with the passing years.

From a recent issue of the Grenada Sentinel, we take the following: "Rev. J. R. Countiss delivered a most interesting sermon at the Methodist Church last Sunday night, his subject being 'Christian Manhood.' Mr. Countiss always gives a clear exposition of any text or subject and can be depended upon for a lucid discussion of any question. He is a student. He has a broad conception of matters and is one of the strongest forces in the Methodist Church of the State. Aside from his great ability and learning, Mr. Countiss is a genial character and most companionable man, and will endeavor himself to any community where he is known."

In a letter containing eight subscriptions to the Conference organ, Rev. V. C. Curtis, of Kosciusko, Miss., adds the following bit of timely news: "This charge is moving along smoothly. The people have given us many expressions of their esteem since Conference. In fact, if there is anything within the bounds of reason that they have not done, I do not know what it is. Rev. W. M. Young will be with us in a meeting the second week in April, and we are praying for a great revival. Rev. C. W. Baily, of the Kosciusko Circuit, has made a fine impression on the people, and has prospects for a good year. Brother Newhern, of the Hesterville Circuit, is pleasing his people. They say he is a good preacher and an excellent pastor."

We are requested to make the following statement: "The Committee having the matter in charge has found it necessary to make some changes in the dates of the Missionary Institutes that are to be held in the Louisiana Conference during the month of March. As revised, the itinerary will be as follows: 'Shreveport, March 12-13; Arcadia, 13-14; Minden, 15; Alexandria, 17; Lake Charles, 18-19; Crowley, 19-20; Baton Rouge, 21; New Orleans, 22. Mrs. H. R. Singleton will be with Mrs. Barnum at the first three and last two named places, and Mrs. E. R. Kennedy will be with her at Lake Charles and Crowley, and possibly at Alexandria. All pastors are invited to attend these Institutes, and each Auxiliary is urged to send delegates to the one that is nearest by."

We regret to chronicle the death of Miss Sue Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ike Jones, of Black Hawk, Miss., which occurred at Carlsbad, Texas, on Monday, Feb. 26, 1912. She had been suffering from a pulmonary trouble for several months, and upon the advice of her physicians, went West, hoping that a more favorable climate would result in the improvement of her health. But contrary to expectation, she had scarcely reached her destination before the sad news of her decease was wired her distressed parents. The remains were brought back to Mississippi and laid to rest beneath the sod, near where other loved ones sleep. Miss Jones was a young lady of more than ordinary gifts and acquirements. She was a devoted Christian, and at the time that the fatal malady laid hold upon her, was thinking of offering herself for the mission field. In her, Death had a shining mark, and when she was stricken down, a vacancy was left in many hearts that earth can never fill. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain the bereaved loved ones in this dark and trying hour!

Mrs. NANCIE JANE ELIGUAM SMITH, (nee Osborn), was born in Alabama, March 14, 1861 and was baptized in infancy. She joined the Methodist Church when quite young. She was married to Henry S. Smith, April 9, 1884, and moved to Itawamba County, Miss., where she lived until a little more than a year ago, when she moved with her family to Lee County. She died on the 10th of February at the close of the day surrounded by her family and friends. Sister Smith had been afflicted for sixteen years. During the last six months she had been confined to her room and, most of the time, to her bed. She suffered greatly, but bore her afflictions patiently and died in the full triumph of a living faith. All who knew her loved her. She will be greatly missed from the church, from among the sick and, most of all, from her own family. She leaves a husband, two sons, one brother, one sister and many relatives and friends to mourn her departure. We say to them, follow her footsteps and meet her in heaven. We hope to strike hands with her on the eternal shore of sweet deliverance. She was buried in Itawamba County in the Walton Cemetery. Rev. M. L. Ward conducted the funeral service before a large crowd of relatives and friends.

A FRIEND.

WILLIAM ERASTUS LAIRD, son of Erastus C. and Mrs. Elizabeth Blount Laird, was born in Covington County, Miss., March 28, 1861, in the home of his maternal grandfather, William Blount, on the old homestead where his aged and widowed mother still resides. He was one of a large family of four sons and seven daughters, of whom two sons and four daughters survive. The home of his childhood was marked by that simplicity of life and earnestness of piety, which was characteristic of the better class of our agricultural people, and the formative influences of his early life left their indelible impress upon his character. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in his youth at Williamsburg, the old county seat of his native County, and continued through life a member of that communion. At the age of fifteen he left the home of his boyhood and became a clerk in the mercantile establishment of his uncle, Mr. T. C. Blount, in Blountville, Miss., going from there to Williamsburg, where he continued in the employ of his uncle until his removal to Hattiesburg, Miss., in 1885. Here he entered the store of another uncle, Mr. N. C. Blount, and, in August of that year, was married to Miss Etta Johnson, the daughter of Mr. William Johnson, of Hattiesburg. In this situation he continued for some time and then went into business for himself. After several years he removed to Mineral Wells, Texas, for the benefit of his wife's health, and, after a short while, returned to Hattiesburg where he resumed his business in general merchandise, and where he remained until the time of his death, Oct. 4, 1911. He was prosperous and universally esteemed as a man of unquestioned integrity and sterling worth. In 1903 his wife died, and in 1904 he was happily married to Miss Emmie L. Ragan. To them were born three children, a son and daughter, who died in infancy, and a baby boy, Everett, who, with his mother, survives him. Another cherished member of the family is Miss Ethel, an adopted daughter, to whom he ever gave in unstinted measure a father's love and care. Brother Laird promptly united with the Main Street Methodist Church (Hattiesburg) and was for many years an honored and consistent member of the official board of that congregation. At the time of his death he was a member of the board of stewards, and was accounted one of the most trusted and useful officials of the church. He interpreted literally and kept consistently his vows to attend upon the ordinances of the Church, to obey its rules, and to support its institutions, and his regular attendance at the mid-week prayer services and his earnest prayers were an inspiration to his pastor. He was a quiet, modest man, scrupulously honest and straightforward in his dealings with his fellow-men, and unswerving in his loyalty to the spirit of the laws of the Church that he loved and the teachings of the Lord to whom his life was given. For some years he had felt the premonitions of some organic trouble with his heart, and the end came suddenly with scarcely a moments warning. He left no dying testimony; but, better still, he left the living testimony of years of honor and usefulness to the Church and the community in which he lived. A. F. WATKINS.

I write the following in memory of my brother, H. D. ELLIS, who died at 6 a.m., Jan. 22, 1912. Before he died he told his wife and two or three of his sons who were sitting up with him to awaken the rest of the children, his mother, his aunt and to telephone for his brother Ben, that he was dying. In a short time he passed away peacefully. Sunday night, before he died on Monday morning he had one of the family to read a chapter from the Bible, then he prayed earnestly for himself, his family, his brother Ben, and me. Brother Henry suffered with paralysis intensely for about two years. During this time he made a heroic fight to regain his health that he might be spared to his family to whom he was perfectly devoted, and for whom few men have made better financial and educational opportunities. Perhaps one of his greatest mistakes was his neglect of religious home training. This he sorely lamented, and thus often expressed himself to me and others, and often exhorted his children to go to church, Sunday school and the like regularly and not neglect this duty as he had often done. He was born July 25, 1861. He leaves a mother, an aunt, two brothers, two sisters, a wife and fifteen children and other relatives. One son preceded him to a better world. His devoted brother,

J. C. ELLIS.

Gallman, Miss.

THE BEST IS YET TO BE.

For all men, small as well as great, even for those who have succeeded, and conquered apparently all honors, it is true that the best is yet to be. Heroic Paul, earth's most intrepid and earth's sublimest spirit, standing forth in old age, with a thousand victories behind him, knew that he had not yet attained. No matter what your success, I appeal from the seed to the coming sheaf, from the acorn to the coming oak, from this little spring to the future river, from your ignorance to wisdom, from your fragmentary tool or law or custom to perfect virtue, from the broken arc to the full circle, from the white cloud to the stars that are above the clouds. Because life is in a series of ascending climaxes, and because it waxes ever richer and richer for every man, whether young or old, it is better farther on, and the best is yet to be.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

Tidings From the Field

Vaughan, Miss.

We are moving on very well on the Deasonville charge, and everything bids fair for a good year. The severe cold weather and bad roads have prevented me from doing what I might have done otherwise. Notwithstanding, we have made a very good beginning. Our first quarterly conference was held on Feb. 3. Brother Jones, our presiding elder, was at his post and preached a strong and stirring sermon to the church, using as a text, Matt. xiv, 16: "They need not depart; give ye them to eat." We have a fine board of stewards. They reported $218.50 for the support of the ministry the first quarter. We are expecting great things during this year with these good people.—J. B. King, P. C.

Jena, La.

Dear Doctor Meek: Revival services conducted by our Conference Evangelist, A. W. Turner, closed at Jena, Wednesday, February 28, with good results. The church was gloriously revived; in fact, we now have a working force that is destined to prove a power in the community. Personal work was done with telling effect. Some persons became interested and were converted that never before manifested any interest, because some church members called upon them, and thus showed an interest in their souls. Brother Turner preached with power. His sermons on "The Unchanging Christ," "The Parable of the Wedding Garment" and "Repentance" made impressions that will prove lasting. We received into full fellowship 16 members, varying from innocent childhood to settled manhood. Fully fifty members have pledged their allegiance to the pastor, promising to co-operate with him and support him. We have at Jena prospects for a good year. The Sunday school has made a material advance, and the best is still in the future. The church attendance is very encouraging. We have good crowds and an attentive listening. I believe the Mission Board has acted wisely in taking in hand the evangelistic work of our Conference, and with the help of the brethren, great things can be accomplished for our Lord. Let us pray as our evangelist labors in the field. Pray for me and my work!—W. D. Kleinschmidt, P. C.

Corinth Circuit, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: If you will allow me the space, I will tell you a few things about the Corinth Circuit. We are moving on fairly well, considering the cold weather and bad roads. We found a good people up here to serve. Of course, there is plenty of work to do. We have three Sunday schools that have run throughout the entire winter, and two Woman's Home Mission Societies. We are going to build two new churches, and paint one. We have the money almost all in hand now. We will overhaul another church, for which we have about half of the money. We have money in sight to buy an organ for yet another church. We have spent $40 on repairing and furnishing the parsonage, $25 of which was given by the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Corinth First Methodist Church. We appreciate their kindness. Our people have been bringing us good things to eat, and they continue to come. The Galloway Memorial Sunday school class, of the First Methodist Church, gave us a pounding that we never will forget, for which they have our many thanks. No wonder my friend, Rev. J. H. Felts, is moving things. A man with such hustling women as those of First Church behind him has got to move. Enclosed you will find a club of 25 subscribers for the Advocate. My desire is that every family on my charge will have the Advocate to visit them each week, and I am working to that end. However, you know some people are like the man that hired the Irishman to run all the rats off of his place and was to pay him for everyone he saw leave, and then closed his eyes tight to keep from seeing. The spiritual state of the church is not as good as I would like for it to be; still, I think, we are growing more spiritual. We have held prayers in more than fifty homes; have received 11 into the church and have others to receive when we make our next round. My prayer is that this may be a great year for Methodism.—C. A. Northington, P. C.

REV. GEO. JACKSON—A TRIBUTE.

It was with a mingled feeling of sorrow and joy that I read the account of Brother George Jackson's death in the Advocate—sorrow, because of the loss of the benediction of his presence; of his words of counsel and good cheer, and of the encouragement and incentive that these words gave to the brethren. Joy, because he has gone to be with Jesus, the Savior, whom he loved and longed to see and be with. Bishop Candler aptly said: "Why should we want to hold and keep the old pilgrims here on the earth, why not let them go on home to their reward?" Brethren, we now have another cord attaching and drawing us to the other shore. I shall never forget his sweet, kindly face and the words he so often repeated in his jubilee talks, "Brethren, I'm just a waiting for Jesus to call me home. This may be the last time you'll see me in the flesh." But we all may know that through Jesus Christ and by the grace of God we can see and be with him again, for we know in whom he believed, and are persuaded that He is able to keep that which hath been committed to him against that day. God bless all his loved ones and those who mourn his death.

MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

There will be held in Lecompte, La., April 2-3, a District Missionary Institute. To this meeting every preacher, lay leader, Sunday school superintendent and the members of the missionary committees of the various charges are earnestly invited to be present. The first day, April 2, will be specially devoted to the laymen; so if they can only give one day, they can be present when the work that is related to them specifically is under consideration. Let the district lay leaders be present, by all means, and try to unite for action every leader in the district. A program will be arranged, and those on it will be prepared to give us something helpful. Let every one intending to be present send their names to Rev. R. M. Brown, Boyce, La. BRISCOE CARTER, P. E.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

The Executive Committee of the Louisiana Conference Church Extension Board will meet at Baton Rouge, La., Tuesday, March 26. All applications should be in hand by that time, as they must reach the General Board by April 1. J. D. HARPER.

A COMMENDATORY WORD.

Mr. Editor: I was delighted to read in the Advocate that the Methodists of Crowley have decided to build a $30,000 church. Having already one-half of that amount pledged, it will be an easy matter for them to raise the other half and have the new building paid for, and ready for dedication, in the near future. They will find that their pastor, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, is a live wire and a successful worker in the building of the church. He is of the kind who do the things they undertake. He fits the situation in Crowley. JOHN T. SAWYER.

Guard within yourself that treasure, kindness. Know how to give without hesitation, how to lose without regret, how to acquire without meanness.—George Sands.

All Doubts Dispelled—The Scriptural Mode of Baptism Proved by Scriptures.

Since the dawn of the Christian era there has been constant discussion and controversy as to the true—the Bible—mode of baptism. Eminent men of analytical mind and profound intellect, have delved deep in ancient annals and languages in an earnest and sincere effort to determine the manner of the Savior's baptism, and from time to time announcement has been made that success had crowned the effort; yet the world has as yet been unwilling to accept the evidence offered in support of such announcement.

Why?

Because the world has long since decided that nothing short of actual Bible proof shall determine what is this Bible mode of baptism.

And at last this Bible proof has been collated and presented in simple, readable form, so that all who desire the scriptural truth may gratify that desire. Rev. W. T. Dale, D.D., who has devoted the best years of his life to this laborious search after truth, has published a 70-page book of Bible proof that plainly shows the method of Christ's baptism. The title of the book is "Bible Readings on Baptism," and it is sold at the small price of 25 cents a copy, postpaid.

The author has constituted Rev. E. H. Roy, of Tullahoma, Tenn., sole agent of the book, and he will be glad to supply copies on request, accompanied by the price. Address Rev. E. H. Roy, Tullahoma, Tenn.—Advertis'm't.

WEAK, COLD SPELLS.

Wilmington, N. C.—Mrs. Cora L. Ritter, of this place, says: "I used to have headaches, and blind, dizzy spells, and weak cold spells went all over me. I had different doctors, but they were unable to tell me what was wrong, so I began to take Cardui. I am now all right, in good health, and better than I have been for 10 years." Cardui is a remedy for women, which has been helping sick women for nearly a lifetime. You can absolutely rely upon it. Other people have done the testing, and you should profit by their experience. Cardui has benefited a million women. Why not you? Begin taking Cardui to-day.

Let an I H C Engine Save You Hours of Drudgery

WHY should you waste hours of valuable time sawing wood, pumping water, shelling corn, or turning a grindstone by hand when a few cents' worth of gasoline in an I H C engine will do it all and let you use your time for important, profitable work? An I H C gasoline engine will furnish cheap, steady, dependable power for running the pump, woodsaw, feed grinder, corn sheller, grindstone, emery wheel, cream separator, churn, washing machine, wringer, etc. It furnishes power to sharpen plows and disks, light the farm buildings, and do many other kinds of work.

I H C Gasoline Engines

have a well-deserved reputation for reliability and durability. They are simple. They are economical of fuel. From every point of view an I H C engine is the most satisfactory engine you could buy.

They are made in all styles, vertical and horizontal, portable and stationary, air and water-cooled, in sizes from 1 to 50-H. P., to operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, kerosene, distillate, or alcohol. Gasoline and kerosene tractors, 12 to 45-H. P. Sawing, pumping, spraying, grinding outfits, etc. The I H C local dealer will show you the engine and explain its good points. For catalogues and full information, see him, or write

A STRANGE STORY.

Argyle, Mich.—Mrs. Wm. H. Carson, in a letter from Argyle, says: "I was almost wild with pain in my head, and other severe pains, due to womanly troubles. Cardul gave me great relief at once. Further use of Cardul raised me from my bed of agony. Cardul saved my life, and I can't be thankful enough for what it did for me." Whether seriously sick, or simply ailing, take Cardul, the woman's tonic. As a general tonic for women, to improve the appetite and build up the constitution, Cardul is in a class by itself. Those who have used it say it does the work; it relieves. It cures. Try it. Your druggist has it.

"THE INJURY OF TOBACCO."

In his forcible description of "The Injury of Tobacco," in the March Century, Charles B. Townes writes with the knowledge of an expert and the earnestness of an exhorter. He ranks the popular weed with the worst of the drug slave-masters, and in particular pays his respects to the smoking fathers, who enjoin abstinence on their sons, yet whose example leads to early cigarette smoking by stealth.

"Go, wherever there are ignorant to be instructed, timid to be cheered, helpless to be succored, stricken to be blest, and erring to be reclaimed. Go, wherever faith can see, or hope can breathe, or love can work, or courage can venture. Go, win the spurs of your spiritual knight-hood there."—William Morley Punshon.

Speed—comfort—safety— in driving this car

The Cartercar rides easily and is very quiet, because it has no gears to make a noise or to jerk the car.

The Friction Transmission is remarkably simple—composed of only two units. It gives any number of speeds and is controlled by one lever.

Simple, easy control and three strong brakes are features which mean safety.

Cranking and bother are eliminated from starting by the excellent self starter. Ladies can easily operate the Cartercar.

Every part is simple and strong. The car is reliable under all circumstances.

Full floating rear axle, three-quarter elliptic rear springs, chain-in-oil drive, and many other features.

Five good models—Roadsters, Coupes, Touring Cars. Let us send you catalog explaining all details carefully.

How to Make Better Cough Syrup than You Can Buy

A Family Supply, Saving $2 and Fully Guaranteed.

A full pint of cough syrup—as much as you could buy for $2.50—can easily be made at home. You will find nothing that takes hold of an obstinate cough more quickly, usually ending it inside of 24 hours. Excellent, too, for croup, whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, hoarseness and other throat troubles.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle, then add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

This is just laxative enough to help cure a cough. Also stimulates the appetite, which is usually upset by a cough. The taste is pleasant.

The effect of pine and sugar syrup on the inflamed membranes is well known. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe is now used by thousands of housewives throughout the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, but the old successful formula has never been equalled.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The Sunday School.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

The most telling work of character-building must be done in the home. Often fine, helpful Sunday school work cannot save the boy because the home background, influence and atmosphere are such that a miracle alone could bring about his salvation.

Brother Gladney is anxious that some of the larger churches have their Children's Day service as soon as possible, and at the first printing, programs will be sent out so work can be begun. Often the regular date conflicts with the closing of schools and these earlier days will prove more satisfactory.

Mr. Marion Lawrence emphasizes five demands which are imperative, not only on the church and Sunday school, but on the world as well. Conception or Vision, Co-operation, Conquest, Constancy and Consecration, and these five Cs worked into the tapestry of our daily living will be a masterpiece in the far after time when final estimates are made.

On April 30, in the afternoon, at Artesia, Brother Thomas has kindly arranged for a Sunday School Institute hour and this early notice is given to emphasize the need of every Sunday school worker in the district being present to make this hour one of great benefit. Brother Jacob has planned a similar Sunday school season of education and uplift within his dates, May 1-3, at Kilmichael.

The Galloway Memorial Class of First Church, Corinth, is doing a great work. Mrs. M. T. Bynum has been appointed chairman of the Membership Committee and their room is even now taxed to its utmost capacity. Mrs. J. H. Feits is chairman of the Missionary Committee and definite mission work in Brazil will be commenced March 1. These matrons, busy as they are, are doing a work whose value time alone can tell and are demonstrating the possibilities in a well-organized woman's class.

"I've learned many valuable lessons," said a keeper of a small garden in a large city, "just by looking over the fence. I've been taught exactly how to do some things which have greatly improved my own little spot of cultivated green, and I've learned not to do very many things my neighbor had better not have done." Now many an Adult Bible Class president would add to his efficiency if he occasionally looked over his own Bible class fence into his neighbor's class yard. He needs to know infinitely more than he can ever find in books. He should know what other classes are doing, and keep a comprehending eye on every item, card or feature which could assist him or his class.

Mr. J. H. Ledyard, the Tupelo, First Church superintendent, is having a most friendly and highly interesting contest. The first Sunday in February was Boy's Day—the boys themselves opened the Sunday school and read twelve 1-2 minute articles on "Why I do not use Tobacco." The next Sabbath was Girl's Day and they opened the school and had fine papers as you note from the one in last week's Advocate. The contest is between the men and boys on one side—for attendance etc., and the girls and women on the other. The men have won out so far, but Mr. Ledyard has a fine, live vibrant Sunday school every Sabbath morning and his plan is well worth emulating. He belongs to the International Committee for Superintendents and is doing a great work and one needed all over the Sunday school world.

CONCERNING CHILDREN'S DAY.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Among other items noted that are worthy of our study from our last year's Minutes is the matter of the observance of Children's Day in the Sunday school, which sums up as follows:

In the Alexandria District the following pastoral charges at some point observed the day with these amounts collected: Alexandria, $22; Harrisonburg, $3; Jena, $4; Longville and Merryville, $6; totaling $35, with Alexandria leading with $22. On the Baton Rouge District: Second Church, Baton Rouge, $3; Clinton and Jackson, $10; Franklinton, $8; Hammond, $7; Kentwood, $2; totaling $30, with Clinton and Jackson the banner charge. On the Lafayette District: Crowley, $15; Eunice, $6; Jennings, $4; Lake Charles, $12; New Iberia, $9; Patterson, $7; totaling $53, with Crowley in the lead. On the Monroe District: Downsville, $2; Eros, $6; Gilbert, $3; Mangham, $22; Merrouge, $19; Monroe, $17; West Monroe, $6; totaling $75, with Mangham the banner charge. On the New Orleans District: Algiers, $14; Carrollton Avenue, $7; Louisiana Avenue, $3; Parker Memorial, $4; Rayne Memorial, $13; totaling $41, with Algiers in the lead. On the Ruston District: Bernice, $6; Haynesville, $3; Homer, $6; Lanesville, $4; Lisbon, $21; Vernon, $7; Winnfield, $9; totaling $56, with Lisbon the banner charge. On the Shreveport District: Bossier City, $2; Greenwood, $13; Mansfield, $6; Mooringsport, $54; Noel Memorial, $5; totaling $80, with Mooringsport the banner charge.

It will thus be seen that the Shreveport is the banner district in the matter of collections, with a total of $80, and Mooringsport, on the Shreveport District, is the banner charge of the Conference, with a collection of $54. Rev. F. R. Power is the pastor. The Monroe and Ruston Districts each had seven charges observing the day at some point, the Lafayette District six, the Baton Rouge, New Orleans and Shreveport each five, and the Alexandria four.

Brethren, "figures cannot lie," and our Conference ought to have beaten this record fourfold. The Discipline requires the observance of Children's Day in our Sunday schools as definitely as the taking of the missionary collection. It is the happy day for the children, the rallying time for the Sunday school, and the only means of financing our Sunday School Board. See to it that this year we are officially faithful at this point. The programs will be ready at Nashville by March 1, and our Board urges the holding of the services in April, before the conflict with the closing exercises of the public schools. They will be sent free upon application to Mr. E. E. French, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

ADVOCATE PIANO CLUB.

The superior quality and durability of the piano which is now being offered to members of the Advocate Piano Club is shown by the following letter from one of the earliest purchasers of the Ludden & Bates Piano, away back in 1883. Mr. H. V. Coarsey, of Braddentown, Fla., writing under date of February 1, 1910, says: "I am the owner of Ludden & Bates piano No. 111, in rosewood case, and I take pleasure in mentioning that it has a good clear tone and a smooth, even touch, notwithstanding it was bought of you twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago, during which time, it has had constant service, considered by some an extraordinary amount of hard usage. This instrument has served two generations in our immediate family in a most satisfactory way and we have no idea of parting with it for any other piano."

If you would like to join the Club write for club catalogue and full particulars. Address Ludden & Bates, Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

Executive Committee Meeting, North Mississippi Conference.

The Executive Committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference met in Westpoint on Feb. 22, 1912. It was recommended that a conference honor roll, with the following standard of excellence, be established:

The total number of credits shall be 100. Any auxiliary will be placed on the honor roll whose records show that it is entitled to 75 credits. These credits are: 1. Membership—(a) A campaign for new members, 5; (b) increase, one new member for every six on the roll, 5. 2. An average attendance at regular meetings equal to two-thirds of the membership, 10. 3. Finance—(a) Dues paid in full and contingent fund paid by every member, 10; (b) Conference pledge contributed to by every member, 10. 4. Week of Prayer observed, 10. 5. Monthly Bulletin presented, program on the monthly topic, and workers at least once a month, 5. 6. Subscribers to the Missionary Voice equal to one-half of the membership, 5. 7. Juvenile Missionary Society organized by First Vice President, 10. 8. Young People's Missionary Society, 10. 9. All quarterly reports mailed by the 1st day of each quarter, 5. 10. Letters from officers answered promptly, 5. 11. Mission study classes and regular presentation of the subject of Christian stewardship, 10.

The smaller and weaker societies will find that they are at no disadvantage in comparison with larger societies. Some of the points of excellence are more easily reached by the weak than by the strong society. The standard is based on business methods and proportionate increase.

It was also recommended that the agent for the Missionary Voice make a canvas of the membership in each auxiliary at once and secure subscriptions to the Council Daily. The price of this paper is 25c for the session. All subscriptions should be sent to Rev. P. W. Jeffries, The Chesterfield, 3141 Mt. Pleasant, Washington, D. C., by April 10.

The Annual Meeting will be held at Brooksville June 1-5. An attractive program has been arranged. Prominent workers from the Council and returned missionaries will be present. Mrs. S. M. THAMES, Pres. Miss MAMIE BUCKLEY, Recording Secretary.

HOW MOUNTAINS WERE NAMED

Adirondacks, derived from the Canlenga (Mohawk) Iroquois language, in which the original form is ratiron-taks, meaning "bark eaters."

Allegheny: A corruption of the Delaware Indian name for Allegheny and Ohio rivers, the meaning of the name being lost.

Appalachian: The name was given by the Spaniards under De Soto, who derived it from the name of a neighboring tribe, the Apalachi. Brinton holds its radical to be the Muscogee apala, "great sea," or "great ocean," and that apalache is a compound of this word with the Muscogee personal participle "chi," and means "those by the sea."

Blue Ridge: So called from the hue which frequently envelops its distant summits.

Catskill: The mountains were called katsbergs by the Dutch, from the number of wildcats found in them, and the creek, which flows from the mountains, was called Katerskill, "tomcats' creek."

Ozark: The aux arcs was said to refer to the bends in White river and was applied to the Ozark mountains, through which the river pursues a wandering course—in other words, to the mountains at the bends of the river.

Sierra Nevada: A Spanish term signifying "snow-clad range."—From Bulletin 197, United States Geological Survey.

THE FIRST LEGACY TO FOREIGN MISSIONS.

"The first legacy to foreign missions was given by Sallie Thomas. She was a poor woman supporting herself as a domestic servant. Her wages never exceeded the pittance of 50 cents per week. Out of this sum in a long and industrious life she had managed to save the really remarkable sum of $345.83, and this she bequeathed at her death to the American Board."

Last year, by bequests and other offerings, the United States gave to foreign missions $12,290,005.—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

TO DRIVE OUT MALARIA AND BUILD UP THE SYSTEM.

Take the Old Standard GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC. You know what you are taking. The formula is plainly printed on every bottle, showing it is simply Quinine and Iron in a tasteless form, and the most effectual form. For grown people and children, 50c.

What the world really needs is men who have news from the land of the ideal, who have God's life within them, who open afresh the spirits of living water that quench the thirst of the soul.—J. Brierley.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

Old age, after all, is not a thing to be looked forward to with fear and trembling, as the majority of us are inclined to do; that is, if old age is to deal as leniently with us as it has with Mrs. Francis P. Bowers, of Laneville, Texas.

While Mrs. Bowers is a remarkable woman, and unusually well preserved, there is no reason why everybody should not be equally so. Mrs. Bowers is now in her seventy-sixth year, is the mother of eleven children, the oldest being fifty-odd years of age and the youngest thirty. She does all of her own house work, washing and ironing, works her own garden and flowers and attends to her chickens; can sew with a fine needle without glasses and walks three miles a day.

Mrs. Bowers attributes her present remarkable good health to the use of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and justly so, because it is the very best blood purifier in the world to-day, and has been for the past thirty years. W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron makes pure blood, invigorates the nerves, restores all organs to normal health, insures proper digestion, creates a hearty appetite, is laxative in its effects and can be had from your druggist in 50c and $1.00 size bottles.

Get a $1.00 bottle of W. H. Bull's Herbs and Iron and if you can't see any improvement in your general health after using two-thirds of it, return the remainder to your druggist and he will refund your money on the whole bottle.

If your druggist's supply is exhausted ask him to order it for you from his jobber.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and it Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

Wm. H. Coleman, Ruston, La.

Let any pastor desiring the assistance of Brother Turner, or any one of the above, write the chairman of the evangelistic committee, stating date desired.

Let any pastor who will join this evangelistic movement agreeing to give ten days to the work, also write the said chairman. Fraternally yours,
WM. H. COLEMAN,
Chairman Evangelistic Committee.

THE MILLSAPS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.

Millsaps Preparatory School since the formal separation from the College last June, has had a decidedly successful year. Founder's Hall, the new home of the school, is ideal in location and arrangement. It has been comparatively easy to enforce regulations such as the best preparatory schools have found satisfactory. The observance of study hours at night has increased the efficiency of the work and has proved an effective means of keeping the students out of town at night. A fine spirit of loyalty to the new institution has developed among the boys. This is shown in their literary work and in the athletic contests.

The Preparatory students celebrated Washington's birthday by an informal reception, in which they opened their doors for the first time to their friends in the city. The affair was entirely democratic, although it was necessary to have but a limited number of guests present. The reception hall lent itself beautifully to decoration in the national colors. Among the guests were President and Mrs. Hull, Major Millsaps, Mrs. Austin, and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Bule, of Jackson.

An entertainment of quite a different kind, but no less pleasing, was furnished on the night of February 23. On this occasion representatives from the Millsaps Preparatory School met representatives from the Chamberlain-Hunt Academy in an interscholastic debate. The subject was, Resolved, That Foreign Immigration to the United States Should Be Further Restricted. Millsaps not only won the decision, but won the award of best speaker on either side by a unanimous vote. Mr. R. C. Edwards and Mr. T. L. Carraway spoke for Millsaps, and Mr. A. Bosch and Mr. T. T. Williams for Chamberlain-Hunt. Mr. R. C. Edwards was declared the best speaker. The Jackson Daily News in speaking of the contest says:

"The debate was an exceptionally good one. Each of the speakers handled himself like a veteran of the platform. The occasion was one of which Prof. Noble, the head master of the Preparatory School, and all who are interested in the school, might well be proud. The speakers acquitted themselves in such a way that the occasion was one of which many an educational institution of higher rank might justly have liked to boast."

The Chamberlain-Hunt speakers were worthy opponents and gave a stiff fight. This debate is the first of a series of the triangular contests that have been arranged between these institutions, including the French Camp Academy as the third party. Messrs J. R. Spinks and O. W. H. Felder will debate with French Camp on March 15. The result is awaited with interest.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District Conference will be held at Mansfield, La., March 29th to April 2d. Conference will convene at 3 p.m., March 29th, in the Methodist Church. The opening sermon will be preached at 7:30 p.m., March 29th, by Rev. Felix R. Hill, Jr.

The members of the Conference are urged to come prepared to remain through the whole time of the session. We are convinced that no charge will materially suffer from the absence of the pastor on this Sunday. The preachers in charge of circuits will not miss an appointment on account of the Sunday of the Conference being the fifth Sunday. The stations can easily spare their pastors for one Sunday, and will thus be impressed with the unity of Methodism in the bounds of the district. We believe that it can be easily shown that the very spirit of the laws of the Discipline creating the District Conference is violated by a failure to include the Sabbath in its session.

We urge our preachers and people to pray that this Conference shall prove a great inspiration to the work of the district, and a great blessing to the church and people at Mansfield.

The following committees will serve the Conference:

Recommendation for Orders—V. D. Skipper, R. A. Davis, S. S. Holladay.

Recommendation for Admission—G. E. Cameron, B. H. Sheppard, C. M. Morris.

Quarterly Conference Records—H. J. Boltz, W. F. Henderson, V. L. Fulton.

PAUL M. BROWN, P. E.

A wrong-doer is often a man that has left something undone, not always he that has done something.—Marcus Aurelius.

When the great names of the twentieth century go down in history, the name of Thomas A. Edison will head the list, for he brought the whole world of music within the reach of all the people when he invented the

Edison Phonograph

Even in the great music centers, the big cities where opera, concerts, oratorios and recitals of every kind are going on every night, you can hear no such program as you get on the Edison Phonograph, for in each case you get only one particular kind of music, while with the Edison Phonograph you select your own program—you get all kinds, or rather all the kinds that you want to hear and nothing that you do not want. Perhaps you like a certain kind of music, band or orchestra for instance, one member of your family may prefer sacred music, the old love ballads or airs from the opera, still another may fancy talking records or rag time. The Edison Phonograph plays them all, and right in the comfort of your own home.

Any Edison dealer in the list below will give you a free Edison Concert—find the one nearest you and ask him. Take your family and friends along.

You will wonder why you have denied yourself and your family this great pleasure all these years—especially when you find how easy it is to own an Edison Phonograph.

There is a genuine Edison Phonograph to suit everybody's means from the Gem at $15.00 to the Amberola at $200.00. And the Edison dealer will undoubtedly arrange terms to suit your convenience. The dealer will probably consent to give this concert in your home if you ask him. Don't delay this opportunity. If no dealer is located conveniently near you, write us for catalog, list of over 2000 records and full information.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

VOL. 59—No. 11.

"Prove All Things; Hold Fast That Which is Good"

WHOLE No. 2826.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY MARCH 14, 1912.

CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

Editorial

A contemporary says: "Motor, and the world motors with you; aviate, and you aviate alone." The upward way has always been lonely and difficult.

Watchfulness was often enjoined upon the early disciples. Nor is it less needed in this day. The snares and pitfalls of Satan abound on every side, and only he who walks "circumspectly", or "carefully", as the Revised Version has it, may hope to escape them. The far too frequent falls of ministers and prominent laymen warn us, with tremendous emphasis, that we should be ever on our guard.

Prayer and work are both required to produce a rich and fruitful Christian life. Neither amounts to much without the other; but combine them, and what they may accomplish no human mind can tell. Prayer brings the soul into the secret place of power and girds it with strength; in work the power thus imparted is put into helpful operation. This explains why they who pray the most are usually the most efficient in service. There has never been a disciple who achieved large things for the Master who did not tarry much in the secret closet.

President Welch of the Ohio Wesleyan University in his February lecture to the students of that institution, made a vigorous defense of the Church. He characterized it as "the most powerful inspiration and the most powerful agency for the world's benefit that exists on the face of the earth." This is not an extravagant statement. If the influence of the Church were withdrawn from the world, it would soon become unfit for human habitation. The very foundations of society would be undermined, and all governments and civilizations would become too corrupt to stand. The destiny of the race and the fate of all the creations of man's brain and brawn are bound up in the future of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The slogan of the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church is "An Advocate in Every Home." A better one it could not have. It is idle to talk of enlisting members of the Church in the great work of extending the divine kingdom until they are informed as to what is going on in the religious world. Our next General Conference ought to come to the rescue of the struggling papers of Southern Methodism. We know of nothing that is more urgently needed than this. We should create a periodical literature that is second to none, and do everything in our power to circulate it. The denomination that has a weak and meagerly patronized press, no matter what may be its other possessions, is poorly equipped to meet the tremendous issues of the future.

WHAT A MINISTER SHOULD SEEK.

There is nothing to justify a minister in seeking a conspicuous place in the Church, because of the support or pleasure that it might give him. Ambition for opportunity, however, is not wrong, for the reason that it is a man's duty to spend his life where it can be made to count most for the Master. The preacher who is dissatisfied in a field where it is possible to accomplish but little, is not to be summarily condemned. Paul, the foremost minister of all time and whose abnegation of self was complete, did not fritter away his strength in meagerly settled localities, but went to the great centers where his work could exert a wide influence. He did not ignore, but availed himself of the strategic points.

But even large opportunity, though it may be legitimately desired, is not the chief thing that a pastor should seek. What he should set his heart upon and unceasingly strive for, is the equipment that will give efficiency. Like Timothy, it is his duty to stir up the gift that is within him. If he is effective in the highest and truest sense, he need not fear that doors to great usefulness will not open to him. Providence never overlooks one who is qualified for high service. Those charged with the responsibility of securing capable men for difficult positions are constantly scanning the country from ocean to ocean to find them. The supply is never equal to the demand.

Dr. Gilbert, the editor of the Western Christian Advocate, tells in his paper of a recent visit to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City to hear its renowned pastor, Dr. J. H. Jowett. To make sure of good seats, he and his party went an hour before the opening of the service. The people poured into the spacious auditorium, which seats nearly 3,000, until it overflowed and many had to go away. Referring to the distinguished minister, Dr. Gilbert says: "Though many reports of a seemingly extravagant character had reached our ears of the charm and power of this man, we were compelled to conclude that the half had not been told."

This superb preacher of the Word uses no artifice. The little schemes resorted to by others to enhance their acceptability were not to the least extent invoked. His pronunciation was "American—rather of the type of the Middle West, if we may be permitted to differentiate. He sought no climax, he employed no dramatic pose or gesture, attempted no witticism—not even saying the humorous. Stripped bare of all this extra paraphernalia so generally confiscated by ministers, he stood before us a man with a message, that it was easy to see he was deeply desirous of imparting to his hearers."

What brought Dr. Jowett across the Atlantic and made him pastor of the foremost Presbyterian Church in the United States? Manifestly, it was his efficiency. Favoritism or place-hunting had nothing to do with it. He did not seek the position—it sought him. There is in this a lesson that those of us in the Christian ministry should lay to heart. Especially would we impress it upon our young preachers, who yet have their careers largely before them. To them we would say, Leave nothing possible undone to become truly effective in the pulpit and pastorate. No price is too dear to pay for this. Should they study? Yes, painstakingly and systematically. Knowledge is an important element of strength. But it lacks much of being all that is needed. Some of the driest and most uninfluential preachers are men of liberal education. Common sense, tact, fervor, sympathy, energy, force of personality, and the gifts and graces of speech are factors in a full equipment for the manifold duties of the pastorate. The requisite spiritual furnishing should also be constantly sought. There are qualifications for the work of the ministry that can be procured only on bended knees in the privacy of the closet. The true prophet of the twentieth century must not only be taught in the schools of men, but, like the prophets of old, he must also be taught of God. The learning of the Egyptians was helpful to Moses, but before he was fit to become the leader of the Lord's people, he needed in addition thereto the sight of the burning bush and the message from Jehovah. The teaching of the schools of Tarsus and the learned Gamaliel contributed to Paul's equipment for his mighty work, and without it he probably could never have accomplished what he did, but his powers were misdirected until he had his memorable vision and heard the voice of Jesus speaking to him on the road to Damascus.

No minister is faithful in the highest sense who does not measure up to the best of which he is capable. He should be ever seeking to discover what elements of success he lacks, and laying himself out to acquire them. To be sure, God does not expect us all to be Jowetts and Gunsauluses—natural endowments count for much—but he does expect us to exercise the talents that he has given us and to strive to enlarge them. Only the preacher who does this may hope to hear from the lips of the divine Judge on the last great day that loftiest eulogy that can be paid a human being, "He hath done what he could."

POET BISHOPS.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has two chief pastors who frequently invoke the Muses: Bishop Warren and Bishop McIntyre. They possess poetic gifts of no mean order, and their writings in verse are widely read and admired. Of the present panel of Southern Methodist Bishops, Bishop Hoss, we believe, is the only one who composes poetry. Some of the lines from his gifted pen possess genuine merit, and will live long after he has passed away. One of the most beautiful songs for use in the baptism of infants that the Methodist Hymnal contains was written by him. Of our former chief pastors, the poetic fire was perhaps more marked in Bishop John C. Keener than any other. He had a Miltonic imagination, and occasionally wrote verses of surpassing beauty. We have always thought it somewhat strange that none of his poems were given a place in our hymn book. We think that more than one of them was worthy of such recognition, and would have added to the rich treasures of that noble volume. These sons of song are in the true Wesleyan succession, as both the great Founder of Methodism and his distinguished brother were endowed with poetic genius.

"WHAT A CHURCH MEMBER CAN DO TO PROMOTE A REVIVAL IN HIS CHURCH."

By Rev. Wm. H. Coleman.
(By request.)

First of all he can pray. In the great Wales revival of a few years ago the prayer of each leader and worker was, "O Lord, give us a revival, and let it begin in me." The church member who will continue to pray this prayer earnestly and sincerely will receive the revival vision and the revival spirit, like Isaiah, Luther, Wesley and others who, having seen the Lord, saw not only life's meaning, but also life's mission.

Isaiah said, "I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." Not that he had been a man of profane or obscene mouth; he was evidently a gentleman of too much culture and refinement and of too lofty ideals for anything so degrading, but, seeing the Lord, he saw that his life had been so imperfect and empty and shallow as to render his very utterances of worship in the sanctuary, as it were, unclean in the sight of such a holy God.

Speaking of things upon which people usually place such a high estimate, St. Paul said, "I count them but refuse that I may win Christ." Seeing God, they saw things in their real value, and learned to place supreme things first. And this is what every church member needs to-day. We need something of the spirit of Knox when he said, "Give me Scotland or I die"—something of the spirit of our Lord when, burdened with the weight of the world's sins, he went through Gethsemane to Calvary "to save his people from their sins."

Christ said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." In Biblical usage a name signifies nature or character. Therefore, if we would pray a prevailing prayer, it should not only be with faith in Christ, but with Christ-like humility, devotion and submission to the Father's will. When the Church member thus approaches the throne the revival will begin in his life; he will have something of the altruistic spirit of his Lord that will give him a yearning for the salvation of the lost. Then he can pray the prevailing prayer, conducive to promoting a revival in his church and in the world. Elijah prayed down a great revival on Carmel; Paul went praying as he set the revival fires burning in two continents; the "Holy Club" at Oxford prayed and the Wesleyan revival not only reclaimed Great Britain from spiritual deadness and helped to redeem her from national decay, but it went further and helped to establish our American civilization. It has also permeated every creed of Christendom and touched almost every nation of the earth with the gospel message of the witness of the Holy Spirit, and it is destined to sweep on over the earth until the whole world is evangelized. The Student Volunteer Movement was born in the "haystack" prayer meeting. The Laymen's Missionary Movement had its beginning in a prayer meeting in the city of New York.

In the second place, and simultaneous with his praying, the church member can help to promote a revival in his Church by living a consistent Christian life, so that his loved ones at home and his associates in business and in society can have confidence in his life and his religion.

St. Paul tells us that we are ambassadors for Christ, and some one has truly said that the Christian is the sinner's Bible. Therefore, we need to be very careful on the one hand not to misrepresent our Lord, and on the other hand not to mislead those who are watching our lives.

But when one lives the above mentioned prayer-life, his conduct will be consistent with his profession. When the individual comes face to face with a vision of God, he will see many things to be sinful in which before he has seen no evil. The Psalmist speaks of "presumptuous sins," those that come boldly and undisguised, and of "secret faults," those that come subtly to take us unawares in our pursuit of profit and pleasure.

Of such we need to beware, and from such we can escape only through wisdom that God alone can give us, as we obediently accept the leadership and teaching of his Holy Spirit.

The church member can help to promote a revival in his church by doing personal work. No one can effectively do this third thing until he has done—is doing—the first two. Then he is qualified for this most delicate and sacred task. This is the greatest work that any human being can ever accomplish—the sublime achievement of entering the sacred precinct of the soul and leading that soul into the council chamber of the King of kings and Lord of lords, and introducing it to Him whom to know is eternal life. "Let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."

When H. Clay Trumbull was a young man of 23 years, working in a railroad office, a young gentleman friend of his wrote him asking him to become a Christian. He at once gave his heart and life to Christ and resolved to devote his life to winning men to the Master. For fifty years as a layman he won men, one by one, until he had led multiplied thousands into the kingdom of God, and many times they were men whom one would least expect to be saved.

Last summer, at the great Bible Conference, at Lake Winona, Ind., the writer heard Harry Monroe, Superintendent of the Pacific Gardens Mission, Chicago, tell his experience. Harry Monroe was a business man of Chicago, who was leading a fast, dissipated life. He aimlessly wandered one night into a mid-week service of some kind, and a layman led him to surrender his life to Christ and be saved. He was genuinely converted and went out to lead others to the Savior. That faithful church member in that mid-week prayer meeting was not only promoting a revival in his church, but in the world; for Harry Monroe led Mel Trotter to Christ, and Billy Sunday to Christ, and Harry and Mel and Billy are annually leading their thousands to the Savior of men. I had rather be that humble layman who led Harry Monroe to the Savior and started the great revival that these godly men are to-day carrying on, than to be the world's greatest general or statesman or money king, who never led a soul to Christ.

There may be some Trumbull or Monroe or Trotter or Sunday in your community waiting for you to lead him to salvation and a life of service. Our stewardship lays on us a tremendous responsibility, but it also gives us a glorious opportunity. Shall we not pray for, live for, work for and expect a revival in our respective lives, churches, communities, and in our entire Conference? Not one to begin and close with the coming and the going of our Conference Evangelist, but one that shall be general and lasting.

"O, Lord, reviveth thy work in the midst of the years."—Habakkuk 3:2.

THE POWER OF SACRED MUSIC AND SONG.

A missionary in India tells in the "British Weekly" the following touching incident clustering about a well-loved hymn: It was in March, 1904. I had left my hotel, and made my way through the picturesque crowds in the streets of A—. The Sabbath was essentially a French one. I had turned aside that day from globe-trotting pursuits, and taken my place in the church of the United Frees, among some three-score of God's people whose mother tongue was English.

On my right and left were missionaries of the North African Mission—they from Africa, I from India. It seemed to me a meeting of the oceans. Immediately in front of me was the English consul. On his left was his wife.

What the minister preached about I really forget. Perhaps that was not the preacher's fault. He was a pastor there for his health, and displayed no special vigor. Even the words and music of the hymns had failed to stir the depths of my nature. Perhaps I was not in a receptive spirit. On went the minutes, and I was not sorry.

The hour had at last fled. Invocation, lessons, prayers, sermon, collection, announcements were all over. What had been to me a most uneventful service was now to be brought to a close by a hymn and the benediction. The minister announced George Matheson's "O Love that wilt not let me go." When a much-loved hymn is announced in Wales—the land I know best—the people stir with joy, and cast meaning glances at one another. That morning "listless" could have been written over the whole service. The announcement of even that hymn seemed to stir no one.

While the minister was reading the first verse, I noticed a man of perhaps fifty change seats with the lady organist. It was nothing to mark. "He is the local organist," I thought, "and the lady is a visitor." Suddenly the notes were touched, and the little American organ seemed to have been "born again." Bar followed bar. We all brightened up. There was a master at the keys. We stood, and sang:

"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

The lost chord seemed to have been found. If a seraph had come to wake me with a song of Zion, the surprise would not have been greater. The organist seemed in the third heaven. Here and there he made pauses not in the book. He sang and played, and carried us on irresistibly. Then we plunged into the second verse:

"O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be."

I could not fail to notice the deep emotion of the consul's wife, for she stood in the next pew in front. She had ceased to sing, her trembling was manifest. The music was like the sound of many waters. The volume of it increased. The third verse was reached:

"O Joy that seekest me through pain,
I can not close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain
That morn shall tearless be."

With a strange suddenness the consul's wife fell on her knees and was convulsed with emotion. With her hands she covered her face while the majestic music swept on. The husband knew not what to do, for all eyes were turned toward his wife. With inborn calmness and strong sympathy he bowed in prayer at his wife's side. The sight was beautiful, and there were many wet eyes near where I stood. But what of the organist? He was in rhapsody. Down his furrowed face tears made their way. Bending over the keys, he poured out his very soul. Of time and space he seemed ignorant. The emphasis was that of intense feeling, born of rare experience, controlled by musical ability—both instrumental and vocal.

When we reached the last verse, I for one, wished blind Matheson had provided us with more. And yet we might not have been able to bear it.

"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be."

The scene continued the same to the end, only with deeper feeling. Great was the relief when the last note died away, and the minister as awed as the rest of us, pronounced the benediction. So great was the solemnity of the occasion that no one wanted to disturb the silence by rising from his knees.

When the congregation did rise to disperse, several went forward to thank the organist. I was one of them. In the group were several Americans, and one said to the organist, still bathed in tears: "We knew your wife." The one answer was a quiet smile, followed by quick re-irement from the church. The man was gone before we could say a tithe of what we felt.

In the aisles and at the church door I learned that the man who had waked up everybody's soul was a distinguished Christian singer of England and Scotland. Two years before his wife lay dying—and she was an American, equal to him in musical talent. She had asked him to sing to her, as she entered the valley of the shadow of death, "O Love that wilt not let me go." He did so. But he had not ventured to sing it again until that memorable morning. Ah, that was a sufficient explanation! Sorrow had wrought the power.

I wended my way hotelward, but my thoughts were on the wings of the music, "blossoming red." Such music—that "lost chord"—set to such words, I can never hope to hear again until I stand within the gates of the New Jerusalem.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

SPIRITUAL REALITY.

(The substance of a talk made by Rev. C. C. Seiceman on Friday, March 1, in the Dreamland Theatre, where the Methodist pastors of New Orleans are conducting a series of services during the Lenten season. Text: I John 1:4.)

Henry Churchill King has written a book entitled "The Seeming Unreality of the Spiritual Life." It is to be feared that spiritual things are not only seemingly unreal to the most of us, but truly unreal. We are jostled by the grosser material facts on every hand. Through the five gates come constant reports of events and changes in the realm of mere things. Material noises thunder in our ears. Material visions smite our weary eyes. We are apt to forget that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth; that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

Those of us who have read the morning papers have heard the storm and stress of human passion. We have witnessed the earthquake upheavals in China and Mexico. We have beheld the fires of passion burn, but have not taken time to hear the still small voice. "Be still and know that I am God," is the appeal that comes to us out of the eternal.

Sunday afternoon I heard one of the foremost preachers of America tell in glowing words and striking figures of speech of the wonders of America; of our new canal, our splendid seaport, our majestic river, the depth of our soil, and the value of our swamp lands. The cheering of the people seemed empty. One hearer, at least, went away feeling that a prophet of the Most High God had spent a part of the day set apart for us to get into closer touch with the eternal, in dining into our ears the gross facts that already have us in bondage, "For the world passeth away and the glory thereof, but he that doeth the will of the Lord abideth forever."

Now John moves in the realm of spiritual realities with the tread of one who walks familiar premises. His nature has become domesticated in the Eternal, "That which from the beginning, that which we have heard, seen—beheld—handled concerning the Word of Life." There is no unreal here. Here is a man who has penetrated the surface of things and arrived at the secret of all life and being.

John uses "know" thirty-two times in this brief epistle. Can man know God? Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. In other words, before spiritual reality can be established, we must establish:

1. The reality of man. If the materialist is true in his contention that man is but a highly refined lump of matter, that mind is the product of brain cells, that that subtle and mighty thing which we call personality is the resultant of cunning combinations of atoms throbbing with magnetism or electricity, and that personality vanishes with the dissolution of the elements of man's body; if man is but 150 lbs. of carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and nitrogen, then spiritual things do not exist for him. I am sure the time has come for us to reassert our belief in the human personality.

2. God must be real. Not the Great Perhaps, but the Great "I Am;" not the sum of all natural forces, but an infinite and eternal Father. "Personality, Human and Divine," a virile, masterful volume from the pen of Hilingworth, would be reasonable reading in these days, when Pantheism parades in so many semi-religious disguises. In the Power that is responsible for the world, we have to do with Intelligence, Will, Purpose. In other words this Power, this Eternal Energy, is personal—God the Father.

3. God must reveal himself to man, as a knowable God. The agnostic does not deny God. He says God, if he is, is unknowable. But we believe with John that God is knowable. He revealed himself to Moses, saying, "Tell Pharaoh, I Am hath sent you." He revealed himself to Abraham as "El Shadai"—"the God who is enough." Isaiah testifies that he saw the Lord in the year that King Uzziah died. He beheld his glory, his holiness, and heard his voice saying, "Go." David cries, "The Lord is my Shepherd." John says he has seen, heard, handled, and knows things concerning the Word of Life. Brethren, let us not let the material crowd the spiritual out of our lives. Let us refuse to permit the noises and discords of human affairs to choke the music out. For us, of the busy city, as truly as for the discouraged prophet of the wilderness, there remains the need for "the still small voice."

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

A citizen is one born or naturalized in any country. A Christian is one whose heart has been transformed by the power of God, and whose life is in harmony with the principles taught by Christ. A Christian citizen is this Christ-led man who dwells upon earth. Christian citizenship is that principle of high living that makes a man both a benefit to his country and to his God.

Paul says, "Our citizenship is in heaven." But our residence is on earth. The object of our first love may be elsewhere and our heart may be centered on things above, but we must reckon with the place of our habitation.

In Hebrews XI, 13, we read that "we are strangers and pilgrims on earth." Peter calls us "sojourners" here. Thus we see that some thought is required to fully understand what is meant by Christian citizenship.

Our relationship to this earth is like that of a man traveling in a foreign country. In Germany he is an American, a stranger and a pilgrim. In case of trouble he wraps himself in the American flag and says, "The Stars and Stripes are my protection." Our citizenship is in heaven. There our treasure is, and there our heart is also. We expect to go there and dwell, for we have mansions there. If trouble overtakes us here, we can pillow our heads upon the word of God, wrap about us the robes of God's righteousness, and know that in sickness our God is our strength and that in death He is our light and our life.

But what relationship does this Christian citizen sustain to earth? An American in Germany is subject to the laws and regulations of Germany. If he owns property, he pays taxes. If he conducts a business, he pays license. If he disobeys the German law, he suffers the German penalty. The United States knows well that her citizens in Germany will need help in order that they may be good American citizens, and at the same time sustain right relations to Germany; so she has consuls there to assist them in their troubles. So complicated is the problem of citizenship in the world that there has sprung up a code of international law. This strikingly illustrates God's methods. As a Christian citizen we are subject to earth's laws. The laws of earth are physical and civil. Physical laws must be obeyed as long as we are upon earth. If we disobey them, we must suffer the penalty. Sickness, pain and death are the penalties for disobedience to physical laws, and God will no more protect a Christian from these penalties, than will the United States protect one of her citizens from paying license to conduct a business in Berlin. Civil laws concern property and commerce. The Christian, as a business man, must transact business as any other man. There is no difference between the dollar of the Christian and that of the sinner. Because one is a member of the Church is no reason why he should transact business in a way more slack than other men.

But in the world we are not alone. There are good men and there are bad men. We must meet them and sustain right relations to them. To this end there must be universal law. Such there is, and we call it the moral law or the law of trespass. Moral law must be eternal and unchangeable, hence infallible. It must be as right in heaven as on earth, just as international law must be as right in Germany as in America. If there is a moral law that is infallible it must be made by God. And, indeed, God has given us the moral law. The Decalogue contains ten articles. The first two of the ten teach us how to sustain right relations to our King. The third prevents us from abusing our privileges by attempting to use his name in vain. The fourth reserves a day of surcease from toil out of every seven, during which we pay reverent worship to our King. This is divine patriotism. The fifth bids us honor our parents, and the other five teach us not to murder, commit adultery, steal, lie or covet. And the Decalogue is but the epitome of the constitutional law of heaven. The great love-commandment bids us love God with all our hearts and our brother as ourselves. And then it says that upon this hang all the law and the prophets.

This Constitution of Heaven cannot be amended. Every act of our life that is not in harmony with love is unconstitutional. In the Kingdom of God, which includes heaven and earth, the unifying force is love, and when a citizen possesses the spirit of love he is a Christian citizen. It is in the unity of love that we build hospitals and asylums. It is in the unity of love that we make criminal laws regulating passions and prohibiting transgressions. Thus we enact legislation against intemperance, against gambling and against other forms of sin. The business of the Church is not to make prohibitory laws but to make Christian men. It is not necessary to preach to a Christian citizen and urge him to do his duty on a great economic question. Regulate the man's life by the eternal laws of God and help him to strike out every act that is contrary to the constitutional law of heaven, and his position on the great political issues of the nation will be right.

CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITY.

The "Missionary Review of the World" tells of some Korean disciples who are living on millet, selling their rice, that they may have the difference in value between these two foods to aid in spreading the gospel among their fellow-countrymen. At one meeting a native disciple, having little or no money to give, offered in personal work and without any compensation, one hundred days, or over one-third the working days of a full year, and was followed by others with offers of a similar sort. Why should these Korean Christians feel their responsibility any more than we feel ours?—The Presbyterian.

Dr. Levi G. Hart, editor of the Western Christian Advocate, is visiting Porto Rico.

Bishop Hoss will spend a part of the present month looking after the work in Florida.

Bishop W. B. Murrah occupied the pulpit of St. John's M. E. Church, South, of Memphis, on March 3, and delivered an able discourse.

Gypsy Smith will speak at the rally arranged by the Evangelistic Committee of New York City on April 2. The meeting will be held in Carnegie Hall.

A $60,000 house of worship is nearing completion at Anderson, South Carolina. The next session of the Annual Conference will be held in this building.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis will deliver the address at the anniversary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the New York Conference in Kingston, N. Y., on March 28.

Dr. Richard Wilkinson has been chosen President of the Louisville (Ky.) Ministerial Association. His many friends in Louisiana and Mississippi will be pleased to know that he has been thus honored.

During the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council in Washington, D. C., April 10-17, a daily paper will be issued. It is hoped that there will be a large number of subscribers from every part of the Church.

Bishop J. C. Kilgo recently preached twice a day for ten days in a meeting at Greenwood, South Carolina. It is reported that there were many conversions and scores of reclamations as a result of his stirring sermons.

The Western Christian Advocate states that the number of delegates to the approaching General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be approximately 825. A body of this size will necessarily be quite unwieldy.

The New York Tribune says that The Churchman of New York City, the ablest journal of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, is soon to have a change of owners, and that Dr. Silas McBee, its accomplished editor, will retire.

The Southern Methodist women of Lexington, Ky., are arranging to open a Wesley House in that city in the near future. A Board of Management has been elected, and rooms have been secured and are now being fitted up for the work in contemplation.

The Depository of the Methodist Episcopal Church on Washington Street in Chicago has been sold to Mr. Henry Field, at present of London, England, for $600,000, possession to be given on or before the 31st of next December. A new Methodist depository will be opened in another part of the city.

The following are some of the statistics of our Church in Cuba: Members, 3,508; additions last year, 343; paid pastors, $1,285; raised for missions, $2,046; number of church buildings, 35; value of churches, $122,752; number of parsonages, 20; value of parsonages, $39,845; value of all property aggregated, $235,504.

Dr. A. M. Muckenfuss, Professor of Chemistry in the University of Mississippi, contributed to the Texas Christian Advocate of Feb. 29, an interesting paper, entitled, "The Great Movement for Education in the Southwest." He thinks the movement to establish the Southern Methodist University at Dallas is needed and timely.

Dr. Frank D. Gamewell, superintendent of the educational work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in China, is now in the United States. He has come to study our educational methods, with a view to improving the schools under his supervision in the Orient. Dr. Gamewell was a conspicuous figure in the great Missionary Conference held by Southern Methodists in New Orleans in 1911.

In the death of Dr. A. M. Fairbairn, the Principal Emeritus of Mansfield College, at Oxford, England has lost one of her most brilliant and widely known scholars. Perhaps Dr. Fairbairn's best books are his "Studies in the Life of Christ," and his "Philosophy of the Christian Religion." He was born in Scotland in 1838, and had been connected with Mansfield College for about twenty-five years.

Dr. S. A. Steel will publish in the fall a new volume, entitled, "The Spirit of Saxon." This is an autobiographical book, and gives the story of the author's life up to the time of his election as chaplain of the University of Virginia. Emanating from such a source, it is needless to say that it does not contain a dull page, but that it fairly sparkles from beginning to end. The price is $1.25. If you desire a copy, write at once to Dr. S. A. Steel, Jackson, Tenn.

On February 26 the friends of Dr. J. M. Buckley presented to the Methodist Hospital in Brooklyn, N. Y., a bronze bust of him, the work of the widely known sculptor, Guston Borglum. It is said that an editorial written by Dr. Buckley thirty-one years ago influenced George I. Seney, a railroad magnate, to give $400,000 to found this institution, which now has property and equipment valued at $1,200,000, and an endowment of $840,000. Dr. Buckley was elected the first president of the Board of Trustees and has held that position ever since. He has been editor of the New York Christian Advocate for thirty-two years, and is a Methodist celebrity of world-wide reputation.

Concerning Missions

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Pastors and Third Vice-Presidents of the Mississippi Conference:

We are writing to the various church organizations of Southern Methodism requesting each pastor to preach on "Christian Stewardship" on the 17th day of March, or as near thereto as is convenient. "One more revival (only one more) is needed—a revival of "Christian Stewardship," the consecration of the money power of the church to God. When that revival comes the Kingdom of God will come in a day." We earnestly beg our pastors to help us to bring this revival throughout the Mississippi Conference.

I am sending to each Third Vice President the blank reports and instructions for this year. All other literature that could be obtained, also blank reports and instructions were sent out in December. However, the District Secretaries have sent only a very imperfect list of the Third Vice Presidents, as they cannot hear from the Auxiliaries. If this literature has fallen into the hands of some other Auxiliary officer, please hand it to the proper person; and if you have no Third Vice-President, will you not elect one of your most intelligent, consecrated women to this responsible office and ask her to write to me at once. I am always glad to hear from you, and am anxious and waiting to help you. Yours to command, mine to obey. Sincerely,

MRS. J. R. ELLIS,
Conf. Third Vice-President.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The second Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Council will be held at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Washington, D. C., April 10-17, 1912. Owing to crowded conditions incident to the presence in the city at that time of other conventions, the number of those entertained by the local committee must be restricted to members of the Council, missionaries, deaconesses, speakers and ministers. A list of boarding houses and hotels, with rates of each, will be secured, and the Committee on Arrangements will be very glad to assist any one in securing a comfortable home during the Council meeting.

The names of those expecting to be present should be sent to Miss Annie Walker, 1012 Thirteenth St., N. W., Washington, D. C. Reduced railroad rates cannot be obtained, as the Southeastern Passenger Association states that the probable attendance will not justify the granting of special rates. Party tickets may be secured from central points by persons coming from the same or contiguous territory.

Miss BELLE H. BENNETT, President.
Mrs. FRANK SILER, Secretary.
Mrs. F. S. PARKER, Secretary.

A REQUEST TO OUR PASTORS.

For several years the Woman's Missionary Council, through the Department of Christian Stewardship, has made an appeal to the pastors throughout the Church to preach a special sermon on Christian Stewardship. We are repeating this request again, and will ask that the sermon be preached on Sunday, March 17th, or as near thereto as is convenient. We take this occasion to express our gratitude for the cordial compliance with this request in the past on the part of many of our pastors, and we bespeak your interest in the same again at this time. Certainly there is no subject more vital to the success of the great Forward Movement in our Church than is this one. We feel confident that a sermon from every pastor in our Church at this time on Christian Stewardship will be far-reaching in its results. Will you grant our request?

Mrs. J. W. PERRY, of the Dept. of Christian Stewardship and Mission Study, Woman's Missionary Council.

THE ORPHANS' HOME.

I am just in receipt of a letter from Brother W. M. Williams, manager of the Orphans' Home, telling me that he would fall behind $1000 in his last month's running expenses. Dear reader, if you should have received this letter, what would have been your advice to him? There are now 200 children in the Orphans' Home, and we have more than 100,000 Methodists in this State whom these children are leaning on and looking to for their daily bread and the comforts of life. In this great work I regard the Methodist preachers as the best friends of the Home, for if they should withdraw their support and influence it certainly would not last long. We are doing a great work at the Home; it is a great power for good for the Church, reflecting its rays of love and sympathy into every neighborhood of our State. The philanthropic work of our Lord and the apostles probably did more to draw the multitudes unto them than all of their preaching and teaching. We should consider it a great privilege to contribute to the sustenance of these unfortunate children, whom God, in his wisdom, has placed among us. If you do not contribute and take collections at once and forward the money to Brother Williams, he will be compelled to close the doors of the Institution to those who are seeking admission and rapidly decrease the present number in it. I beg you to take up collections at once and forward them to him.

JNO. H. SHERARD,
President of the Board of Trustees.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE.

By Rev. W. G. HARBIN.

Bound in Cloth and Gold. Price 50c, postpaid.

The book deals with a subject of vital importance to every Christian and reveals an insight into the movements of God's Spirit upon the hearts of men, which should make it of much spiritual benefit to all who read and study it. The simplicity of treatment, the beauty of diction, and the wealth of apt illustrations give to the book a charm which holds the reader's attention from beginning to end. The author has rendered a distinct service to his fellow Christians.—Rev. D. C. Hull, M.A., President of Millsaps College.

The prospective closing of all the mints in the United States except the one in Philadelphia shows how unpopular hard money is. The average man prefers paper money, and yet it has only a representative value. If the United States should ever become involved in a great war and her credit should depreciate in value, hard money would soon become very popular. Gold alone, of all moneys, is valuable as money all over the world.

CHILDHOOD MEMORIES OF NEW ORLEANS.

By Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

No. 2.

At once our names were placed on the class roll as probationers for six months, under Brother Wm. Fowler class leader. Oh! how tenderly, wisely our leader every week nourished and guarded our spiritual life—training us to work by prayer and testimony. In due time we were advanced into full membership, and there is no doubt that the training of that godly, consecrated class leader had much to do with our future usefulness as church workers. Brother Gridley soon after transferred to the State of California, and gave a strong helping hand to the work of planting Methodism in that then far-off land.

My parents, in returning to the New Orleans side of the Mississippi River, located their home opposite Dr. Twitchell's Presbyterian Church in Lafayette. Our church membership was placed in the St. Mary Street Methodist Mission Church (a modest frame structure made of "Flat Boat" lumber), until the Felicity Road Church was erected, then the membership of St. Mary Street was transferred to Felicity. In the meantime, our rented home was on St. Andrew, near the corner of Magazine Street, some three blocks from the Felicity Street Church location. It was while living on St. Andrew Street that I sustained accidental injuries that crippled me for life. To get about, I used a two-levered velocipede, and as the Sunday school room of Felicity was on the ground floor, I was able to propel my velocipede into the building without help. Precious memories abide of Leonard Fash, teacher, and Wm. Foster, the superintendent of this Sunday school; also of pastors McTyeire and Linus Parker, who later on served our Methodism as Bishops.

The Band, led by Sisters Deacon, Brown, Lane and Downer, held their weekly meetings alternately at their several homes, and greatly aided the development of Felicity Methodism. Three pupils of the Felicity Street Sunday school became itinerant Methodist preachers: Chas. F. Evans, John T. Sawyer and myself—all yet alive, but on the retired list. Several others later on went out from this same Sunday school.

The Band meetings were discontinued about 1855, when Sister Lane died, and my parents moved to Forest Home, now Whitestown, a suburb of McComb City, Pike County, Miss. Sister Brown followed Sister Lane, in entering heaven, followed by Sister Downer, then Sister Deacon. At the bedside of Sister Brown, I had a revelation of the inner life of Rev. John C. Freener (later my Bishop) that I have greatly enjoyed. I had known him since childhood, and to me and many others there was an apparent austerity of manner that repelled. After I became a minister, Sister Brown was living in New Orleans, and was nearing Beulah Land. She sent me an urgent message to make her a visit, and sing some old familiar religious songs like "The Sun Bright Clime," and "You may have all the world, but give me Jesus," etc. While I was singing, Pastor Keener entered the room and at once joined in with me, and, to my great surprise, sang many old-time hymns—some new to me. It is needless to say that the Holy Ghost honored that meeting by pouring out a blessing upon each and all; and ever after I entertained a clearer view of the religious nature of that remarkable man. In later days I became his pastor at Ocean Springs for several years, when, as Bishop, he sojournd there in his summer home.

One of the rules of the Poydras and Carondelet Street Churches was to have the Sunday school, on adjournment, march up-stairs into the galleries, under the guidance of the superintendent and teachers, and there listen to the pastor's 11 o'clock a.m. sermon—a custom most wholesome, but not provided for the twentieth century generation—a sad oversight. One of the teachers of the Felicity Street Sunday School was named Peter Willard, who, outside of Sunday school, did a helpful work for civic righteousness in his captaincy in the temperance work among the boys and young men—establishing lodges tributary to the Sons of Temperance. Rev. J. W. Harmon, the father of Revs. N. B. and Gus Harmon of the Mississippi Conference, did a grand work for temperance also by the publication of the Weekly Southern Organ, devoted to the promulgation of total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors; and, perhaps, it may be news to many of this generation to know that the city was so stirred that a mayor was elected on the temperance ticket. Dr. Harmon was a good organizer, an excellent pulpit orator and stump speaker, a fearless fighter, and in spite of threats of bodily harm and the destruction of his printing plant, he kept up a weekly bombardment of the saloon and his advocacy of total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors, until a noble man, Girard Stith, was placed in the mayoralty—and, just think of it, he a printer, connected with the plant of the Daily Picayune (printers in those days were not conspicuous for total abstinence). As a little boy, I marched in a torchlight procession, just prior to election day, carrying a banner on which was a bunch of grapes and a sheaf of wheat, with this inscription underneath: "If you eat us, we are food; if you drink us, we are poison."

Rev. J. D. Parker, a local preacher, spent six days out of seven, on his feet all day, as salesman for the D. H. Holmes Dry Goods Company, and on Sunday mornings taught a class in the Carondelet Sunday School. He would then stay for the 11 o'clock service, go home for dinner; then, alone, or with his wife, he would go up into the suburbs of Carrollton, walk the streets distributing tracts, Sunday School Visitors and Advocates, and when the way opened he would stop in the homes of the people, hold religious converse and prayer with the parents, and invite the children to attend afternoon Sunday school in some hired room. In time the Cadiz Street Methodist Church was a development of this man's Christian labors, and for a number of years did splendid work (I being the last pastor by special transfer for the year 1875), until Rayne Memorial was finished, a church without a membership, when the quarterly conference of Cadiz Street agreed to transfer its membership as a nucleus for building up an organization there. Brother Parker had now come to a time when it appeared an impossibility, owing to old age, for him to do any further missionary work, but "faithful unto death" was the command of his Lord; so, without neglect of his duties as a teacher in Rayne Memorial Sunday School, he started out again, doubtless saying, "One more church edifice, dear Lord, for New Orleans Methodism, and I then will step aside and give younger men a chance." Over towards the Mississippi river, and nearer Carrollton, he began his soul-hunting, taking the children to a hired room, until later a modest church edifice was established that in time has been replaced by a more imposing structure called "Parker Memorial," which, in December, 1911, was honored by a session of the Louisiana Conference, Bishop Mouzon presiding. Of course, there was a year (1895), a month, week, day, and hour, when he heard the voice, Well done, good and faithful servant; come up higher, and he obeyed. It became my privilege to preside at the grave's mouth, and tenderly to commit the body, "earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust," until the resurrection day. By his special request, we laid the body to rest in the cemetery at Ocean Springs, Miss. May some Elisha catch up the mantle of this ascended Elijah, and seek as he did to save the neglected souls, for whom no man cares, in the city of New Orleans.

THE BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: The following communication is directed to the preachers, official members, and the laymen of the Baton Rouge District. As you all know, I am not wont to rush into print, but, as this is my fourth year on the Baton Rouge District, I am exceedingly anxious that it shall be the very best year during my incumbency. Last year we were specially blessed in our spiritual work and the number of accessions on profession of faith, for which we are very grateful.

First of all, I desire to announce that our District Conference will convene at Amite City on May 22, and continue through the following Sunday. Amite City is centrally located and is easily accessible from all points in the District, and we are expecting a large attendance and a profitable Conference. Amite City is noted for its hospitality, and I sincerely trust that every pastoral charge will have a lay representation present. I am doing my best to obtain the presence of a Bishop.

I have nearly completed my first round. I find that the preachers have received this year nearly forty per cent less than they had at this date last year. Some charges have fallen more than fifty per cent behind this year. Brethren, this thing ought not to be, and I am kindly requesting the various preachers who are so far behind in their receipts to read this letter in their congregations as coming from me. Prices have not diminished appreciably during the past three months. The salaries are as a rule low at best, and when they are cut forty or fifty per cent, it is a small stipend, indeed, that is allotted to the preacher and his family. Of course, I am aware of the hard times and the incessant rains and the general stagnation of business, but the Lord's work and the support of the ministry ought not to be made a matter of secondary consideration. No preacher can face an audience on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock unencumbered, in the presence of half a dozen persons who have favored him on the previous week with a statement "to please remit!"

I am making a special appeal to the stewards of the district, who have not been diligent in their stewardship, to come to the relief of their respective pastors in the matter of ministerial support. The steward's position with reference to his pastor is a unique one. In one sense, he stands for the preacher's living or between the preacher and his living. One brother has this to say: "Brother A. could collect money for my support, if he would try, but he has not paid his own quarterage; hence, his hands are tied." The steward is thrice-armed who has personally discharged his own financial obligation to his preacher; he is conscious of duty performed, is not embarrassed because of personal reasons, and can boldly assert the claims of his preacher, fortified with the statement that he has met his own financial obligations. Sometimes the brethren do not think.

One brother, during the past quarter, informs me that in visiting a monthly appointment he walked in all sixteen miles, and did not receive money enough to pay railroad fare. He received during the entire trip from the entire congregation the sum of fifty cents, and that was paid in by a widow lady.

The writer of this article has frequently, in his pastoral life, been addressed by his brethren in the following language: "If you get in need of anything, let me hear from you, and I will try to help you out." Now, no preacher cares to go to a brother and confess that he is needy. The support of the Gospel is a duty and an obligation, and not a charity in the ordinary sense of the word.

Now, brethren, there are several noble boards of stewards within the bounds of the Baton Rouge District, and there are parts of other boards of stewards who are both noble and generous, and these lines are not intended as a reproach against them; and I am sure that those who are faithful will endorse what I have written. The intention of the above lines is to stir up and awaken the energy of those who do not present the claims for ministerial support to the laymen of the Church.

To the laymen of the Church, I desire to make an appeal that they rally to the support of their pastors. The butcher's bill and the grocer's bill and the ice bill and the milliner's bill and the other bills are put off until the end of the quarter, and then carried over to the end of the year for settlement, in which event, if they are not paid on or before a certain date, they are prescribed by Methodist law. Now, a great many of the people tell the elder what kind of a preacher they want—that he must not be too old, or too young, or too hard, or too soft, or too fat, or too lean; so the elder takes the liberty of telling the people what kind of stewards and laymen the preachers want.

Yours fraternally,

C. C. MILLER,

Presiding Elder of Baton Rouge District.

NOTES FROM THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

I left home on the 1st day of January to begin my first round on the District; I went first into the regions beyond, that were added to it at the last Conference. Of the weather during this first round, it is not necessary for me to speak, for I have no doubt that enough, seemly and unseemly, has been said upon that subject. On the first leg of this round I was out thirteen days, traveled 670 miles, collected $15 and spent $14.65 for expenses. Then I made one or two short trips so as to be at home to vote, and then set out upon a trip that took me twenty-two days from home. The miles traveled on this round foot up 2831, and the larger portion included in my territory has not yet been seen. So if I pursue my usual custom of visiting every preaching place in the District, I will rival in mileage the candidate for the Republican nomination. In the interim between the first and second round, I have planned a tour of inspection in the twilight zone, the territory between me and the other elders, which, by virtue of its situation, just outside the bounds of any district, has received no definite care or study. To the investigation of this territory I have invited the elder of each district that touches mine, and jointly I expect to make a close survey of it in all directions. My first scouting trip will be to look out for new openings for work in the territory that is recognized as being in the Alexandria District—points that at a distance look promising. These I will see for myself, and if there is room for us, will try to make the way plain for our Church.

Every charge has started out hopefully for the year. Since Conference was held, two places, Jena and Opelousas, have taken full time. This will mean another work as soon as I secure the proper man for it. So far, owing to the untoward conditions of weather and roads, the preachers generally have been able to fill only their ordinary appointments, if that; so that, barring two exceptions, nothing notable has occurred. These exceptions are Alexandria and Jena. Dr. Werlein has begun well at Alexandria and reported 32 accessions at his first quarterly Conference. He is impressing himself upon the place, and his congregations and Sunday schools are improving.

At Jena, Brother Kleinschmidt, assisted by Brother Turner, our Conference Evangelist, has had a good meeting that resulted in the accession of about 25 members to our Church.

Other meetings are being planned and we are looking forward with faith in the Head of the Church to a great work being done in the District this year by the people called Methodists, led as they are by a band of faithful, earnest, consecrated preachers.

The Preachers' Missionary Institute will be held in Lecompte, April 2-3. To this we not only urge the preachers to come, but also all the laymen who are so minded. The good people of the town will provide the entertainment, and the men on the program are expected to provide the instruction; so we hope to have there the necessities of any successful gathering, entertainment and instruction. Come and receive both.

The death of Brother George Jackson was a grief to many in this section, as he has been with us for years, and was loved by all.

Brother Foster and our church at DeRidder have suffered a loss in the passing away of Brother C. A. Paxson, president of his Board of Stewards, and a wise and faithful counsellor. The life of such a man is a rich inheritance for any community. But while "God buries the workers, he carries on the work," and Bro. Tooke, a young man of fine parts, has succeeded Brother Paxson as president of the Board.

BRISCOE CARTER, P. E.

A PRESIDING ELDERS' MEETING.

On call of Rev. Briscoe Carter, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference met in Alexandria, Feb. 28th, to confer as to the general work of the Conference. All were present except Rev. R. W. Tucker.

One of the important results of this meeting is the calendar of district conferences which appears elsewhere in this paper, arranged so as not to conflict with the meeting of the Seashore Divinity School, nor with each other. A number of matters were earnestly and prayerfully discussed, and it was decided to call attention through the Advocate to some of these things.

First, as to the plan of the Committee on Evangelism appointed by the Board of Missions, we urge the pastors throughout the State to volunteer their services for at least one revival meeting in the interest of the greatly needed revival, and also to supplement the evangelistic fund.

Second, as to Children's Day, we call the attention of pastors and superintendents to the fact that it is contrary to the Discipline to use the Children's Day collection for any other purpose than that designated, and we urge every Sunday School to observe this day and take the collection, a large part of which goes to our Sunday School Missionary Fund.

Third, as to the assessment made by the General Board of Education, called "Educational Extension," we call attention to the fact that in many cases, the two educational collections were confused in the making of reports, and to the necessity that the General Assessment be kept separate, according to the resolution of the Conference.

Fourth, as to the assessment made by the Conference for the Orphanage, there seems to have been some misunderstanding, though it is distinctly stated in the report of the Orphanage Board in the Minutes, that all amounts raised for the Orphanage on Easter Sunday or Work Day or otherwise, are to be credited on this assessment.

The subject of redistricting the Conference was discussed, and three committees, of two each, were requested to prepare a plan looking finally to the best division of the territory.

JUDGE NOT.

Judge not; the working of his brain
And of his heart thou canst not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
In God's pure light may only be
A scar, brought from some well-won field,
Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air, that frets thy sight
May be a token that below
The soul has closed its deadly fight
With some internal fiery foe,
Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace,
And cast thee shuddering on thy face.

The fall thou darest to despise—
May be the angel's slackened hand
Has suffered it, that he may rise
And take a firmer, surer stand;
Or, trusting less to earthly things,
May henceforth learn to use his wings.

And judge none lost; but wait and see,
With hopeful pity, not disdain;
The depth of the abyss may be
The measure of the height of pain
And love and glory that may raise
This soul to God in after days!

THE MILLIONAIRE GENTLEMAN.

"Let me hear you say that again! I'll show you whether I'm a gentleman or not!"
"How?"

The boys started in great surprise. The old soldier who had uttered the quiet word had come upon the boys on their return from school, but they were shouting in such angry tones that they heard nothing except their own voices. There was a funny quarrel between Edwin Brandon and Cecil Hayes. They explained it in tones loud enough to be heard in the adjoining county to Major Drury as he walked on with them.

The Major was a visitor in their neighborhood, and the object of much interest and speculation among the boys. They had heard stories from certain kinsfolk of his about his life as a Confederate soldier, and there was not a boy in the neighborhood who was not on tiptoe to get some of those stories from his own lips. But to-day they were to hear a story of a different kind.

"How did you say you were going to prove yourself a gentleman, my boy?"

Edwin's cause of complaint somehow dwindled under the glance of those merry, kindly old eyes.

"What ought a fellow to do when another says he isn't?" the boy asked.

The old Confederate's face brightened. "I'll tell you," he said, "how a man I knew proved himself a gentleman in about three minutes and a half."

The boys were all attention. This was not to be a war story apparently; but the old soldier's voice had a fine ring to it.

"It was just after the war, boys, and I had been sent North on business to look after some affairs connected with re-establishing express lines. I had a letter of introduction to a rich man in the city, and when I presented it he asked me to dine with him.

I had no idea that he was asking me to anything but a family dinner, and I went in the same suit of clothes that I had traveled in; but if I had been told I was to meet the Prince of Wales I could have done nothing else, for it was the only suit of clothes I had in the world. My Confederate gray was hanging in rags when I got home from Appomattox, and my mother went to her room and took out a web of home-made woolen jeans, cut out a suit of clothes, and made them for me herself.

"The wool had been taken from the backs of our sheep, carded, spun and woven in the farmhouse, and colored in the plantation dye-pot. Can you imagine how the young rustic looked when he rang the door-bell of the stylish city mansion, and was ushered in by a serving man in spotless black, low-cut vest and spike-tailed coat?"

"I saw at once that it was a dinner party; but my business had to be attended to, and I had to see the thing through. It struck me as a little odd that the host was not present to receive me, but the cordiality of his wife left me nothing to wish for, and if her eyes rested for a single instant on my home-made jeans, I could not detect it.

In about three minutes and a half the master of the house stepped into the room, and gave me the heartiest welcome a man could ask.

"Boys, he had on a business suit of brown tweeds! The ladies' shoulders were gleaming white above their evening dresses, and the men all looked like undertakers in their solemn black; but my host had somehow caught sight of me as I ran up his steps, and had made up his mind that the young Confederate should not be the only man in working-clothes! I doubt if he had ever made as rapid a toilet before in his life!"

"There were all kind and friendly to me, and made me talk about my great captains, Lee and Jackson and Stuart, and the rest. But I give you my word, every time I looked at that brown coat at the end of the table, something like a sob gripped me at the throat, and I wanted to speak out and say that there wasn't a finer gentleman in Dixie than this Yankee millionaire!"—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

SAVING MOTHER STEPS.

There are so many steps for mother to take every day. She is kept busy, trotting about from morning till night. Her work is unending! Does it ever occur to John or Mary to save mother steps, by offering to run up or downstairs for her, to fetch some needed article?

A helping hand in the kitchen is always acceptable. Willing feet to run errands will not be refused. Mother's hands and feet get tired, and she is ready and glad to make use of service proffered by her boy or girl. Such service is sweet to her, and how happy it will make you who offer it!

Mother would be less weary, too, at night, if she did not have to repeat things so often! Prompt obedience would save her voice as willing errands her feet.

One way of serving Jesus is to serve mother. The Savior was obedient to his parents and did their bidding. He had nothing to regret when recalling his boyhood days. What a comfort it will be to look back upon your childhood days and to feel that you did your duty by mother! It is a satisfaction that brings with it a sense of peace and joy! Who that has read the book "Laddie," can forget the son's grief and regret for having been ashamed of his mother and of having refused to let her share his home—when he found her dying in a London hospital. One wonders if he saved her any steps when a boy.

All honor is due to your mother, boys and girls! Save her all you can and thus lengthen her days. The world holds no other like her. Remember that "honor thy father and mother" is the first commandment with promise!—Eliza K. Von Bergen, in Christian Intelligencer.

THE LITTLE HANDLES.

Bennie had been to kindergarten. It was his first day there, and when he came home mamma was anxious to know what he had learned.

"What did you learn to-day, my dear?" she asked.

"'Bout little handles," Bennie said quickly.

"Little handles," mamma said, in surprise.

"Yes, ma'am; our teacher told us we must never forget our little handles."

But mamma did not understand. She had been careful to give Bennie his pencils, his sponge, his book and his lunch when he started to school, but she had no idea that he needed anything like little handles.

"You didn't have any," she said.

"Oh, yes, ma'am!" cried the boy. "I used them every time."

Then Bennie couldn't help feeling just a little bit proud to think that he knew something that mamma did not.

"You see, mamma," he went on, "it isn't something to carry; it's something to say, like 'Please,' and 'Thank you,' and 'Ma'am,' and 'Good morning,' and 'Good afternoon,' and things like that. Our teacher calls them little handles, and says we must always use them. I knew them before, of course, but now I'll be more likely to remember them."

And although Bennie does forget the "little handles" sometimes, he is nearly always a polite boy, and people like to have him in their company.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

Editorial.

NOT A VALID GROUND OF COMPLAINT.

The Natchez Daily Democrat of Feb. 24 contained an interesting discussion participated in by the editor of that journal and the pastor of our Jefferson Street Church in that city, the Rev. H. B. Watkins. It was provoked by a prior utterance of the editor in which he found fault with the State Legislature for strengthening the prohibition laws of the commonwealth and enacting stricter regulations for the government of pool rooms. The burden of his complaint was that such legislation is an unjustifiable abridgment of the liberties of the people. To this editorial, Brother Watkins made a vigorous reply, in which he showed that the very existence of society demands that the individual shall surrender such privileges as the public good may require, and that no person can legitimately insist upon holding on to customs and practices that imperil the safety of others. In fact, as we see it, the answer made by our gifted young pastor at Natchez was complete and left nothing to be desired.

The truth is, we confess to some surprise that even an advocate of the open saloon should in contending for his cause revamp this antiquated and worn-out plea that prohibition invades the personal rights of men. This contention does not even rise to the plane of respectable sophistry. Of course, such legislation does restrict action in certain directions, but so do practically all the statutes of the State. Absolute freedom to do what one pleases can belong to no individual who does not live in a world entirely alone. Individual rights must ever be subordinate to the rights of society. This is the basal principle which underlies all governments and civilizations. When one favors any regulation of the saloon business at all, even such as requiring a license to be taken out and paid for, he has declared for a restriction of so-called personal rights, and having surrendered the principle involved, he is estopped by every rule of logic from setting up such a plea, if a majority of the people deem it wise to impose still further restraints. That the State has a moral and constitutional right to suppress the sale of intoxicants is not a debatable question. The highest courts in the land have spoken on this point in language that could not have been more positive and explicit.

The only ground left for the anti-prohibitionists to make a fight upon is that of expediency; they must show to justify their position that less harm comes to the body politic under the saloon regime than when it is done away with. It is not enough to show that in spite of prohibition the aggregate amount of intoxicating liquors consumed in the United States is increasing—that is also true in countries where the reign of the dramshop is uninterrupted; let them prove, if they can, that more intoxicants are used in the territory where prohibition has lately come into force than in the years immediately preceding when the licensed whiskey traffic was in operation. If prohibition promoted the consumption of alcoholic beverages it would have the hearty support of every brewer, distiller, and wholesale liquor dealer beneath the American flag. No matter what may seem to be proven by manipulated figures, the activity of these gentlemen in opposing it bears eloquent testimony as to what the influence of prohibition tends to do.

Even the old argument that the suppression of the dramshop is injurious to business has about lost its power to conjure. The actual tests that have been made, have disproved and discredited it. A gentleman of high standing in a city where prohibition was in vogue a couple of years ago, but which now has saloons, of his own accord, wrote us a short time since as follows: "We have a horrible condition here under the open saloon. I am told that it is far worse than when there was open violation of the prohibition law. I never saw so much drunkenness anywhere. Our merchants are advertising heavily, and are not doing business commensurate with their advertising or the amount that they should do. One of the most enterprising men here told me that the explanation of this dullness is to be found in the amount of money being sent away every month for liquor. Two thousand dollars a day are going away to brewers and distillers in other States. I hope to see prohibition return in the interest of business."

We feel somewhat sorry for the few editors in Mississippi who are sighing for the good old days of the barroom, when "likers" could be had on any corner. The prospect is not encouraging for them. That time, to which they look longingly, will not soon return, if it ever does. The liberties of the people are being increasingly conspired against, and we fear that their patriotic hearts are destined to become still more troubled. We recommend that they take in hand and straighten out at once Mississippi's brilliant United States Senator, John Sharp Williams, who has been so forgetful of the personal rights of his fellow-citizens as to write the following letter to the Rev. W. M. McRory, pastor of the Methodist Church at Rocky Springs, Miss. (Claiborne County), in reply to a petition sent him urging the passage of the Kenyon-Sheppard Bill, now pending in Congress:

"Your letter of the 13th and the petition which you sent are both at hand. I shall present the petition to the Senate in accordance with your request. Being a 'State's Rights' man, I believe that the Federal Government in exercising its power to regulate interstate commerce, ought not to hock the States in the enforcement of their police regulations, but on the contrary ought to help them by not permitting liquor, or anything else which is not permitted to be sold within a State to be shipped into it by the instrumentality of interstate commerce. Believing this, I shall vote for the passage of the Kenyon-Sheppard bill.

"I am with every expression of regard,
"Very truly yours,
"JOHN S. WILLIAMS."

A GREAT RESPONSIBILITY.

We received a letter from a prominent young minister a few days since, in which reference was made to a leading citizen whose life has recently been in jeopardy and who is not a Christian. He said: "Realizing how awful it must be for one to live and die without God, and knowing that I am Christ's representative in the community, I could not but feel that, had he passed away, I would have known that I had not done all that I might for him. Pray for me, that I may be used of God to lead him and others to the Master ere long." These words are well worth reflecting upon. A minister's position is one of tremendous responsibility. He is a debtor to all men—there is no person for whom he should not be deeply concerned. In the red furrows of every human heart within his reach, he should seek to sow the precious seeds of the kingdom. There is no time to lose. Swifter than the eagle's flight, time is speeding away. Those who are here to-day, may be gone to-morrow. We must make the most of every passing opportunity, if we would stand before our Lord at last, free from the blood of all men. Nor is this obligation the minister's alone. It rests also upon every Christian. No disciple of Jesus can evade it. May God help us to be alert, active, and faithful!

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We regret to learn that Mr. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., was confined to his room several days last week by an attack of illness.

Dr. I. W. Cooper preached the Commencement sermon at Independence, La., last Sunday, greatly pleasing the large audience assembled to hear him.

Rev. G. W. Eichelberger, secretary of the Mississippi Anti-Saloon League, spent last Sabbath in the city in the interest of temperance work in Louisiana.

Rev. A. J. Miller, one of the best known Baptist ministers in Mississippi, died at Leland on March 11. His remains were carried to Hazlehurst, Miss., for interment.

The Parker Memorial Church, of New Orleans, was favored last Sunday morning with a strong message by Dr. J. M. Henry, the efficient presiding elder of the district. A large congregation was present.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy has been transferred from Webb City, in the Southwest Missouri Conference, to Louisiana, and stationed at the First Methodist Church of Monroe. Rev. C. C. Seelman will go to Webb City.

Rev. M. L. Burton, of Gulfport, Miss., who neglects no interest of the Church, sent us last week a second list of subscribers to the Conference organ, accompanied by his good wishes. We are grateful to this capable pastor for the service thus rendered.

We are indebted to the following brethren for subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. A. L. Davenport, Walnut, Miss.; Rev. Thos. L. Porter, Hickory Flat, Miss.; Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Carriere, Miss.

Rev. W. W. Nelson, of Moscow, Miss., writes: "The Lord is blessing us on this charge, and we are expecting great things of him during the year." Brother Nelson's letter brought us instructions to send the Advocate to some of his members.

We have received a nice list of subscribers from Pleasant Hill, Miss., sent by Rev. A. M. Bennett, our pastor at that place. We assure Brother Bennett of our appreciation of his good work, and we pray God's blessings upon him and his people.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Clarksdale, Miss., will begin a protracted meeting in his church in that city on March 17. He will have with him to do the preaching Dr. S. A. Steel, which means that his people will hear a series of sermons of a very high order.

Rev. J. B. King, the faithful pastor of the Deasonville charge (Mississippi Conference) has our hearty thanks for a list of eight subscriptions to the Advocate. We trust that as our paper enters these homes weekly it will carry with it a spiritual blessing.

Bishop W. B. Murrah occupied the pulpit of the Capitol Street Church of Jackson, Miss., last Sunday, and preached to the edification of the large congregation that assembled to hear him. It is reported that he will preach again for this flock on Easter Sunday.

Miss Josephine Lynch, of La Porte, Indiana, has been chosen secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association of New Orleans, and is expected to take charge at once. She has been preparing for her work by taking a post-graduate course at Evanston, Ill.

At the Louisiana Avenue Church, New Orleans, last Sunday evening, Rev. C. C. Seelman preached impressively from the text, "I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus." The sermon at the morning hour was by the pastor, and was on the "Temptation of Christ."

Principal Linfield, of the Biloxi (Miss.) Public School, was here last week, with a committee, to inspect some of the more modern of the New Orleans' Public School buildings. It is the purpose of these gentlemen to improve the school facilities of their beautiful little city.

Brothers Bachman and Bradley have lately been looking after our circulation in Winona, Miss., with a pleasing outcome. We appreciate the kindness of these brethren, as well as the patronage given us in this prosperous town, where we have a virile and active Methodism.

Rev. A. W. Hoffpauir, of Rayne, La., favored our office with a visit last Monday. He brought his wife to the Touro Infirmary, where she is to undergo an operation. Let prayer be made that God may have this elect lady in his gracious keeping while she is passing through this ordeal.

Brother T. L. Oakes, our stirring pastor on the Poplar Creek Circuit, Durant District, has been remembering the Conference organ in his rounds, with gratifying results. He serves a good people.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey sent us last week several subscribers from Water Valley, Miss. Our information is that he has made a fine impression upon the general public, as well as upon his own people, in that city.

Miss E. Murry, the district secretary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Corinth District, requests us to state that the annual meeting of the Conference will not be held at Brooksville, Miss., on June 1-5, as was announced in a recent issue of the Advocate, but at Booneville, Miss.

Rev. F. L. Applewhite, of Benton, Miss., informs us of the marriage of Mr. J. R. Horne, of Jackson, Miss., and Miss Lillian A. Shipp, which took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Shipp, near Zeiglerville, Miss., on Feb. 27. We congratulate the contracting parties, and wish them much happiness.

Judge and Mrs. Percy Bell, of Greenville, Miss., have presented our First Church in that city with a handsome individual communion service. An appropriate resolution of thanks, adopted by the members of this choice flock, appears elsewhere in this issue. Judge Bell is a young lawyer of remarkable erudition and of a steadily growing practice.

We acknowledge the reception of an invitation from Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Ahrens, of New Orleans, to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Virginia Elise, to Mr. Theodore Cornelius Wilder, at the Louisiana Avenue Church, this city, on Wednesday evening, March 20, at 8 o'clock. We extend in advance congratulations and best wishes.

In a personal note to the editor, written a few days since from Warsaw, Ky., Rev. W. G. Harbin says: "My meetings in this section have been unusually successful, despite the weather and other adverse conditions." We are pleased, though not surprised, to hear that good results have been attending Brother Harbin's labors. He has unusual gifts as a revivalist.

Our energetic friend, Rev. J. H. Ingram, has forwarded us a list of sixteen subscribers from Schlater, Miss., and other points. The paper will now find its way into the home of every official in this excellent charge. This good service did not in the least surprise us. No interest of the Church is allowed to suffer where this wide-awake pastor is in control of affairs.

Dr. C. F. Evans, who was formerly one of its pastors, delivered an interesting discourse at the Rayne Memorial Methodist Church, of this city, last Sunday at 11 o'clock, a.m., using as a text James i, 12. He was given an attentive hearing and a cordial reception by his old friends and acquaintances. Dr. Evans is now on the honor roll of the Kentucky Conference, and resides at Lexington.

A recent issue of the Times-Democrat contained the following statement: "The friends of Edward McGehee College, at Woodville, Miss., will regret to learn that the property is to be sold to satisfy a debt secured by a deed in trust on its buildings and lands. This old Wilkinson County landmark may be bought in by the town to be used hereafter as a public school. The sale is scheduled to take place on March 11."

It pleases us to know that hereafter the Advocate will find its way into a number of additional homes in the cultured little city of Columbia, Miss., where Rev. B. F. Lewis is the beloved pastor. Brother Lewis has brought us under obligations to him in more ways than one: he not only represents the paper faithfully in his field of work, but also furnishes us from time to time Sunday school notes, which are much appreciated by our readers.

As is usual with him, Rev. O. L. Savage is bringing things to pass on the Belzoni charge (North-Mississippi). He has had 35 additions since Conference, has secured a lot and raised some money for a new church at Swiftown, and has raised $75 for the parsonage. The congregations are reported as good, and the general outlook is very bright. Brother Savage is keeping up his record of looking well after the interests of the Advocate.

Rev. L. L. Roberts, our worthy pastor at Flora, Miss., writes as follows: "I am beginning my fourth year in this charge, and the prospects are good for the best year of the four. Our first quarterly conference was held Feb. 27, with gratifying reports. Our people very much appreciate the Advocate." Brother Roberts' letter greatly pleased the publisher, as it contained thirteen renewals and three new subscriptions, and a check to correspond.

Rev. J. T. McVey, of Meadville, Miss., remembered us a few days since by sending in five renewals and one subscription. We appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ.

Brother McVey states that he was given a cordial reception by the people, who have supplied him with fresh meat for his table and have also given him other presents. He has had some additions to the church, and thinks that the indications point to a good year.

Bishop E. E. Hoss will preach the Commencement sermon at Millsaps College on Sunday, June 9, and at the evening hour of the same day will deliver the annual sermon before the Y. M. C. A. of that institution. The annual literary address will be delivered by Rev. William Hayne Leavell, D.D., of Carrollton, Miss.

We are indebted to Miss Mollie Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., for a list of twelve renewals from that goodly town. She kindly adds: "I wish I could place our church paper in every Methodist home in the community. We have taken it so long that we look forward to its coming as we would that of some dear friend." We have a high appreciation of such loyalty to the Conference organ and such commendable activity to promote its success.

In forwarding quite a number of subscriptions from his charge, Rev. W. F. Rogers, of West, Miss., adds: "Everything is moving along nicely with us. I hope to secure some new subscribers to the Advocate. It ought to enter every Methodist home in our patronizing territory. Those who take it on my charge are delighted with it; they say it is better than it ever was." It is needless to assure Brother Rogers that we are grateful for the assistance that he is giving us.

There is talk of active litigation over the Centenary College property at Jackson, La., in the near future. The Trustees of the old college transferred the property to the new college at Shreveport, but it is contended that the State has some claim upon it. A dispatch from Clinton, La., to the Times-Democrat on the 10th inst., stated that Mr. Pleasant, the Assistant Attorney General, was there examining the records, and that some hope of an amicable adjustment is entertained.

Rev. W. A. Bowlin sends encouraging news from the North Carrollton Circuit (Winona District), where he is held in high esteem by his parishioners. He says: "My work is in good shape, and is moving on finely. The salary of the pastor has been advanced, in spite of the boll weevil scare." Brother Bowlin deserves good treatment, and we are pleased to know that his people are disposed to take good care of him. We are indebted to him for several names to be carried on our subscription files.

Mr. J. W. Mayfield, of New Orleans, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call last week and renewed his subscription. He has been a subscriber since 1870, and his father before him took the paper. Brother Mayfield formerly resided in North Louisiana, but has been living in this city for about twenty years. He is a Confederate veteran and a traveling man. We were pleased to grasp the hand of this long-time friend of the organ of Louisiana and Mississippi Methodism, and we trust that he will favor us with his genial presence again.

Rev. W. M. Young has made a fine beginning on the Amory and Nettleton charge, North Mississippi Conference. He has received already 32 members by certificate, his congregations are large, and his prayer meetings are growing in interest, having reached the fifty mark. Presiding Elder Cunningham was at Amory on Sunday, March 3, and, though the weather was inclement, preached two good sermons to two good audiences. We thank Brother Young for 2 renewals and 4 subscribers, sent in last week at $1.50 each. The Advocate counts him one of its best friends.

Rev. T. J. Halfacre, of Kilmichael, Miss., reports as follows from that desirable charge: "We are moving along pleasantly, and are expecting a good year. We are praying for a great revival. Our people are much pleased with the new presiding elder, Rev. B. P. Jacob. Kilmichael is to entertain the Winona District Conference in the spring, and we are looking forward to the occasion with anticipation of much pleasure and profit from having the brethren among us." Brother Halfacre has our hearty thanks for taking care of the interests of the Advocate, and for a cordial invitation to attend the District Conference. If possible, we shall be on hand.

Under date of March 1, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, our pastor at Tunica, Miss., writes: "Our first quarterly conference included the third Sunday in February. Our presiding elder, Brother Woollard, was with us. He preached two good sermons, and did his work well, as usual. My charge paid nearly one-fourth of the amount due the pastor and presiding elder. I am now sick in bed with septic fever. I have been confined to my bed for about ten days, and most of the time for the past three weeks. This has interfered some with my work. Brother T. W. Dye has agreed to fill my appointments until I am able to do so."

The assessment for the pastor at Greenville, Miss., has been advanced to $1,800, an increase of $300 over last year. Rev. W. S. Lagrone, who is in charge of this important pastorate, is in good favor with his people. A new feature of the work is a fine Boys' Club. A revival meeting will begin on March 24, Rev. Joe Ramsey, of Tennessee, having been engaged to conduct the services.

Rev. Gustavus A. Morgan, reports as follows from his work at Provencal, La.: "Our Sunday school has taken on new life. We have recently organized a Senior Epworth League. We are also planning for a revival of religion at every church on the charge. I expect to send you some subscribers soon." We are gratified to know that success is crowning the labors of this active itinerant.

Rev. W. W. Hopper has been changed from Oak Ridge, Miss., to Woodville, Miss., to succeed Rev. E. W. Barrington who asked to be relieved of the work of the pastorate at the latter place. Of this appointment, Brother Hopper says: "This is a fine work and a choice, cultured people, in an old, historic town and community. I am pleased with the start we have made here; the people are rallying around me and giving me their co-operation."

Rev. J. W. Rogers, formerly a member of the North Mississippi Conference, but who is now stationed at Madill, Okla., is giving his congregation a series of sermons, entitled, "Old Testament Scenes," during the month of March. The subjects to be discussed under this general head are as follows: "The Mountain of the Giants," "The Eagle Stirring Up Her Nest," "The Burning Bush," "The Secret of a King's Failure," and "Choose Ye." Brother Rogers seems to be carrying the work forward in his present charge.

Under date of the 9th inst., Rev. C. A. Northington, who is pastor of the Corinth Circuit (North Mississippi), says: "In my write-up of this charge in your issue of last week, you only gave us credit for $40 spent on our parsonage, and you represented the First Methodist Church of Corinth as giving $25 of that. This was an error. We raised $40 exclusive of their $25 donation, and have since increased the amount to $50." We are glad to give this statement, which corrects our unintentional mistake, a place in our columns.

Dr. H. B. Johnston, the accomplished presiding elder of the Jackson (Tenn.) District, has recently issued a ringing appeal for full collections to the Methodists within the territory over which he has supervision. He rightly takes the position that our charges are not over-assessed, but that they are abundantly able to finance the various enterprises of the Church if they only will. We like Dr. Johnston's courageous and pointed way of exhorting the people to exercise a larger liberality. Too many of our preachers approach this subject in an apologetic manner.

Miss M. Doty, the Matron of the Old Ladies' Home at Jackson, Miss., writes to the editor as follows: "The old ladies at the Home highly appreciate the Advocate, which is being sent complimentary. We wish you would thank the party that made possible its weekly visits. You are giving us such an interesting paper. Many good wishes for you in this great work. May the time soon come when the Advocate will find its way into every Methodist home in the State!" The ladies of the Home are indebted to our Publisher, Brother Chalmers, for the weekly visits of the Methodist organ of Louisiana and Mississippi.

In sending in his list of appointments for his second round, Rev. J. H. Mitchell, the working presiding elder of the Corinth District, says: "I have made my first round and have not missed a Conference. All the pastors are in place, but some of them have not been able to do much because of the unusually severe weather. I feel hopeful for the district. We have bought in Corinth what I think is the best district parsonage in the Conference. We sold the one at Booneville, the church there having consented to the arrangement; so we have no friction. Please state that my address is now Corinth, Miss. I have been stressing the importance of our people taking the Advocate, and I shall continue to do so." We are grateful to Brother Mitchell for a cordial invitation to attend his District Conference at Rienzi, Miss.

REV. J. W. HONNOLL SERIOUSLY ILL.

Dear Brother Meek: I have just received a letter from Brother Honnoll, dictated to his daughter, telling me that he is very ill with septic fever, and I judge from the tone of it that he considers his condition quite serious. Will you not ask for the prayers of the Church in his behalf? He is ripe for the glory world, but we shall miss him so much if he goes away. How like a saint he writes! He is at his home in Memphis.

W. W. WOOLLARD.

March 8, 1912.

(We are pained, indeed, to hear of the illness of this faithful servant of the Master. A truer, manlier minister never served in the ranks of the itinerancy. We join Brother Woollard in the request that prayer be made throughout the Church for his recovery. Earth would be vastly poorer to many without Brother Honnoll.—Editor.)

Little DOROTHY MAY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Logan, was fatally burned Saturday, Feb. 10, 1912. She lived two and a half years to gladden the hearts of father and mother. The news of little Dorothy's death came as a shock to us all. The little darling was so sweet and precious to her loved ones. We are so sad on account of her untimely death. God saw fit to take her home with Himself. He only can comfort the brokenhearted father and mother. He only knows how they hated to give up their baby child, the flower of their home. No longer can those sweet kisses be felt on the cheeks of dear mother. God's will be done. Dear father and mother, you have the sweet assurance that she is at rest in heaven; for Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

AUNT LIZZIE.

Mrs. HARTHA MEADE IVES (nee Bonner), the daughter of John and Catherine Bonner, her father being a Methodist minister, was born in Orange County, N. C., March 9, 1828, and died at her grand-daughter's in Orange, Tex., Jan. 28, 1912. When she was quite young, her father moved from North Carolina to Georgia, where he reared a family of nine children. In Wilkes County, Ga., Aug. 13, 1850, she married Christopher Ives, and after a few years they moved to Louisiana, where he died some years ago. Since then she has made her home with Mrs. Bertha Oliver of Birmingham, the youngest of her ten children, five of whom survive her, E. Edwin Ives, Clarence A. Ives, Mrs. E. R. Coe, Mrs. Julia A. Cattle, and Mrs. Bertha Oliver. Sister Ives joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and was a faithful and devout Christian until the end. She never graduated from Sunday School, but was one of its most regular attendants, during the three years the writer was pastor at Woodlawn, and two of the most familiar figures and punctual attendants at the church, were Sister Ives and the writer's mother. She made the world brighter and happier, and her life was a blessing to her friends and those who knew her best. She left a good record for her children and friends and has entered upon her reward. Her body was carried to Ruston, La., and laid by the side of her husband, there to await the blessed resurrection.

J. C. PERSINGER.

On January 12, at Bounds, Calhoun County, Miss., Bro. S. G. BOUNDS departed this life in the hope of a glorious immortality. When the sad news of his death became known, no doubt a wave of sorrow swept over the entire community where he lived. He was born March 24, 1859, and, when stricken down with the disease which terminated in death, he was possessed of all the powers of vigorous manhood. He belonged to a family noted for integrity, uprightness, and good citizenship, and these sterling virtues were eminently conspicuous in his life and character. His course in life was marked by a high sense of honor from which he never decended; so nothing little or groveling ever came near his noble soul. In young manhood he went to Texas where, at Claiborne, Jan. 13, 1889 he was happily united in holy wedlock to Miss Lizzie Wylie, a most excellent lady who returned with him to the home of his youth to share the responsibilities of married life. Ten children were born to bless this union. Less than two years ago the devoted wife and mother was called to her reward. In 1900 he gave his heart to God and joined the M. E. Church, South, in which he triumphantly passed away. The circumstances attending his death were truly pathetic. Around his dying bed stood his weeping, motherless children, soon to be deprived of the care of a devoted father whose life was fast ebbing away, but he comforted them with the assurance that he was prepared to go. But how sad it is to know that his home-coming will be heard no more, but his influence will live to bless the world as the years roll away. That God may have the fatherless and motherless ones always in his holy keeping is my prayer.

R. M. DAVIS.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

The quarterly Conference of McHenry and Wiggins charge, Mississippi Conference, of which he had been a member for many years, in regular session, January 15th, 1912, appointed a committee to draw up suitable resolutions to be spread upon the minutes of the Conference, and the following resolutions are to be entered upon the minutes of the Conference:

Whereas, the Rev. Michael Cox has been for many years a devout local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a member of this Conference; and whereas, in the providence of our Heavenly Father, he has been called to his reward;

Therefore, he it resolved,

1. That it is the sense of this Conference that, in his going from us, we have lost one of our most devout, faithful and constant members.

2. That we do hereby express and put on record our appreciation of his long, useful life which was always an unflinching witness for Christ; and that we pray that his memory be an abiding influence among us for good.

3. That while we sympathize with the bereaved family in their great sorrow, we also rejoice with them in the assurance that he has received his reward and entered into his eternal rest.

Signed:

A. J. LEGGETT,
 J. F. BENNETT,
 Committee.

A RESOLUTION OF THANKS.

Whereas, Judge Percy Bell and his charming consort have graciously presented to the First Methodist Church a handsome Individual Communion Service, be it

Resolved, That the church is deeply sensible of its obligation, and that it has due appreciation of the professional success from which this act of munificence flows, and looks with confidence to its widening triumphs.

Resolved further, That the formal thanks of the congregation by which they are much-appreciated is hereby tendered to our distinguished and brilliant young friends for this manifestation of their devotion to our common Lord and his Church.

MY FIRST CIRCUIT.

In the fall of 1876 I, with thirteen others, was received into the North Mississippi Conference on trial. It was a great time with me, for I felt that I was entering upon my life work, and I realized to some extent the greatness of the responsibility upon which I was entering. The Conference was held in the town of Sardis, and Bishop Pierce was in charge. This was the first time I had ever seen a Methodist Bishop, and I looked upon him as a man above the common run of men, and as many young men of those days, I was afraid to enter his presence. I had never before attended an Annual Conference, and all the business done was of the greatest interest to me.

We were examined by the committee and all passed, and were received on trial. Some question as to my age came up, and it looked as if I would be turned down on that account; but some of the brethren who had known me took my part, and insisted on the Conference taking me on trial. I was the youngest one of the class, and having been received on trial, of course, I was soon to be read out to some charge. And sure enough the day came for the Bishop to announce the appointments, and I was assigned to the Shuqualak Circuit. I did not know where it was or what it was, but the plan of the circuit was soon handed to me, and I saw that I had a circuit with eight churches, and long distances to travel; but young preachers in those days were not looking for easy places or for a large salary. We were glad to get any place to work for the Master.

I was soon off for my new field of operation, and after a hard ride on horseback, I reached the town of Shuqualak, and was entertained in the home of Brother Simson, the only male member of the church living in the town. We talked much about the church, and the circuit that night, and Brother Simpson was very much discouraged with the outlook; a boy preacher and a small membership did not promise a very bright future to this old steward; but I was determined to do my best, so I started about it at once.

We soon had a church building under way (for we had none, but were preaching in the Baptist Church), and on the fourth Sunday in August, I preached the first sermon in the Methodist Church in Shuqualak. Brother B. S. Rayner, of precious memory, had started this work the year before.

The question of board soon came up, and I was bothered no little to find a place, some of the stewards said that all I would need would be a place to put my trunk and a few books, and that I would have to live among the people most of the time, for the work was large and would require most of my time going from house to house. But I found it hard to get even a place for my trunk, and the few books I had. However, after a long while, one good brother said that I might stay with him if I could put up with his fare. Of course, I could do that, for the fare was as good as could be found in the country anywhere.

"Gilderoy" (R. G. Porter) was my presiding elder. It was some time in February, 1877, when the first quarterly conference was held, and Brother Porter was on hand. He preached a great sermon on Jonah and the big fish. I shall never forget that sermon. I had never heard anything like it before, nor have I ever heard anything like it since, for no one could preach just like "Gilderoy." The stewards, after much talking, agreed to make the young preacher's salary $240. Well, that was not thought much about in those days, I think there were a few dollars paid in—not enough to give the young preacher the big head, or even buy a suit of cheap clothes. It was on this circuit that I met, and afterward married, my wife. She was a brave woman to marry a young preacher, getting only a small pittance in way of a salary. But it is often hard to understand why good women will do some things that they do.

This was a great year. We had revivals all over the circuit, and 73 were added to the church. And I was learning to preach, which meant much to the people who had to hear. I lost my horse that fall, which had cost me $175, and I received in all that year $146. But what of that? It was the Lord's work and somehow he would provide; and the only thing for me to do, as I thought, was to trust him and go ahead. At the last quarterly conference, the stewards told the presiding elder that they must have a man with more experience, forgetting that I had more than I had ever had before. They said that was the reason that they had not been able to raise that large salary, and, of course, the stewards had a right to speak out on that subject, though they had just had Brother Rayner who was a man of much experience, and they had not paid him any more than they had paid me. But you know how it is, or how it was then, and I have found after a long service as presiding elder that this is a fine way to get a preacher changed without hurting his feelings.

After all, this was a great year to me, and has been worth more to me than any other year of my life, for, as I have already said, it was there that I found the best wife that a Methodist preacher ever had—one who has been a helpmeet to me in all the varied experiences through which I have passed, and who still stands by me in all the work to which I am assigned.

FOR BAD BREATH

Simply dissolve one-half teaspoonful of Tyree's Antiseptic Powder (not poisonous) in one teacupful of warm water. Add two teaspoonfuls of Glycerine and stir. Spray the nose, gargle the throat and rinse the mouth morning, noon and night. Quickly removes disease and leaves the breath pure and sweet. Chewing gum and dentifrices only cover up the odor, whereas Tyree's Powder permanently relieves. Write for free sample or 25c or $1.00 package at drug store.

Everyone should use some little antiseptic powder in the shoes. Confining the feet in shoes, is in itself unnatural and causes a moist or smarting condition. People of refinement now use daily Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, and would as soon go without a dentifice as without the use of Allen's Foot-Ease. Sample FREE. SHE STAYED IN BED.

Ingram, Texas.—"Ever since I became a woman," writes Mrs. E. M.
Evans, of this place, "I suffered from womanly troubles. Last fall, I got so bad, I had to stay in bed for nearly a week every month. Since I have taken Cardus, I feel better than I have for years." You can rely on Cardus. It acts on the womanly organs and helps the system to regain its normal state of health, in a natural way. Prepared especially for women, it prevents womanly pains by acting on the cause, and builds up womanly strength in a natural way.

A NEW BOOK THE STORY OF THE ENGLISH BIBLE

By P. B. Wells,

Pastor Broadway Methodist Church, Louisville, Ky.

The book for every earnest Bible student. It tells all about the manuscripts and versions of the Bible, all about the Latin and Greek Bibles, all about the Catholic Bible, all about the Protestant English Bible. It contains full Bibliography and Index. Contains over 200 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.
"I know nowhere in a single volume such well-digested and well arranged material on this great subject about which you have written so well."—Bishop Hendrix.

"It deals with a subject and in a way that should gain for it a wide reading and study."—Bishop Kilgo.

"This is in every way an admirable treatise. The statement is compact, scholarly. This volume is destined to prove of great value and popularity."—Bishop Atkins.

"Young preachers and Bible students will count you a benefactor."—Bishop Key.

"It shows vast research and careful and clear setting forth of a fund of information touching the Book of books."—Bishop Morrison.

"An excellent summary, bringing within brief space about all that is known of the history of the Great Book. I hope that it will circulate widely."—Bishop Wilson.

"It should find a place in the libraries of all our preachers."—Bishop Candler.
The price is $1.00, postage prepaid. Order to-day of the author.

KIDNEY TROUBLE RELIEVED IN TWO HOURS.

A SPEEDY CURE.

I derived so much benefit from the use of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root that I believe it will be most important for the public to know of its worth.

Last November I was suffering severely with kidney and bladder trouble. The burning pain was terrible. I sent to you for one trial bottle of Swamp-Root and it relieved me in about two hours. After taking the small trial bottle, could feel no more pain, so purchased one fifty-cent bottle of Swamp-Root. After taking the contents have not felt one pain from the kidneys or bladder since.

You are at liberty to publish this testimonial should you wish to.

Yours very respectfully,

W. H. WARREN,

R. R. No. 2, Box 39, Galnesboro, Tenn. Sworn to and subscribed before me W. F. Dodson, enacted Justice of the Peace of Jackson Co., Tenn., this 14th day of July, 1909.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You.

Send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling all about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

BETTER PRAYER MEETINGS.

This vital service of the Church is all important, and affords the best medium of real spiritual uplift in the Church. It is a sort of family gathering, and what a privilege the members have of meeting together once a week in their Father's house to sing the songs of Zion, to pray for themselves and others, and talk together of the goodness of God and his dealings with them. Let us try for better prayer meetings this year. Let us put our best effort into the service and expect results.—Florida Christian Advocate.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if anyone afflicted with rheumatism in any form, neuralgia or kidney trouble, will send their address to him at 701 Carney Bldg., Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured after years of search for relief. Hundreds have tested it with success.

TERRIBLE TRAIN OF TROUBLES.

Lake Charles, La.—Mrs. E. Fourrier, 516 Kirby street, says: "The month before I took Cardui, I could hardly walk. I had backache, headache, pain in my legs, chills, fainting spells, sick stomach, dragging feelings, and no patience or courage. Since taking Cardui, I have no more pains, can walk as far as I want to, and feel good all the time." Take Cardui and be benefited by the peculiar herb ingredients which have been found so efficient for womanly ills. Cardui will relieve that backache, headache, and all the misery from which you suffer, just as it has done for others. Try Cardui.

A LETTER FROM CARROLLTON.

Dear Brother Meek: All my plans were made for me to be in Memphis at the Hospital meeting to-day. But, alas! the grip of la grippe forbade. That monster is no respecter of persons or times. I wanted to be there to aid in plans for the early progress of that worthy work. And I wanted to enjoy the "communion of saints" in the goodly company of that apostolic fellowship. We have observed Hospital Day here. In sending my regrets I inclosed a check for what had been collected. If any church within our bounds did not observe Hospital Day, I hope that church will speedily do so.

The "grip of la grippe" even forbade my going to church last Sunday. The echoes of that day reaching my room from many sources unite in saying: "Brother Thames simply outdid himself;" "The best sermon he has ever preached here," etc. The evening service was in charge of our missionary women and children, and has received enthusiastic praise from all quarters. Our "composite" choir, always excellent, on this occasion simply excelled itself. It is a blessing for any community to have such a body of superior singers. On a recent Sunday two of our Sunday school pupils were baptized at Sunday school, and at the eleven o'clock service were received into the Church.

Just now our town furnishes an illustration of the efficiency of our system of ministerial supply. Without arrogance we can say, "Rev. S. M. Thames is pastor of Carrollton." Both the Presbyterian and the Baptist Churches are without pastors, and there appears no immediate prospect of their securing any—not even a "suspect" is in sight. We have practical "Church Federation" of the most delightful kind. Whichever church you may attend, you see the same congregation. Services are held in the Episcopal Church one Thursday in each month and on fifth Sundays.

I am greatly gratified that my neighbor and friend, the Rev. Wm. Hayne Leavell, D.D., LL.D., will deliver the commencement address at Millsaps College, June 11. Dr. Leavell is a thinker, a scholar, a rhetorician. Whatever subject may be chosen will be characterized by profound thought, clear analysis, keen discrimination, pure English, and charming eloquence in the best sense of the much abused word. Carrollton, for half a century blessed with the presence of the great J. Z. George, is fortunate to have this distinguished divine reside at Cotesworth. Dr. Leavell is preparing for the press a manuscript left by the great Senator.

J. R. BINGHAM.

March 5, 1912.

P. S.—After I had written the above, I saw in the press dispatches that Bishop Hoss will preach the Commencement sermon and the sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association. No Commencement occasion in all the land will present a program superior to that afforded by Millsaps College in June, 1912.

J. R. B.

FREE ASTHMA CURE.

D. J. Lane, a chemist at 130 Lane Bldg., St. Marys, Kans., manufactures a remedy for Asthma in which he has so much confidence that he sends a $1 bottle by express to anyone who will write him for it. His offer is that he is to be paid for it if it cures, and the one taking the treatment is to be the judge.

SOME JOTTINGS FROM A SERMON.

Our college pastor, Brother Smith, recently preached a masterful sermon to the young people in our college chapel. The following are a few of the sayings worthy to pass on to other young people who may read these lines:

"The giddy, foolish silliness of an old man is not more out of place than the stolid, morbid, playless seriousness of the young man. The gambol of the lamb is as much in place as the solemn tread of the beast of burden."

"Music is not all made up of the solid, solemn singing of the sea. It would be incomplete without the babbling of the brook, and buoyancy of the boys and girls. Let young people have a good time. The gospel enjoins sobriety even for youth, but not solemnity. 'Is any among you merry, let him sing' (Bible). Holiness does not seek to force childhood and youth into the ways of age or into the servitude of middle life. It is adaptable to the circumstances and conditions of life.

"The Bible says, 'Rejoice O young man in thy youth; let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth.' God recognizes and makes allowances and provisions for youth and its frivolity. Its frivolity is not iniquity necessarily. We never like to see a foolish, reckless old person, nor do we like to see a young person carrying burdens like older ones. Be a boy while you are a boy, or a girl while you are a girl. Be a young man or a young woman suitable to that age. Let your father boss you as long as he is willing to do it. The law of vicariousness is upon us all: fathers and mothers live for their children. No one has the right to live, unless he is either living or preparing to live for others. There is a law of progressiveness. No one is living right in youth who is not preparing for a better, more useful life in middle or old age, or in the world to come. A law of unselfishness can be practiced in youth. Nearly all bad people are made so before they are twenty-three. And nearly all useful people are made so before that age."

These are just a few sentences that I jotted down. It was one of the finest sermons Brother Smith has preached here, and was enjoyed greatly by many. I hope others will enjoy these quotations.

FOR THE HOME AND FARM.

Nashville, Tenn., November 17, 1891: "I desire to express my high appreciation of your Gray's Ointment as a most valuable veterinary medicine. Being the owner and controller of one of the largest stables in the country, I have given your ointment a faithful trial in fresh cuts, sores of all kinds, and cracked heels. I do not think that it has an equal, and I most earnestly recommend its use to all horse men. They will find it an indispensable remedy. Yours respectfully, J. M. Brown.

"We most heartily concur in what Mr. Brown says about the valuable qualities of this ointment as a horse remedy. Pat Grogan, Trainer, E. O. Elliott, Mgr., Patton Stock Farm.

For old sores, boils, carbuncles, and to prevent blood poisoning in man or the lower animals, Gray's Ointment has no equal. Free sample on request or 25c at your druggist's. Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 807 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Years of Suffering

Catarrh and Blood Disease—Doctors Failed to Cure.

Miss Mabel F. Dawkins, 1214 Lafayette St., Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "For three years I was troubled with catarrh and blood disease. I tried several doctors and a dozen different remedies, but none of them did me any good. A friend told me of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took two bottles of this medicine and was as well and strong as ever. I feel like a different person and recommend Hood's to any one suffering from catarrh."

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The Felicity Street Sunday school has just organized a class of girls for the first year intermediate grade, with Miss Gladis Kernan, teacher. The graded literature is used and this young teacher has fully consecrated herself to this noble work.

Rev. C. A. Battle has just concluded a week's meeting in his Douglas Park Mission that has added materially to his Sunday school roll, and started the nucleus of a church membership, something like a dozen having joined. This mission is supported by the Dryades Street fund which is being held to build a church somewhere in this vicinity. Mrs. McKnight has been the faithful leader who has been the good shepherd of the little flock of children gathered into the Sunday school, there having been no adults up to this time.

The two young people's Bible classes recently organized at Oil City have merged themselves into one class, the young men and young women with equal emphasis, declaring that they could not stand to be separated for so long a time as the recitation period. We congratulate the preacher's wife on the outlook for a little pocket change occasionally, as a result of the "class spirit" here manifested. Mr. Wm. Tilley is the president, and on the day of organization the united class had twenty-two bright, active young people present, who took hold with a mind to learn and to work. The Sunday school at this place is going forward in everything that is good.

The Monroe Sunday School is planning the erection of a model building to cost perhaps $10,000, which will embody the features of the "Akron plan," as an annex to the present church building. Too long our churches have been built for preaching places only, and it is just now beginning to be considered wrong to spend the Lord's money on houses not adequately equipped for the work of teaching. Brother Holmes, the retiring pastor, says, as compared with the Monroe plan, the Central Baptist Sunday school building of New Orleans "is not in it." Nothing more could be said, and other building committees should adopt this plan. Two of the adult classes at Monroe have each subscribed $1,000, and the board of stewards will see that the balance needed will be provided.

"Every church should work itself out into a mission, and every mission should work itself up into a church," is the motto being followed by the Methodists of New Orleans at this time. The Felicity and Carrollton Avenue Churches already have missions established, and McDonoghville and Second Church each have one in process of organization, with the Epworth League Union co-operating in establishing the latter. Such forward movement will doubtless awaken in the people a new sense of their divine commission to "make disciples of all nations," and stop the tendency that has predominated in the Crescent City drawing in our borders. If the foresight of our leaders for the past twenty years had been as good as their "blind sight," and that of those who have succeeded them, Methodism might have been a great deal stronger in New Orleans. Other churches are looking out for missions and an inspiring harmony prevails in the work.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Miss Duval, Shelby, Miss., has 30 enrolled in her Men's Class, and is planning a Rally Day for an early date in March, with speakers from out of town.

Superintendent E. L. Selby, Rlenzi, reports a Sunday school of increased numbers and interest. Mrs. Selman has organized a Wesley class for men, and to that influence primarily he dates the re-organization of his school.

The State Sunday School Convention will meet at Jackson, Miss., April 3-5, and Mr. W. Fred Long, the State Secretary, is anxious for a large and enthusiastic attendance. He has secured fine speakers, among whom are Dr. and Mrs. Hamill, with Messrs. Excell and Roper to furnish the music.

Dr. H. G. Henderson, First Church, Columbus, and his progressive superintendent, Mr. Carter, have a great and growing school. Mrs. Thomas is teacher of a Wesley Adult Class, and Mr. R. G. Miller, is the president. They propose having 100 enrolled within six months. The Philathea and Teacher Training classes are also doing good work.

One Adult Class in a large city school has entirely solved the perplexing problem of good enthusiastic teachers for the Sunday school. The president appoints three members every month as supply teachers, and they come prepared each Sunday to fill any vacancy that may occur. One-third of the teachers and all the officers in the school have been taken from the ranks of this class.

Superintendent S. B. White, West Point, Miss., reports 463 connected with his fine Sunday school. He has a Cradle Roll, Home Department, two organized Wesley Classes, is using Graded Lessons as his classes advance to them, and will hold Children's Day. There were 201 present on Feb. 18, and there are 125 in the Home Department. This report, plus the hearty words of interested co-operation from West Point, will radiate a helpful interest in this great subject all over our Conference.

On Feb. 29, at Starkville, Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, assisted by Mr. Long and the Field Secretary, organized a fine Wesley Adult Class, the Rock Builders, thirty strong, with Mrs. Thomas, teacher, Dr. Sam Scales, president, and Mr. Fuller, secretary and treasurer. This splendid body of men will doubtless soon have a great class. Mr. W. W. Magruder, the superintendent, presided and a fine program was rendered. His school has grown so rapidly that three of his Adult Classes meet in another building. Mrs. Scales has had a fine picture of her magnificent class taken, and many fine fellows they are carrying keen, steady manhood wherever they go. They have a rack of postcards from their "absent fellows" hung in their class-room, and after reading those messages, one would never ask again, "Is it worth while?"

CLUB MEMBERS PLEASED.

The following letter from Mrs. Jeff Dobbs of Atlanta, is a fair sample of the many commendatory letters that are being received by Ludden & Bates relative to the Advocate Piano Club. Mrs. Dobbs, a musician of ability, writes: "I am exceedingly well pleased with the club piano recently purchased from you, and being a musician, believe I am in position to judge as to the character of this instrument. I wish to state that I originally selected a $550 piano which it was my purpose to purchase, but before closing the trade, I happened to try a Ludden & Bates Club Piano which pleased me more than the $550 piano referred to. Consequently I saw no use to invest so large an amount when I could purchase one even more satisfactory at $297, and I selected the Ludden & Bates Club, and feel to-day that I have as good piano as I would have had if I had purchased the other one mentioned."

A CORRECTION AND ELSE.

Dear Brother Meek: In this week's issue of the "Advocate," I notice an error which found its way into the "Personal and Other Notes" column, to which I desire to call your attention. It was in making Brother Tucker the presiding elder who was "lost, strayed, or stolen," on his way to Cockrum to hold Brothen Collins' quarterly conference. Cockrum is not in the Holly Springs District, but in the Sardis District. Brother Tucker has not missed an appointment this year. The work is prospering under his care, and the outlook is promising.

I read with interest the article by Brother H. P. Lewis on "Dick Gray." In my second year in the ministry, as pastor of the Shaw and New Salem charge, I met Dick Gray, and a truer, saintlier man I never knew. It was said of him that he would walk twenty miles to settle a difference between men. I shall never forget my first meeting with him. When I rode up to the New Salem Church on Sunday morning on the occasion of my first visit to the community, he met me at the door and introduced me to the Sunday school, then in session, as "Our Pastor;" and, with words of commendation and encouragement, put me at ease and inspired hope for a great year's work, which was fully realized. He lived a mile, or two above the church, and on the other side of the Bayou from the church. In winter and spring, he would leave his wagon on the side next to the church, and Sunday morning would swim his mules across and take his family over in the "dug out," and they would attend Sunday school. He never missed, save when sickness compelled his absence.

It was his custom to visit the families not converted, talk to them of their need of Christ, and pray with and for them. He anticipated the "Laymen's" and the "Men and Religion Forward Movement," by at least twenty-five years.

Whole families were converted and brought into the Church that year, largely through the influence of "Dick Gray." With a half dozen such men in a church, I believe almost any community could be taken for Christ. "Peace to his ashes!"

R. O. BROWN.
Holly Springs, Miss., March 7.

NOTES FROM THE NEWTON DISTRICT.

Friday, Feb. 23, I held the quarterly conference at Forest. I found Brother Broadfoot, the pastor, in fine spirits. He and his good people are in harmony, and are pushing the King's business with all their power. Every church on the circuit was represented at the quarterly conference, and pleasing optimism pervaded the entire atmosphere of the occasion. The stewards are planning for a material advance in the pastor's salary, and as they didn't have their plans matured, he making the assessment was deferred to a later date. Brother Broadfoot and his congregation at Forest now worship in one of the most beautiful and comfortable frame churches in the Conference. The building has a main auditorium, a Sunday school auditorium, several class rooms, a ladies' parlor, and pastor's study. It is comfortably seated and heated with a furnace, and lighted with the "concealed" system, which distributes a soft, mellow light into all parts of the building.

On Feb. 24 and 25 I was at Morton. There I found the pastor, Brother Dawson, entering nicely upon his fourth year, on that circuit, though he is a little "stuck-up"—in mud. There were a goodly number of officials present at the conference, and the spirit of unity abounded. Some advance was made in assessment for the pastor's salary, and plans were launched for improving the church building at Morton, and for building a new church at Prairie Hill.

On Wednesday, Feb. 28, we held the first quarterly conference of the Newton charge. The reports of the very efficient and practical pastor, Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, indicated prosperity in all departments of the church work. There has been a net gain in membership during the quarter, the Sunday school has made substantial advancement, and there has been both a senior and a junior Epworth League organized. The stewards advanced the pastor's salary twenty per cent over last year, and are working a most admirable financial system, which secures regular contributions from all the members of the church.

On March 2, 3, Mrs. Arch Trawick and Miss Durham, of Nashville, representatives of the Womans' Council held a Missionary Institute at Newton. Both of these ladies made fine impressions on their auditors, and I am sure their work here will be profitable to our church at this place.

T. J. O'NEIL, P. E.

A NOTE CONCERNING FALLEN COMRADES.

Dear Brother Meek: I see that my good Brother George Jackson of the Louisiana Conference has been called home. Brother Jackson is the last one of a Conference class of seventeen to pass away, except myself. He was elected to deacon's orders in Nov. 1859, together with eight others, but was not ordained deacon until Nov. 25, 1860. We had no bishop with us in 1859—hence he was not ordained then.

The last time I saw Brother Jackson was at Sea Shore Camp Ground during the Camp Meeting in 1906.

The first time, and only time, he heard me preach was during that camp meeting. He had concluded not to go on that morning, but changed his mind when he learned I was to preach. I knew he was real hard of hearing, so I stood as near where he sat as I could. My voice was clear and strong. I soon saw that he heard me distinctly. The good Lord helped me, and we had a good service. As soon as I got through Brother Jackson rose, faced the congregation and said, "This is the best sermon I have heard during the Camp Meeting." He then said, in an impressive way, "It is the only one that I have heard." Most of those who had filled the pulpit had failed to speak loud and clear enough to be heard distinctly by him.

Another one of my good brethren, whom I loved dearly, fell asleep in Jesus at Waynesboro a few days ago. I refer to Brother F. M. Williams, the father of Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of our Orphans' Home. Brother Williams was one of our truest and best men. He was made presiding elder in 1870 by Bishop Dogget, and served, I think, eight years in that office.

H. P. LEWIS.

ASHLAND CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Notwithstanding the bad weather and worse roads, things so far have gone on well on the Ashland Circuit. The people gave us a really warm reception when we arrived on Jan. 2. They were so kind that they gave us a shower of good things to eat, such as meat, sausage, butter, bread stuff, fruits and canned goods. In fact, they supplied us with enough to last two weeks, and it still continued to come. Two ladies brought us a two-horse buggy load of nice groceries and edibles this week. These people know how to take good care of their pastor. Some of our Sunday services have been really uplifting. Our prayer meeting in Ashland has been running since the middle of January, and gets better every week. We have two Sunday schools doing good work. In fact, the prospects are good for a year of victory. Ashland is far from being the least thing in the country. We are expecting to have a hundred souls saved and added to the church this year.—J. R. James, P. C.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

Money in your Wood Lot

It is cheaper to make lumber with an "American" Saw Mill than to buy lumber. In that timber on your wood lot are thousands of feet of first-class lumber waiting for you to get a saw mill of your own to take it out. But be sure your mill is an "American," which needs less power to drive it, costs less to run and cuts more lumber than any other mill. And the "American" is so simple that you can run it yourself, using your farm engine for power. Our book—"Making Money Off the Wood Lot"—tells all about farm lumbering. Shall we send you a copy? GOD'S WAY OF HANDLING MATTERS.

Dr. Homer C. Stunz, of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has recently given an interesting account of an occurrence that took place at his office in New York City. Such happenings were very frequent in apostolic days. Dr. Stunz says:

"A plainly dressed member of one of our German churches in New York City came into the office yesterday and handed me fifty $20 bills for special work in China. He had been strangely moved to take the step, believing that God is opening unusual doors of opportunity in that empire. I picked up a letter from Bishop Bashford which had not been upon my table more than four hours, and read it to him. It was a burning appeal for an irreducible minimum of $2,000 needed to save a desperate situation in the Foochow Conference. The letter was the heart-cry of that man of God for immediate help. As I read the letter, the brother who brought the gift was deeply moved. I said to him: 'My dear brother, have you never read that word in Scripture, "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear?" Then, laying my hand on his shoulder, we bowed our heads while I thanked God that the Spirit had moved this dear brother to become God's agent in answering a prayer sent up half way around the world from where we sat. It was a beautiful incident, and came into the ordinary routine of the busy day like a burst of sunshine through fog. I have cabled Bishop Bashford of the gift. How many more of our good people might help us in this time of emergency when God has set before us a great and effectual door in China!"

All Doubts Dispelled—The Scriptural Mode of Baptism Proved by Scriptures.

Since the dawn of the Christian era there has been constant discussion and controversy as to the true—the Bible—mode of baptism. Eminent men of analytical mind and profound intellect, have delved deep in ancient annals and languages in an earnest and sincere effort to determine the manner of the Savior's baptism, and from time to time announcement has been made that success had crowned the effort; yet the world has as yet been unwilling to accept the evidence offered in support of such announce-ment.

Why? Because the world has long since decided that nothing short of actual Bible proof shall determine what is this Bible mode of baptism.

And at last this Bible proof has been collated and presented in simple, readable form, so that all who desire the scriptural truth may gratify that desire. Rev. W. T. Dale, D.D., who has devoted the best years of his life to this laborious search after truth, has published a 70-page book of Bible proof that plainly shows the method of Christ's baptism. The title of the book is "Bible Readings on Baptism," and it is sold at the small price of 25 cents a copy, postpaid.

The author has constituted Rev. E. H. Roy, of Tullahoma, Tenn., sole agent of the book, and he will be glad to supply copies on request, accompanied by the price. Address Rev. E. H. Roy, Tullahoma, Tenn.—Advertis'm't.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

VOL. 59—No. 12.

"Prove All Things: Hold Fast That Which is Good."

WHOLE No. 2927.

Editorial

The Secular papers report that there has been found an adult resident of New York City who had never heard of Roosevelt, Bryan, or Taft. Ignorance, like depravity, is an exceedingly difficult thing to get rid of. We fear that, like poverty, it will be always with us.

The members of the Young Men's Christian Association of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., are undertaking to do what they term "evangelistic scouting." We like this expression. An army needs to develop the situation of the enemy, before it can make an intelligent and effective attack. It is a noble service to "scout" for the forces of redemption.

Some ministers seem to think that they are called to try to naturalize the revealed religion. But the task is a vain one. When the miraculous is eliminated from Christianity, nothing worth while is left. And the origin of the universe and of man stands wholly unexplained. The truth is, the miracles of unbelief are more incredible than those of the Bible. There is no God acknowledged in whose infinite wisdom and power they may find solution.

The Central Methodist Advocate does not like the substitution of the expressions, "decisions" and "allegiance to Christ," for the time-honored word, "conversion." We agree with our esteemed contemporary that the latter is the better term. But it is scarcely up-to-date enough for some among us who imagine that they are exhibiting superior wisdom by discarding everything that is old. If some of our brethren would flee from sin with as much vigor and earnestness as they do all that is ancient, we are inclined to think their chances for heaven would be considerably brighter. For our part, we have never been able to see how a man can acquire any additional glory for himself by insisting that all his ancestors were fools.

It is reported that the new government in China will adopt the Christian Calendar, and that her more than four hundred millions of people in all their transactions will begin soon to write, "In the year of our Lord." And their Lord he truly is. He was the Son of Man; he lived and died for all men from the beginning to the end of time. No one nation, or race, or age can claim him more than another. The sway of his scepter on our planet is widening with every passing year. To see the Mongolian peoples—one-third of the human race—beginning to lift their blinded eyes toward the Cross, is the most inspiring spectacle of the centuries. Does it not give us ground to hope that the glad day is surely coming when—

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

WORKERS, NOT IDLERS.

A gentleman with whom we were in conversation a few days since asked if most ministers do not have very little to do and an easy time. To this interrogation, of course, we answered emphatically, "No." But we are inclined to think this view, which evidently was held by the man with whom we were conversing, prevails to a considerable extent among the people. A good many seem to have a notion that because a preacher is not occupied with the usual tasks that engage persons in the various secular pursuits of life, that he spends most of his time in idleness and is a sort of necessary sponge upon society. But, as a matter of fact, nothing could be further from the truth than this. No one in any vocation has more exacting duties than the clergyman who puts his heart into his work and strives faithfully to meet the obligations of his calling. To deliver two new sermons and a prayer-meeting talk to the same congregation every week, for one, two, three, or four years, is not an easy thing to do. It requires systematic reading, daily study, and much time for special preparation. Mental work is the most trying and fatiguing of all the forms of labor.

But the task of preparing for his pulpit ministrations, heavy as it is, is only one phase of the minister's work. He must visit from house to house and keep in touch with the people; he must be with them in seasons of joy and in hours of affliction; he must look after the necessities of the poor, visit and, if necessary, nurse the sick, bury the dead, and comfort the bereaved. Strangers and new-comers must also have special attention, and he must attend the various society meetings and other religious gatherings in his charge. And then the duty of raising the finances to keep the various activities of the Church going also largely devolves upon him. In other words, he has as much mental work to do as a lawyer or teacher, as much visiting to do as a doctor, finances to manage as if he were a business man, and a surplus of other duties thrown in for good measure. Indeed, of all the world's busy toilers, of anything like equal equipment, the preacher who seeks to magnify his office is the hardest worked and poorest paid. If those who think he has little to do, could put on the ministerial harness and undertake to perform his duties for a brief season, they would soon be disillusioned, and would, we dare say, quickly become eager to seek relief in their former employment.

Nor is the minister in any sense a parasite upon the body politic. The service which he renders is indispensable. He contributes as much to the stability, the peace, the prosperity and growth of the nation as any citizen beneath the flag. In fact, the real empire builders of the world have not been the men of the sword and the rifle, but the pioneer preachers with their satchels and Bibles. Its clergy are to-day a far mightier source of strength to the American Republic than its army, or navy, or wrangling legislators assembled at State or National Capital.

THE TIME LIMIT QUESTION.

The time limit question apparently yet lacks much of being settled in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The twelve years' trial of the unlimited pastorate plan seems to have left the membership of that denomination very much divided as to its desirability, as compared with the old method of having a restricted pastoral term. As this question is coming more and more to the front in our own Church, the following summary of the present situation among the Northern Methodists, made by the Church News Association, will doubtless be read with interest by many of our people.

"Methodist Spring Conferences, starting at the middle of this month, will show, it is said, a marked change of sentiment from last fall in the matter of a restoration of the pastoral time limit. For two or three years ministers in the smaller churches have been gaining strength in favor of their contention, while ministers of the large churches have done little. A few have written magazine articles opposing the change. The prediction is now heard that many Conferences, particularly those in the East, will overwhelmingly favor the memorial to restore the old law. It is said the New York, the New York East and the Newark Conferences, meeting March 27th, will so vote.

"The limit to Methodist pastorates was taken off by the General Conference of 1900, meeting in Chicago. Able men finding themselves in strong charges have been content to keep them, and the people for the most part content to have them do so. The average pastorate has not, however, increased much in length. The stand-patters point to this fact, while those who want a limit again say dissatisfied men in smaller charges have changed oftener. The charge is made by those clamoring for the limit that the machine sustains the old men. They say an open field, such as other communions offer, is fairer than the present Methodist plan. The General Conference to which the memorials will go meets in Minneapolis in May.

"A chief argument in 1900 for the removal of the pastoral time limit was to meet conditions in large cities. It was said that where population changes rapidly Methodism must furnish one stable official in the pastor of the church. The beneficial effect has been small, it is said, and it is from the large cities that the clamor for restoration of the limit now chiefly comes."

Earth gives its crowns to those whom the world calls successful, but in heaven many crowns will be worn by those whose names are here written in the roll of the vanquished. It is better to go down in defeat standing for the right, than to win high place, fame, or fortune by championing that which is wrong. The man who really fails is he who is untrue to his own honest convictions. Nothing can compensate for falsity to one's better self. "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

Our Monthly Sermon

RESTFUL ACTIVITY AND ACTIVE RESTFULNESS.

By Rev. A. F. Smith, D.D.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest. (Matt. xi, 28.)

Perhaps no words in all the languages of the world are so familiar and loved as these. Thousands of burdened and breaking spirits, after nights of tossing, lipping them, have fallen asleep at daybreak, at length to awake with the sweet slant of sunshine glinting deep into brightening eyes that sparkle now with the light of a new hope; as many thousands more have made them the refrain of their conscious moments in the earthly life. It was so with Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I. For many weary months she had been bolted in Carisbrook Castle, hidden from the friends and companions of her youth. When at length death pushed back the doors of her prison and made her free, she was found resting her head on her Bible, open at this passage. Years after her burial at Newport Church in the Isle of Wight, recording this touching incident, Queen Victoria caused to be erected there the marble statue of a woman reclining her head on the Holy Book, on the open page of which this verse was inscribed.

Rest! Heaven has no sweeter boon; nothing more reassuring to promise than that which has been reiterated from age to age, through Joshua and Jesus: "There remaineth a rest unto the people of God."

I. What is this rest? There are many erroneous notions about it. It is not inaction, idleness, aimlessness. The promise of rest is to those who labor. The idea of senses lulled with stupefying sounds and faculties unstrung from the bow of purpose, forms no part of the Saint's Everlasting Rest in the Christian's Paradise. The weariness of lassitude and ennui, waiting for novel means of soothing, and languishing for sweeter delights of ease, gets no relief from its sultry calm. O, the pathos of unnumbered multitudes weaving tangled paths through wildernesses of exciting pleasures, or rushing across desolate plains, eager to delight in some newly imagined mirage of comfort, ever recoiling upon themselves and crying:

"Where shall rest be found—Rest for the weary soul?"

They have thought to avoid hardships and burdens, and thus have missed the way. They have utterly failed to learn the true philosophy:

"Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to its sphere.
'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best;
'Tis onward, unswerving,
And that is true rest."

Robertson of Brighton understood it when he taught us that "It is not the lake locked in ice that suggests repose, but the river moving on calmly and rapidly, in silent majesty and strength. It is not the cattle lying in the sun, but the eagle cleaving the air with fixed pinions, that gives you the idea of repose with strength and motion. In creation the rest of God is exhibited as a sense of power which nothing wearies. When chaos burst into harmony, so to speak, God had rest."

Here is the secret. It lies in the harmonious adjustment of toiler to task, like lungs to breathing, like the throat to singing—a relationship of active restfulness and restful activity.

You can see it everywhere in the physical creation. "Nothing in natural processes is more suggestive than that apparent ease with which the greatest power is put forth, and the most diverse and difficult tasks accomplished. Nature never rests and yet is always in repose; she never ceases to work and yet always appears to be at play. The expenditure involved in the change from winter to summer is incalculable; but the change is accomplished so quietly and by such delicate gradations that it is impossible to associate the idea of toil with it. There is no strenuous putting forth of force, but rather the overflow of a fathomless life. The tide of life runs to the summit of the remotest mountain that nourishes a bit of verdure, as easily as the water sweeps in from the sea when the tide turns and the creeks and inlets begin to sing again in the music of returning waves. The secret of this silent, invisible, easy play of force and accomplishment of ends lies perhaps in perfect adaptation of instrument to task, in the absence of friction, in the complete harmony between power, method and ultimate aim."

If this be the harmony of nature, why should it not be the method of man, who is nature's crowning piece? Why should not he learn to accomplish the high employments of his life without the obstruction of irritable tempers, or the grinding fury of friction? Why should not he have surcease amid his toil, like the pause between heart-throbs, like the silence that marks the rhythm of upward-soaring song?

II. In Christ this rest is found. It comes with a knowledge of the heavenly plan. This was the thought of Jesus when He prayed not that the disciples should be taken out of the world, but that the Father should keep them from the evil that was in the world. Labor and effort are not to be taken out of life here or hereafter. But life, by the empowering of the divine, should become so beautiful, graceful and majestic that it would prove the presence of the Everlasting Arms under its load, and the inspiration of the Almighty for all its motives. The great Augustine said, "Thou hast made us for thyself, and the heart never resteth till it findeth rest in thee." That is a curious and instructive saying, credited to Creshna, the incarnate god of the Hindoos:

"I am the creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Those who are endued with spiritual wisdom believe this and worship me. Their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice among themselves and delight in speaking of my name and teaching one another my doctrine. I gladly inspire those who are constantly employed in my service with that use of reason by which they come unto me, and in compassion I stand in my own nature, and dissipate the darkness of their ignorance with the light of the lamp of wisdom."

Jesus has a loftier message: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." The minds of the reverent and trusting take flights past the range of prudence, and the humble learn a way that is easier and surer than ever the proud can find.

III. In the Christ nature there is balance of being, poise of parts. Friction, petulance, worry are removed. Energy is not wasted; nerves are not worn. There is rest, such as the earth has lying in the soft arms of the atmosphere, though rushing on at the expenditure of infinite force.

I love to think of the buoyant sea that is not burdened with the tonnage of the ships of the world, and how its waves leap and catch in the prisms of their crest heaven's sparkling light; of the parent lark, seeking food for her young—how she alights in the early morning's glow to sing from the crest of a mullen flower her matin hymn, and at evening again to warble her vesper notes. The day's work has been as joyous as holy errands and as easy as the ministry of motherly love. Artesian fountains, springing perennially from their mountain sources, teach me, whose citizenship is in heaven, how my life should spend a steady effort, yet have in hidden chambers other powers crowding for Bethesdaic pools. I remember him who said: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life."

What a divine life-energy! Because Christ is the center and source of all things, the soul abandoned to him finds itself related to all his works, and a co-worker with him in building the Celestial

City. Taught of Christ, the soul travels instantly the radial road from its remote station on the circumference to the center and stands in the closet of God. Here forces are equalized. There is no up, no down, no weight, no ill. Specific gravity has been transformed into specific levity.

Some have well-nigh reached this secret chamber, the workshop of the sons of God. See the unrestrained energy of the child at play; the prodigal enthusiasm of the musician peddling at his organ; the untiring persistence of the artist, of the mighty Angelo upon his scaffold, without food or sleep, consumed in the joy of cathedral frescoes.

But it is a sublimer spectacle to see, as often you may, the sweet lives of those who, "trusting their all to His tender care," rest secure amid all turbulence, and find repose in the raging of the angriest storms. Those of mystic mind, like John, find a sacred bosom whereupon to recline the head; those of impetuous nature like Peter, when sinking under the waves, see a hand stretched to them from heaven; those who doubt like Thomas are reassured by the pathetic argument of wounds for love's sake; those in fiery furnaces of affliction, like the Hebrew children, have not on them the smell of fire, but have the rapture of walking with One like unto the Son of Man; those who are falsely accused and are lashed with bitter hatred, having fallen down like Paul under his floggings, are borne away in ecstasies supernal to behold in the third heaven things beyond mortal tongue to tell.

When the heart breaks with covetousness and self-gratification and falls into the arms of love, he that inhabiteth eternity fills the soul and fires it with his presence. After that, to jostle life's kaleidoscope is to cause a new arrangement of finer colors; to disturb the planes of life is to smooth its interests into fairer lines like steel filings on a sounding-board; to make the bed of life's river rough and steep is to hasten its current over cataracts, to swell its voice into celestial notes, and to send it shining and jubilant to wider shores.

Take a lesson from the robin as he sits on the quivering willow twig, and sport with its frailty, saying, "Break, and I'll fly away to stronger boughs, under sunnier skies." Observe the eagle, molested by the storm, rising vertically into calmer, thinner atmosphere, and there resting on his ample pinions, breathing out the heavy, tainted air, and mounting again to higher regions. With open face he looks into the face of the dazzling sun, and seems to inspire the Psalmist to shout, "My strength is renewed like the eagle's."

IV. This is heaven's solution of the perplexities of life. With the Lord of life are freely given all things. His ways are good, his paths are peace, his providence is all-sufficient. "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." If in a dark hour my heart should question, what shall I eat, wherewithal shall I be clothed?—with James Axley, the first circuit-rider in wild, swampy Louisiana, who was turned away hungry and cold into the inclement night from an inhospitable door, I would sing:

"Peace! troubled soul, thou needest not fear,
Thy great Provider still is near;
Who fed thee last, can feed thee still;
Be calm, and sink into his will."

So is life made peaceful and serene to its close.

"I find earth not gray, but rosy;
Heaven not grim, but fair of hue;
Do I stoop? I pluck a posy;
Do I stand and stare? All's blue."

It is so with all who have learned of Jesus and wear his yoke. They have labor without weariness; rest without idleness; peace without compromise; serenity without illusion; liberty without license; faith with assurance; hope with fruition; love with reciprocation.

Their work is not free from fatigue, but is free from irritation and depression. What they do is not accomplished under the law of necessity; but, by the inspirations of the higher law of love, carried by the tides of a rich and powerful life, their drudgery is transformed into joyous employment. They are pleased with their models, their foos and their task; and are like the

"—Poet, strong and true,
Who loves wild thyme and honey-dew;
And, like the brown bee, works and sings
With morning freshness on his wings,
And a golden burden on his thighs,
The pollen-dust of centuries."

WHERE IS THE TROUBLE?

By Rev. R. W. Tucker.

I trust it will not be thought that I am a pessimist, but there are some facts that certainly exist, and had as well be faced, and the sooner, the better.

That the preaching of to-day is not gripping and holding to the Church great numbers of young men, as well as many of the older ones, is a fact that, I think, every thoughtful Christian must have observed, and which none will hardly think of denying. Not only is the above true, but it is also true that the poorer people have in many places almost come to ignore all church services, though many of the older ones may have their names on the register.

That these people are happy in their attitude of indifference to the Church we cannot believe, or that they crave the soul-rest and long for the communion of God, there can be no doubt. For Job only voiced the inner cry of every human heart when he said, "O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his seat." And I believe that Plato only gave expression to a universal desire of the human soul, when he sighed for the coming of a Divine Teacher, "who would show the true path leading up to God." And I further believe that a deep-seated, universally felt need of the heart of man is expressed by the sacred writer (Micah vi, 6-7), when he says: "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousand rivers of oil? Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?"

But if the above statements are true, then why the problem of empty pews, weak and dying prayer meetings, with family altars in many places given up entirely? Is not the Church God's institution, whose supreme mission is to seek to save the lost, to cheer the hopeless, to bring all men regardless of any distinctions whatsoever into the school of Christ, where they may learn of him how to solve life's problems, and carry with ease its burdens? But is the Church really doing her divinely appointed work? Alas, I fear, lest she has too much of human plans and forms, and too little of God-given power; that in her love of the spectacular she has lost sight of him whom Moses saw as "invisible."

One of the Apostle Paul's gravest fears was, lest the churches which he had founded should be diverted from the true star of their hope. "I would," he said, "that you knew what great conflict I have for you, lest any man spoil you (rob, dispossess you of your hope, your peace, your spiritual power), through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, and not after Christ"—as if he had said, "I wish you knew how anxious I am for you, lest you lose sight of the one star of your hope, the crucified, risen and ascended Christ." Paul looked upon everything else as worthless trash. His supreme ambition was a clearer apprehension of his suffering Lord.

And as sure as the Church of to-day is failing to interest and bring the unsaved to her altars, as sure as the pulpit is not gripping and holding the young men, as well as many of the older ones, who Sunday after Sunday may be found about the depots, cold drink stands and other resorts, but many of whom never darken a church door; and as sure as the great crying need of the Church is spiritual power and revival fire; so sure is it, that the only thing that is ever going to remedy this condition is a return to the faith of Moses and Paul and Luther and Wesley.

The power that sustained Moses through all his journey, beset with trials and the most formidable foes, was his enduring vision of Christ; the remedy which Paul offered men for heart-sorrow and sin was Jesus Christ; and the burden of the preaching of Luther and Wesley was simple faith in the atonement of Christ as substitutional—not merely a Christ as the highest expression of spiritual attainment, or a death highly beneficial in its influence. They preached a Christ who was "very God" as well as man, and a death vicarious and substitutional in its nature.

There is a lot of miserable twaddle to-day about Christ as "the one perfect example" and "ultimate development of spirituality, but denying him the essential elements and attributes of the Godhead, which has assiduously spread its pernicious influence until some even in high places hardly know what they believe, or what to believe.

I heard a man prominent in the Church say not long since that sixty per cent of the preachers in this age of enlightenment had ceased to believe in the virgin birth of Jesus. Of course, I did not believe his assertion then and do not believe it now; but it is true that the divinity of Christ and the sinfulness of sin are not contended for, from even Methodist pulpits to-day, as they were in the days of not more than half century ago.

The wrath of God, sin and punishment, hell and its eternal woes, are doctrines almost obsolete to-day. The Christ thundered them in no uncertain tones. It is said, however, these doctrines sound harsh, and that if Christ were now on earth he would modify and adapt himself to "changed conditions." But carnality and spirituality never change, and the message of Christ is the same in all ages. There has been too much effort to bend Christ's teachings to fit changed conditions, and the result is, that low standards are being substituted for the "Thus saith the Lord." Much of the present-day preaching is painfully lacking in two of the most important elements of real preaching, namely: the personality of the preacher and the authority of the message. But unless the preacher believes his message with all his heart, neither his personality nor the divine authority will be felt in his preaching. When Jesus had ended his sublime sermon on the Mount, St. Matthew says, "The people were astonished at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes."

We are preaching too much after the scribes—the scholars—and not enough of the simple text of God's Word. There is a hotbed of German infidelity disguised with high sounding phrases, such as "profound scholarship," "higher criticism," which has done more to tone down the faith and destroy the note of authority in the preaching of to-day than the writings of all the avowed infidels in the past. I do not oppose scholarship, or legitimate criticism, but I believe that Jesus Christ was easily the profoundest scholar this world has ever known; and I repudiate the charge, that his apostles were ignorant men, after they had been in Christ's school for three years. One of them, Saul of Tarsus, was perhaps the most learned young man of his day when he became his apostle. I may be thick-headed, but I will never believe that men nearly two thousand years away know more about who Christ was, and what he did, than those who were on the ground, and I believe that Moses knew more of God and heart religion in one minute than the so-called profound scholars who attack the authenticity and credibility of his writings have ever known, or ever will know.

When I hear a preacher say, "Now the Bible says thus, but according to the profound Dr. Wiseman, the truth is thus and so," I look on him as dangerous and unworthy my confidence; for I believe to follow such scholars means to lose one's peace and find himself sooner or later crying like those women first at the sepulchre,

"They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid him."

Oh, if the Church of to-day as a whole needs one thing more than another, it is a return to the simple faith of that apostle who declared that, "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." And if the ministry as a whole needs any one thing more than another, it is a right appreciation of the significance of the death of Christ. Nothing short of a faith which makes Christ divine and his death necessary to the forgiveness of sin will ever produce preaching which will win and hold men to God. That which is founded on any lower conception will be lacking in both of the most essential elements: the personality of the preacher, and the authority of the message.

LATE BOOKS.

Conquering Forces of the Kingdom and Other Sermons. By Bishop Seth Ward, D.D. With an Appreciation of His Character and Ministry by Edwin D. Mouzon, D.D., LL.D., Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.

This volume is made up of fourteen sermons selected from the manuscripts of the late Bishop Ward, whose early death so profoundly touched the heart of the Southern Methodist Church. They were edited and arranged by Bishop Mouzon, who had the assistance of Mrs. Ward in this work. The discourses, without exception, are of a high order, and form a valuable addition to our sermonic literature. Bishop Ward was a diligent student, and carried no unbeaten oil into the sanctuary. Those who never heard him preach, in reading these fervent and finished messages, will, we dare say, be surprised to observe how fully, without the advantages of the schools, he mastered the homiletic art. In him we have another striking illustration of the truth, that there are few difficulties which native ability and hard work cannot triumphantly overcome. The day of the self-made man has not passed, as some have affirmed, and never will. The appreciation of the ascended Bishop from the graceful pen of Bishop Mouzon is admirable in every respect. The book is dedicated to the young preachers of the Church, to whom we most heartily commend it, as well as to the general public.

Pokjumie: A Story of the Land of the Morning Calm. By Ellasue Canter Wagner. Smith & Lamar, Publishers; Nashville, Tenn., and Dallas Texas. Price 50 cents.

A beautiful Korean love story, told in a most fascinating manner. The style of the writer is easy and graceful, and having read the first chapter, one is not disposed to stop until the end is reached. The narrative throws light upon the deplorable social conditions existing in the Hermit Kingdom, and shows the degradation of womanhood in that country. The little volume embraces 104 pages, and we think its circulation is calculated to do good.

The Pastor His Own Evangelist. Methods, Texts, Seed Thoughts, and Illustrations. With an Introduction by J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D., and a Chapter on Preparing for a Revival by Charles L. Goodell, D.D. The F. M. Barton Company, Cleveland, Ohio, Publishers.

This is a large volume of 477 pages, and from beginning to end it is filled with choice matter. Besides Dr. Goodell's discussion of the question of "Preparing for a Revival," the following subjects are dealt with: "The Church's Obligation and Opportunity;" "The Vanity of a Worldly Life;" "Saved for Service;" "The Guilt and Power of Sin;" "The Wages of Sin;" "The Lamb of God;" "Repentance;" "Influence-Example;" "A Whole Life for Christ;" "The Faith that Saves;" "The Great Decision;" "Accepting and Confessing Christ;" "God's Power to Save;" "The Joy of Salvation;" "The Call of the Other World;" "Opportunity! Responsibility!;" "Manhood for Christ;" "The Fruits of Indecision." Under these several heads are gathered many striking quotations from a variety of sources. The book is both a trumpet call to pastors, and an armory to supply them with effective weapons for the great spiritual warfare.

A dormitory to cost $50,000 will soon be in process of erection on the campus of the Alabama Woman's College at Montgomery.

According to the Government religious statistics of 1906 more than half the Christian Scientists in the United States are in Massachusetts.

Mr. Embree E. Hoss, a son of Bishop Hoss, has been appointed Postal Inspector by the Post Office Department in Washington at a salary of $2000 per annum.

The contributions to the Korean Jubilee Fund of the Methodist Episcopal Church have reached the sum of $250,000 only $50,000 short of the amount to be raised.

The Buddhists are said to have seventy-four organizations and 3465 members in the United States. All these are in the State of California, except 500 which are in Oregon and Washington.

The Princeton Theological Seminary will celebrate its centenary on May 5, 6 and 7. It is one of the best equipped institutions of the kind in the United States, and is regarded as rather conservative in its teaching.

Bishop Atkins has lately been visiting Colonel T. J. Watkins, in Orlando, Fla. He occupied the Methodist pulpit in that city on Sunday, March 3, and preached a sermon which is reported to have made a profound impression.

Methodism continues to decline in Wales. It is stated that within the last five years there has been a falling off of 5500 members, and of $64,000 in the financial receipts, while the chapel debts have risen from about $2,600,000 to $3,445,000; an increase of $785,000.

Twenty evangelists, at an expense of $7000 annually, are now supported by a recently converted Chinese official for the conversion of his countrymen. Another Chinese Christian supports a hospital in which 50,000 patients are treated each year.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Dr. J. F. Goucher, who is held in high esteem by the Methodists of the South, recently underwent a severe operation at the St. Francis Hospital in Pittsburg, Pa. He was reported some days ago as having stood the trying ordeal well, and as making satisfactory progress toward recovery.

The Commencement sermon of Trinity College, Durham, N. C. will be preached on Tuesday morning, June 4, by Bishop W. F. McDowell, of Chicago, and the annual address will be delivered on the day succeeding by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, late chief chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Bishop T. B. Neely has a book just off the press entitled, "The Bishops and Supervisional System of the Methodist Episcopal Church." It deals with the history and workings of the episcopacy, and numbers 350 pages. The price is $1.50. The Northwestern Christian Advocate says that he is pre-eminently qualified to write such a volume.

The denominational affiliations of the prominent candidates for the presidency of the United States are as follows: Mr. Taft is a Unitarian; Mr. Roosevelt is a member of the Dutch Reformed Church; Gov. Woodrow Wilson is a Presbyterian; Speaker Champ Clark, a Campbellite; Governor Harmon, a Methodist, and Congressman Underwood, a Baptist.

Dr. J. L. Johnson, Jr., Professor of French and German in Mississippi College, at Clinton, has accepted the presidency of the Baptist Woman's College, at Hattiesburg, Miss., at a salary of $2000 per annum. It is stated that the property of this institution is in excellent condition, and that the general situation indicates that it will have a career of large usefulness.

From the Central Christian Advocate, of Kansas City, we glean the following: Bishop Mouzon of the M. E. Church, South, and Bishop Mallieu of the Methodist Episcopal Church are of Huguenot origin. Bishop Collins Denny was educated in part at Princeton University. Of the seven newly elected Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church, Bishops Lambuth, Kilgo, Murrain and McCoy are the sons of ministers.

The members of the Commission on Methodist federation who represent the Methodist Episcopal Church had a meeting at the Vanderbilt Hotel in New York City on Feb. 21. Those present were Bishop Cranston, Bishop L. B. Wilson, Dr. W. W. Evans, Dr. G. A. Reeder, Mr. Hanford Crawford, Mr. J. A. Patten, and Dr. R. J. Cooke, proxy. The object of the meeting was to get ready the report to be made to the approaching session of the General Conference.

Dr. W. F. Melton, Professor of English at Emory College, pronounced a sermon preached by Bishop Candler at Oxford, Ga., a short time since the greatest pulpit utterance that he had ever heard. He further said: "When he finished preaching he raised the hymn, 'Amazing Grace'—the Spirit fell upon the congregation, and the Bishop was the only singer who carried it through to the end." Those who have heard Bishop Candler at his best, will not be disposed to discredit Dr. Melton's estimate.

Harvard University is following the example of Yale and Princeton in establishing a distinctive educational work for China. The enterprise takes the form of a School of Research at Shanghai. The university has found in Dr. Henry S. Houghton, of the Methodist General Hospital at Wuhu, the best equipped man in the Chinese empire for investigation of diseases in the Orient, and, with the consent and approval of Bishop Bashford, he has been designated as on permanent leave for educational work. Dr. Houghton is the son of Major A. C. Houghton, of Cincinnati.—New York Christian Advocate.

A TOWN WITHOUT A CHURCH.

The Apostle John saw "no temple" in the Heavenly City, but that was because the whole city had become one vast temple, and all life had there been transformed and transfigured into worship. Men have dreamed of building cities in this world without a church for a very different reason, thinking that the church stands for superstition, and is so much bigotry and waste.

The New York "Christian Advocate" tells the story of a young lawyer who some time ago started for the West with such a project in view. He had become infected with unbelief in his college course, and looked upon religion as a burden and blight to a place. He therefore proposed to locate in a town in which there would be no church and no Bible. He found a place which met his conditions. But within a year he had had enough of a churchless town, and wrote to a young minister, a college classmate, begging him to come out and bring plenty of Bibles and begin preaching, for he had become convinced that a town without churches and Bibles was "too much hell for any living man to stay in."

Some sailors were cast upon an unknown island, and feared they might lose their lives among savages. One of them climbed the bluff, and seeing a church spire, called back to his companions: "Come on, boys; here's a church." Why did those men feel safe when they saw a church? Because a church stands for civilization and order and safety. It stands for the highest things in our civilization, for a world above this world that gives the lower world its worth, as it is the sun far above us that makes the earth blossom beneath us. Take the church and what it stands for out of any city or community, and it would in time become "too much hell for any living man to stay in."

In supporting the church we are not maintaining an outworn and useless relic of the past, but are nourishing an institution which feeds the soul, and thereby strengthens and enriches all our life.—Presbyterian Banner.

OUR ORPHANS' HOME.

Under this caption in this week's Advocate, Brother Sherard, President of the Board of Trustees, makes an earnest appeal to the Methodists of Mississippi in behalf of their Home and the children therein, which they, under God, have accepted to maintain and support. This delicate and responsible charge has been committed to Brother W. M. Williams whose wise, paternal, and efficient management is giving general satisfaction. Indeed, there can be no reasonable objection to his administration. He is thoroughly consecrated in heart and life to the work; and having at much expense of time and means studied the business from every viewpoint, he is one of the best equipped men in knowledge and practice for the place to be found anywhere.

The institution and its manager are deserving of all needed support and co-operation, and it only remains for the preachers and people to do their part and we shall continue to have one of the best Orphanages in the land.

The report to the Conferences last year concludes thus: "The cause of the Orphans does not have to be urged. All it asks is a fair chance. WE BELIEVE WE CAN COUNT ON ALL OUR METHODIST PREACHERS TO SEE THAT IT GETS THE BEST CHANCE during the coming year that it has ever had." (Capitals mine.)

Will the preachers see that this reasonable expectation is realized monthly? Three months of the year are gone. What have you done, brother pastor?

Let not March close without a note of encouragement and promise to Brother Williams from every pastor and presiding elder in Mississippi, and, if possible, with a contribution, however small it may be. Let Sunday school superintendents and others do likewise.

The need is great and urgent. May it be heeded by all concerned. I write this because of the interest I feel in the cause!

Yours for the children, G. W. BACHMAN.

A SERVANT'S WIFE.

It was certainly a noble thing that was done when a woman, who called at the Manual Training High School in this city a few days ago, and when asked to sign her name and her occupation, wrote her name and, after it the words, "A servant's wife." This woman was Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the speaker of the House of Representatives, the office of importance next only to that of president of the United States. Mrs. Clark was asked why she signed that occupation. She replied:

"Mr. Clark is a servant of the people and I am his wife."

There is food for thought in this.—Central Christian Advocate.

MODES OF THE HEAVENLY LIFE.

By Rev. W. G. HARBIN.

Bound in Cloth and Gold. Price 50c, postpaid.

The book deals with a subject of vital importance to every Christian and reveals an insight into the movements of God's Spirit upon the hearts of men, which should make it of much spiritual benefit to all who read and study it. The simplicity of treatment, the beauty of diction, and the wealth of apt illustrations give to the book a charm which holds the reader's attention from beginning to end. The author has rendered a distinct service to his fellow Christians.—Rev. D. C. Hull, M.A., President of Millsaps College.

It is announced that the two new Senators to be elected by the New Mexico Legislature will be Republicans.

The people of Sweden are raising money by popular subscription to build a modern battleship. Already $194,000 has been subscribed.

Leading doctors of Paris are prescribing horse-flesh as the best diet for sufferers from consumption. They claim that it has more strength and is easier digested.

A maximum of $1.25 a ton as toll for all freight passed through the Panama canal is the schedule agreed upon by the present administration. There is to be no favor shown American vessels.

In its annual report of expenditures the Government budget shows $7,000,000 expended for coal during the last year. Most of this amount was delivered by wagons. Most of this coal is purchased for warming public buildings.

The Maine was tugged out to sea and sunk on March 15. Thus ends the active history of a warship that indirectly caused an international conflict. The 65 members of the crew, after being exposed to public gaze in Havana, Cuba, were placed on board a vessel bound for the United States.

The Virginia Senate by a vote of 23 to 15 refused to pass the Enabling Act, permitting the people of Virginia to vote to abolish the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. These dignified Solons, it seems, think that the people don't know how to decide such a momentous question.

Governor O'Neill of Alabama has released the appropriation of $6,700 for libraries in the rural schools of that State. We can see no reason why more money is not spent for this purpose in every State. The country boy and girl reads with a great relish books from a library, and, therefore, should be supplied with them.

Sugar has been placed on the free list by the House of Representatives at Washington, Democrats from Louisiana and Colorado dissenting from what was otherwise a strict party vote. This free sugar bill has yet to pass the Senate and that body has a way of doing things that, on this occasion, may make the hearts of cane and beet growers rejoice.

The annual financial statement of the Canadian Government, recently made to the House of Commons, shows a surplus on hand for the fiscal year which ends March 31 of $39,000,000. Out of this amount the Government will pay for the Transcontinental Railroad and other public improvements, and have left $1,150,000 to go to the reduction of the public debt.

The German-American Teachers' Association is planning to make a trip to Germany next year to study conditions in the Fatherland. Germany is even now making plans for the visit of these distinguished educators. A public reception will be tendered them by the German Government in the Berlin city hall, at which time a mass chorus of children from the common schools will furnish the music.

A remarkable example of honesty is found near Homer, La., in the act of Mr. Howard Ross, a Confederate soldier. Mr. Ross borrowed fifty dollars of Elmer Bowen after the surrender of Lee's Army at Appomattox, with which he purchased a horse. On the first of March he repaid the money with interest, the total being $191. His reason for not paying sooner was that he did not know where his benefactor lived.

The situation in China is becoming more complicated every day, and it now seems likely that the "Sleeping Giant" will be dismembered and reorganized into four or five nations. There is a strong sentiment in favor of the old Empire, and there seems to be two separate parties favoring the democratic form of government. In the event that the empire is divided, Christianity will have greater opportunities than ever before.

A brand-new defense was introduced by a Kentucky vocalist who was charged with singing too loud at a religious service, when the judge asked him to render a sacred song before the jury, that its members might judge the value of his musical ability. He sang "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand," and was released at once. We wonder what the verdict of the average country jury would be if a similar test should be applied to some of our operatic sacred soloists.

There are 13,300,000 foreign-born people in the United States. In later years the tide of immigration has been largest from Southern Italy. Most of these foreigners have moved to the cities of the United States. Now, President Taft proposes universal arbitration treaties that will permit both Japanese and Chinese immigration. It is predicted that, if the present tide of immigrants continues to flow into the cities, and the whites and negroes continue leaving the farms, we will need 10,000,000 Chinese laborers as farmers to raise food for the balance of the population.

A bill is pending in Congress, and has been reported favorably, known as the Page Educational Bill. It proposes to give to vocational educational advancement two and a quarter million dollars next year, and increase this amount annually, until in 1912 it would reach $14,426,000. The scope of the bill embraces encouraging education along vocational lines in high schools, establishing agricultural schools, demonstration farms, field pest and breeding stations, and the training of teachers and specialists along these lines.

The population of the State of Mississippi in 1910 was 1,797,000. The land area is 46,360 square miles or about 30,000,000 acres, about 9,000,000 acres of which are in cultivation. Only 49 per cent of the farmers are white, and only 736 farmers were born outside of the State, 109,088 being natives. Last year the cotton crop was valued at $83,149,000; corn $26,030,000; hay, $3,364,000; sweet potatoes, $3,073,000; oats, $823,000; dry peas, $571,000, and Irish potatoes, $542,000, making a total crop valuation of $117,552,000, or an average of $13.50 per cultivated acre. Mississippi is being traversed by railroads and studied by industrial specialists. Her present rank, as the twenty-first State of the Union, promises to give immediate place to a higher rank.

WHAT METHODISTS ONCE WERE.

A Methodist is one who has the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost given unto him; one who loves the Lord his God with all his heart, mind, soul, and strength. He rejoices evermore, prays without ceasing, and in everything is full of love to all mankind, and is purified from envy, malice, wrath, and every unkind affection. His one desire and the one design of his life is not to do his own will, but to do the will of him who sent him. He keeps all of God's commandments, from the least to the greatest. He follows not the custom of the world, for vice does not lose its nature through becoming fashionable. He fares not sumptuously every day. He can not lay up treasures upon the earth, nor can he adorn himself with gold or costly apparel. He can not join in any diversion that has the least tendency to vice. He can not speak evil of his neighbor any more than he can tell a lie. He can not utter unkind or evil words, nor does corrupt communication ever come out of his mouth. He does good unto all men—unto neighbors, strangers, friends, and enemies. These are the principles and practices of our sect. These are the marks of a true Methodist. By these alone do Methodists desire to be distinguished from other men.—John Wesley.

BILDAD AKERS—HIS BOOK.

The distinguished author of this book, whose gifted pen is doing such splendid service to the Church and to mankind, honored me by handing me a copy inscribed, "With the Author's Compliments." I intended to read it through as soon as I reached my journey's end. Alas! for my intention, a friend picked it up, dipped into it, and just had to take it off and read it. In due course of time I got it back, for my friend was one of those remarkably honorable men who return borrowed books. But another person had dipped into it meanwhile, and to dip into Bildad's book is just like swallowing a test-tube of typhoid germs. You're in for a spell. A second time I got it back, and I dipped into it myself. After that I would not have loaned it to my wife. I just had to finish it.

Bildad Akers—His Book, has a great failing—it leaves off. There are so many things you'd like the old fellow to give an opinion about. It has another, too. There isn't any Bildad Akers in the flesh. He is real enough—along with Sam Weller, and Pendennis, and Tom Sawyer, and all that glorious tribe of living folk who were born in the fertile brain of genius and will live when our tombstones have mouldered away. But, as one reads Bildad Akers's book, he wants to get on the train and go out and see the old fellow, and eat his po'k and greens, and hear his patronizing "Now, Bud," and listen to him spout homely philosophy until bedtime.

There are many who enjoyed the occasional visits of Bildad Akers to the Raleigh Christian Advocate; but that isn't like going home with him in the book, and making him a good long visit. If you haven't done that you would better send Smith & Lamar your order for Bildad Akers—His Book, right away, and see what a good time you'll have.

The book consists of a series of quaint papers of which the author purports to be the editor. It is said that no writer loved his characters as Dickens did. One feels after reading the introduction that Dr. Ivey loved Bildad in the same way, and he played like he was true for so long that he got to believe he was; and he makes you believe it, too. The book is replete with fine character drawing, quaint humor, homely philosophy, and sound common sense. There are eighteen papers, and each is worth more than the price of the book, but they are not near enough. "Street Preaching," "The Annual Conference," and "Bildad's Creed" are the best of the series to the mind of this writer. You may think otherwise: they're all so near the best. One of Bildad's pithiest sayings is: "Other Churches are huntin' fer the meat the Meth'dists have been gettin' fat on, while the Meth'dists air stralnin' with all their might to make other Churches fergit that Meth'dists ever et sich meat." Another, profound as it is simple, and true as it is both, is: "Hard times in the h'art and not in the craps is what makes scant c'lections."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

The annual meeting of the Home Mission Society will be held in Macon, May 4-8, 1912. The names of delegates should be sent to Mrs. W. E. Stokes, Macon, Miss. Please urge the election of delegates from your auxiliaries and send their names to the committee at once.

AN INTERESTING INSTITUTE.

A Missionary Institute, connected with the Forward Movement of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, convened in an all-day meeting at the Shubuta Methodist Church, on Friday, March 1. Mrs. Trawick, Fourth Vice-President of the Woman's Missionary Council, and Miss Durham, head Deaconess of the Institutional Church of Kansas City, were present as instructors. Delegates attended from seven auxiliaries. There were twenty from out of town. Among these were Miss Womack, Deaconess from Wesley House of Meridian, and Rev. G. S. Harmon, Secretary of the Conference Board of Missions.

Plans were made and discussed for reaching the goal for the year: "Double our membership: double our gifts." Inspiring talks were given by Mrs. Trawick and Miss Durham, placing before the Institute the present Missionary situation, which impressed the hearers as to the obligation and opportunity of the hour. Many valuable suggestions were given for effective methods for increasing the membership and offerings. During the evening session a quartette, composed of Misses Edmunds and Irma Weems, and Messrs. Fairchild and Webb, added much to the service.

This was the first Institute held within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference in the interest of the Forward Movement, and judging by the uplift given and the enthusiasm displayed by the workers here, the harvest of fruits from the movement will be plentiful.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE W. H. M. S.

Mrs. M. E. Cochran, the press superintendent of the Home Mission Society at Lucedale, Miss., prints in the local paper a report of their work every week. She has recently sent me an interesting account of a meeting held at the home of Mrs. F. M. Hamner, where the exercises were most instructive, and delightful refreshments were served. The Mission Study Circle will meet at the home of Mrs. Hamner each first Tuesday afternoon during this quarter.

Mrs. A. L. McBride, the press superintendent from Fayette, Miss., writes that their H. M. S. is only about a year old, it having been formed from a Ladies' Aid Society which was engaged in only local work. With the opening of the new year, they have resolved to put new energy and added zest into the work, and make it count for more than ever before.

Mrs. McBride says: "At our January meeting, our pastor, Rev. J. E. Gray, installed the following new officers: President, Mrs. J. S. Hicks; first vice-president, Mrs. W. W. Ellis; second vice-president, Mrs. J. H. McBride; third vice-president, Anabel Stewart; fourth vice-president, Mrs. H. H. Lewis; recording secretary, Mrs. J. W. Coffey; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. E. Gray; treasurer, Mrs. Earnest Dawking; local treasurer, Mrs. Noel Killingsworth; superintendent of press work, Mrs. A. L. McBride; Voice agent, Mrs. L. B. Campbell.

"We have a live Home Mission Society, and during the past year we arranged inspiring and instructive programs each month. I feel safe in saying that under the leadership of our new president and her efficient corps of officers, and, above all, under the guidance of our God whom we serve, success will crown our efforts for the coming year."

"The Conference press superintendent is glad to receive these reports from Lucedale and Fayette. Let those of other Auxiliaries follow.

FIRST CHURCH AND THE WRECK OF TRAIN NO. 2

By a Modern Pioneer.

I used to think I was glad there were circuits that other preachers didn't want, for, sometimes, I felt that this was the one consideration in my appointment; especially was this true, some years ago, when there was a new circuit made in a newly opening section of our Conference, and I was honored as being the first Methodist preacher, and probably the first of any sort of the white race, to enter a part of this promising field. I was more zealous then than now; my zeal, in some instances, however, was based upon that which sometimes prevents doing the thing by some other method.

I am not old, but I have an experience now. On my first circuit I was too young for such an important place as that. A man of "experience" was wanted, and I thought one of that sort was needed. Now I am in a different country, or in the other swing of the pendulum of the pew. The demand now is for a young man. I consider myself fortunate to be living in this good age, but am aware that ere long it will not be so for me. Soon I shall be numbered with the old, and before we enter the other swing and a man of "experience" is wanted again, my feeble voice will be changed to that of a celestial songster and my bishopric another will possess.

But to my particular circuit, with one of the many experiences. It was a country made up of "many men of many minds" of various isms and creeds, from the crazy antics and savage yells of the colored "Do rights" and "Cindy's Band," to the cold, formal sect that so bitterly opposed the organization of a Methodist Church in that section.

On my arrival, I proceeded as any other man would have done, I suppose, under the circumstances, and that was to do the best I could. I visited, from house to house, the various white families, and secured the names of all Methodists, or those who had ever been Methodists, and got promises of their co-operation. I wrote to the four corners of the earth for church letters, and secured the names of those who would assume the vows of Methodist Church membership. All things were ready and the day of formal organization was announced, with a request that, "All be present." Since we were being so strenuously opposed by a sect who, "having a form of godliness, denied the power thereof," and were using their entire forces, with all available means, to defeat us, this day was to be the crisis.

It was about the middle of February, and a great field, with not a very wide open door, was before me. About five days before the day fixed for the organization of the First Methodist Church at —, I set out on a missionary tour to the north expecting to return, by rail, in time for the reception of the charter members of the First Methodist Church at —. It was a new railroad, but I have learned that, as regards railroads, at least, it is not always the new things that are best (the same is true in at least a few other cases). One train a day was the schedule, and we looked for the train when we saw it coming, for sometimes we could hear the whistle and then it would jump the track before it reached our station.

My missionary labors being ended, preparations were made for the return to —. It was Friday, and Saturday was to be full of labors in the interest of my new church. I was thirty miles distant from the place that was then of greatest importance. The train was expected soon in the afternoon. I had gotten dinner at the little hotel and was careful to get to the station in due time for the train. It was reported some late, but how much late we could not tell. I spent the time reading, meditating, and endeavoring to entice strangers, but no one seemed inclined to converse with me. I was the only prospective passenger and had all the yard to myself. The hours dragged and the train was still "late." Sundown came on; at the hotel the bell rang for supper, but I did not go; I had two reasons for not doing so: I was afraid the train would come while I was there; then my money was not scarce, but all gone; only fare to the railroad crossing was left from the noon meal. I was to walk the rest of the way, as it was only six miles.

I was restless for a report as to the train, and have never been able to describe my feelings when we got it. It was 8 o'clock; the agent, a new man in the railway business, stuck his head through the window in the darkness and stillness of that February night and made me think of Gabriel, when he announced with a voice that would have made you believe that you were at a grand central depot and passing multitudes were there waiting for many trains, "There'll be no train to-night! No. 2 was wrecked in the South Yards of the city to-day."

No use to try to tell my first impulse, but soon as I could use my unruly member with sufficient decency, and look upon that agent as a fellow-creature, I asked, "Please sir, when will we have a train?" and received for an answer, a short, "I don't know." All station agents are not like this one, for some of the nicest men you meet and some of my best friends now are the men who sell and punch our tickets.

LOOK OUT FOR YOUR FACE.

"My boy," said a wise father, who knew how to play and be a chum with his twelve-year-old lad, "you do not own your own face."

The boy looked puzzled. He had come to the breakfast table with a frowning, clouded countenance, and had started moodily to eat his food. Everybody felt the shadow of his ill spirits evidenced in his looks. His father's unexpected words brought him back to life, and he looked up with a half-guilty expression, but did not understand what was meant.

"You do not own your own face," his father repeated. "Do not forget that. It belongs to other people. They, not you, have to look at it. You have no right to compel them to look at a sour, gloomy, and crabbed face."

The boy had never thought of that, but he understood and did not forget. And all of us should understand and none of us should forget that our faces belong to other people.—Christian Herald.

In God and eternity.

There's beauty in the mountain's blue,
There's beauty in the brook,
There's beauty in the sunset hue
And this quiet nook.

There's beauty in the humble poor,
Whose lives are fraught with care;
Yes, it is beautiful to know,
Of God's love they have a share.

There's beauty in the evening breeze
That lulls us to repose;
There's beauty in the heart that feels
For other people's woes.

There's beauty in the humblest thing
On earth, be it far or nigh;
There's beauty in the angel wing
That will waft our souls on high.

There's beauty in the thought
That God has made us all,
And, with Christ's life blood, bought
Our souls from Satan's thrall.

There's beauty at the throne of grace;
There's beauty everywhere;
There's beauty in that Heaven-home place—
Yes, all is beauty there.

DO IT WELL.

There is an old story worth repeating which was told of a judge who wished to have a piece of fence built around a portion of the pasture on his farm. He called in a young carpenter, who was beginning to make a good name for himself as a skilled workman, and asked him what he would charge to build the fence. "It need not be very well done," said the judge, "for it is in the back lot, and will soon be covered with vines." "It will cost one dollar and a half," said the young man.

He built the fence, and the judge went to see it. To his surprise he saw a fine job—the boards planed, and the joints were carefully fitted together. He thought the young man was going to charge him a high price.

"What do you mean by doing this?" asked the judge. "Did I not tell you to make a rough job of this fence?"

"But I do not do such jobs as that," said the carpenter.

"How much is your bill?" asked the judge.

"One dollar and a half, just as I agreed," was the answer. "I finished it to suit myself, and for my own sake. You are not expected to pay for this part of the work."

The judge was silent. He was not used to such good workmen. But some years later, when he had to give an order for the construction of a large public building, and this man was among those who offered to do the work, the judge said, "I know that man, and he is to be trusted. We will give him the work."

This young carpenter showed his character by the way in which he built the fence. It was only a simple piece of work, but he did it well, and when he tried to get a larger piece of work to do, the fact that he had done the small job well enabled him to secure the order for the bigger piece of work.

Boys and girls, you are showing your character by the way in which you do your work in school and in the home. Are you doing everything in the very best way possible?—Apples of Gold.

ONE LITTLE SUNBEAM.

"Jesus wants me for a sunbeam! I'll be a sunbeam for Him," said Helen, as she washed and wiped the cups and saucers, and set them in a row on the pantry shelf.

"You seem to be very happy, Miss Helen; and, indeed, your merry face makes one think of a sunbeam," said Bridget, as she came hurriedly through the room.

Helen went on singing. Bridget could hear the song, all the way out to the coal shed, and somehow it seemed to take the chill out of the damp, foggy morning, and the coal bucket did not seem nearly so heavy as usual, as she carried it to the house. "Bless me, that child is a ray of sunshine!" she murmured.

Upstairs, mother was trying to rock Baby Ned to sleep, but baby was cross and did not want to go to sleep. Mother's head ached, and she felt almost discouraged, too.

"I'll be a sunbeam for Him."

The little song floated softly up the stairway. Mother smiled, and forgot about her headache.

Just across the alley an old man was sitting on his back porch. His face was dark and gloomy, and he complained harshly about the weather. He lived all alone here in his comfortable home, but he was not a happy man. He was not bad, but he had lived alone and without associating with other people until he had forgotten how to be happy, or to make others happy.

Helen's little song rang out merrily through the damp, misty air:

"Jesus wants me for a sunbeam!
A sunbeam, a sunbeam!
Jesus wants me for a sunbeam!
I'll be a sunbeam for Him."

The song reached the old man's ear, and the gloomy look on his face disappeared, and somehow he began thinking of other days, when he was a boy and went to Sabbath school.

For a long time he sat there thinking, then he arose and walked around the house, to the street. His face was really bright now, and he was smiling.

"I am going to try to make some one happy to-day," he told himself.

We will not tell what he did, for it would take too long, but he found more than one person to make happy that day, and also learned how to be very happy himself.—Sunbeam.

THE DEPARTMENT OF MINISTERIAL SUPPLY AND TRAINING.

At the Montgomery meeting, in April, 1911, the Board of Education appointed a special committee to organize the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training. Early in the year, the Committee did its work. By the new arrangement, the Correspondence School becomes a part of the Department, and Professor J. L. Cuninggim, the Director of the Correspondence School, was made Secretary of the Department. Professor Cuninggim has begun to push his work with vigor and success.

The importance of the work committed to this Department cannot be overestimated. The demands for an educated, as well as a consecrated ministry is increasingly urgent. The high task is upon us of seeking out high-minded, godly youths, called to God to preach the Gospel, and helping to get ready for this noble work. No man can know, who is not in touch with the situation, the number of young men who are seeking to equip themselves, and the earnestness of their purpose in this desire. Many of them must have financial help if they succeed. Requests to the Board for loans are being constantly and urgently made. To meet such demands, the Board's loan funds must be greatly increased. Professor Cuninggim has recently sent out a call for help in this direction. A number of our laymen have responded promptly and liberally. Still, the funds at hand are utterly inadequate to meet the growing need. Will not others respond to the call of Professor Cuninggim? These funds are loaned to students, returned by them to the Board, and reloaned, and so on indefinitely. Is there a more worthy cause to which one may contribute? How could means be better invested for the advancement of the Kingdom of God? Send your contributions to Prof. J. L. Cuninggim, Vanderbilt University, or to me.

THE EPWORTH ERA.

In the Epworth Era for March 21, there begins a series of "Studies in Methodist Literature," by Rev. Watson B. Duncan, Ph. D., pastor of Bethel Church, Charleston, S. C. This is a pioneer work in a promising field, and can not but be of great value especially to the young people of our Church, for whom especially these chapters are designed. In the same issue begins a series of articles on the Young People's Society, which will be of great value in clarifying our conception of just what the Epworth League is and what it is intended to accomplish in the circle of our Church organizations and activities. These serials are in line with the educational work that is being done by the Era through such splendid, scholarly works as the "Story of the Old Testament," by Professor Seay and such inspirational writings as "Wang May" and "Look Up! Lift Up!," which have appeared frequently in the Era. In the same number are given excellent programs for the observance of daily League services during the week preceeding Easter—named Comradeship Week, and observed throughout the Methodist world by the young people's societies as a part of the World Wide Young Methodism Movement.

F. S. PARKER.

Afflicted, tempted, tried as God's people may be, He still deals bountifully with them all. The humblest and poorest of them have unsearchable riches and unspeakable blessings. Life is theirs; forgiveness is theirs; acceptance is theirs; God is theirs; God is their Father; Christ is their Brother; the Spirit is their Sanctifier, Comforter and Guide. All the wealth of the world is not worth half so much as one covenant blessing.—Lutheran.

BISHOP CANDLER'S NEW BOOK.

"Wesley and His Work, or Methodism and Missions," is the name of a new volume by Bishop W. A. Candler, which has just been issued by our Publishing House at Nashville. It is composed of ten addresses delivered on various occasions by this brilliant chief pastor, which well deserve to be thus gathered together in permanent form. Whatever comes from the tongue or pen of Bishop Candler commands immediately the attention of the Methodist public. No man in the Church ranks higher than he does as a vigorous thinker, and none has a more original and striking manner of expressing his thoughts.

The volume opens with the Bishop's memorable Fraternal Address to the British Wesleyan Conference, delivered at York, England, in 1908. The other themes discussed are as follows: "John Wesley and His Work," "John Wesley, Defender of the Faith," "A Man Sent from God Whose Name was John," "The Right of Jesus to Reign," "The Day of Our Opportunity," "The Call to Go Forward," "Our Leaders and Their Labors, Past and Present," "The Denominational College and the Christian Ministry," "Some Characteristics of Methodism."

Each of these utterances is informing and suggestive, and there is not one of them which does not merit more than a casual reading. Particularly timely is the address which deals with Wesley as a Defender of the Faith, in this day when the Founder of Methodism has been represented as a sort of pioneer higher critic. The distinguished speaker shows that Wesley was catholic, but not liberalistic; that, though he manifested a brotherly spirit toward heretics, he uncompromisingly combated their teachings; that he fought earnestly for the pure faith against Antinomianism, Calvinism, Unitarianism, and Deism.

It is clearly pointed out that Mr. Wesley claimed to have brought to light no new doctrines. On this point the Bishop says: "There are two errors concerning John Wesley and Methodism of which we must beware. Some have fallen into the error that Wesley cared nothing for doctrinal truth, and that Methodism thereby was made by him a movement of doctrineless sentiment and creedless enthusiasm. Others have imagined that Wesley brought forward new and strange doctrines, never known to the Church before his time, and that from those dogmas Methodism arose. Even in his own day both these unfounded notions were held concerning him and his work, and both he denied specifically and refuted vigorously."

Wesley's own emphatic words are brought forward to show that he did not consider Methodist theology as containing anything hitherto unknown and but lately discovered. "We aver," he said, "it is the one old religion—as old as the Reformation, as old as Christianity, as old as Moses, as old as Adam." Bishop Candler's able discussion makes it obvious that those who imagine that their intellectual researches have given them a later and better message than that which has come down to us from the fathers, have no right to try to shelter under the name and fame of the mighty Man of Epworth. This address alone is worth many times the price of the interesting book in which it is contained.

TULANE FOUNDERS' DAY.

Tulane University celebrated Founders' Day with appropriate ceremonies at the Athenaeum, in this city, on Friday afternoon, March 15. Prior to the opening of the indoor exercises the faculties and students of the several departments formed in line at the Lee Circle and marched in an imposing procession to the Hall, the Seniors of Sophie Newcomb College wearing caps and gowns, but the others disregarding this formality. The music for the occasion was furnished by O'Connell's Orchestra. Two addresses were delivered, one by President Craighead who paid beautiful tributes to the several benefactors of the institution, and the other by Dr. George H. Denny, formerly president of Washington and Lee University, but now at the head of the University of Alabama.

Dr. Craighead emphasized the fact that Mr. Alexander Hutchinson's gift to Tulane was the largest legacy ever donated by a Southern man to medical education, and one of the largest ever made in any age or in any country; and for Mrs. Sophie Newcomb he claimed the distinction of having given the largest sum for the education of women in the whole history of the world. Dr. Denny's address was an illuminating discussion of the opportunities and obligations of the American college man. His view as to the character of work now being done by our institutions of learning was optimistic, and he predicted that our colleges will more and more largely mold the sentiment and shape the future of the nation. Without depreciating the leadership of the college man in industrial and economic movements, he affirmed that the greatest service that he can render is to quicken and deepen the moral, intellectual, and spiritual life of the people. All in all, the celebration, we think, was a fitting and inspiring one. Such observances not only honor those to whom honor is due, but they also stir the nobler feelings of the heart and contribute to the formation of worthy ideals.

A COMMENDABLE UNDERTAKING.

A movement is under way in Kentucky to purchase and preserve the birthplace of Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederate States of America. The Legislature of that commonwealth has made an appropriation for this purpose, and it is stated that the Daughters of the Confederacy will take the lead in the execution of this task. It is announced that the plan is to convert the homestead into a State park, and erect upon it a suitable memorial to the chieftain of the lost cause. This undertaking is a timely and most commendable one, and all the other Southern States should aid in effecting its speedy consummation. Large sums of money have been spent recently to acquire and improve the birthplace of Lincoln in the same State, and the people of the South owe it to themselves to see that the memory of Jefferson Davis is likewise honored. Though he led a forlorn hope and the principles for which he stood went down in defeat, he was the peer of any leader on either side in the great struggle, and we should leave nothing undone to show to succeeding generations our estimate of his ability and character and the service that he rendered. We have been far too negligent in preserving the history of "the storm-cradled nation, that rose and fell without a stain," and the heroic men who figured in it. We should never let a past so glorious perish from the memory of mankind.

REV. ALFRED F. SMITH, D.D.

Our monthly sermon, which appears in this issue, is by Dr. Alfred F. Smith, of Jackson, Miss. As Dr. Smith has not been long in this section, we will briefly introduce him to our readers. He was born at Charleston, Mo., in 1869; was prepared for college at the Belvue Collegiate Institute, and was graduated from Central College, the leading Methodist institution of his native State. He was licensed to preach December 27, 1887, at the age of 18, and later took a theological course at Vanderbilt University. He joined the Missouri Conference in September, 1892, and served several of its leading appointments. In 1901 he was transferred to the St. Louis Conference and was stationed at Kirkwood, in St. Louis, where he was serving when he was elected to the presidency of the Central College for Women, at Lexington, Mo., which position he held for five years. Later Dr. Smith was transferred to the Oklahoma Conference and appointed to Tulsa, spending three years in that important charge. He is now entering upon his third year as pastor of the First Methodist Church, at Jackson, Miss. (the largest and most responsible appointment in the State), where he is held in high esteem, both by his own parishioners and the general public.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Greenville District Conference (North Mississippi) will be held at Greenville, April 18-21. Bishop Murrah will preside.

A protracted meeting is in progress at Crowley, La., this week. The pastor, Rev. C. D. Atkinson, is being assisted by Rev. A. G. Shankle, of New Orleans.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, of New Iberia, La., is planning to have a series of meetings the week preceding Easter, in which several visiting preachers will take part.

Rev. J. O. Bennett, our energetic pastor at Eunice, La., is working to secure a much needed new church at that place. We pray that his efforts may be crowned with success.

The Louisiana State Music Teachers' Association will meet in this city April 18-21. Mrs. Rebecca Ellison Johnston, of Shreveport, is the accomplished president of this organization.

We are informed that Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir is preaching to large congregations at the Jennings (La.) oil field. We dare say that those who go to hear him are being greatly profited by his earnest pulpit messages.

We regret to state that Mrs. B. T. Crews, the wife of our beloved pastor at Rayne, La., has been critically ill for more than three weeks. We are requested to say that the family would appreciate the prayers of the Church in this time of anxiety.

We regret to be informed that Rev. J. S. Duke, our worthy young pastor on the Nettleton Circuit (Aberdeen District), has been afflicted recently with rheumatism and tonsillitis. But notwithstanding this, he has been doing some valuable work for the Advocate, for which he has our hearty thanks.

Rev. H. S. Spragins, of Greenwood, Miss., and Rev. O. W. Bradley, of Winona, Miss., spent some time in Memphis last week, where the Men and Religion Forward Movement was under way. The latter reports the occasion as one of unusual interest, which seemed to promise the accomplishment of great good.

After spending the winter pleasantly in San Antonio, Sister Amos Kendall has returned to her home at Houston, Texas, where her address is 1009 Tuam Avenue. She expects to go to Aberdeen, Miss., to stay awhile about the last of June or the first of July. We are grateful to Sister Kendall for kind words concerning the Advocate.

Rev. H. E. Carter, of Monticello, Miss., has been looking after the interests of the Advocate in his field, with gratifying results. He sent in on the 14th inst. four renewals and five new subscriptions. We take off our hat and make our most polite bow to this faithful itinerant, who has a habit of bringing things to pass where he has supervision.

Not content with the nice list of subscriptions recently sent in, Rev. B. F. Lewis, of Columbia, Miss., forwarded last week an additional list of five persons to whom the Advocate is to be sent, two of them new subscribers. It is needless to say that we are grateful to Brother Lewis for his continued good work to extend our circulation among his people.

We are indebted to Mrs. Joe Bailey, of Conehatta, Miss., for a list of subscribers from that community.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Booneville, Miss., has lately been doing some excellent work for the Conference organ. It is his habit to do what he does well.

Rev. J. W. Thomas is conducting revival services at the Second Methodist Church. He is doing the preaching himself, and is being greeted by good audiences.

Rev. W. P. Turner, one of our leading missionaries in Japan and presiding elder of the Hiroshima District, died on March 10. He was a Georgian and had been in the Orient since 1890.

Rev. T. J. Halfacre, of Kilmichael, Miss., requests all persons who will attend the Winona District Conference, which is to be held at that place, May 1-3, to forward their names to him at an early date.

Rev. W. W. Holmes is now happily domiciled at 5515 Hurst Street, and has begun his work as associate pastor of First Church with his accustomed zeal. His many friends may reach him by calling phone 1856, Uptown.

Rev. W. W. Moore, of Saucier, Miss., was in the city last Thursday and paid our office an appreciated visit. He was looking well, and spoke encouragingly of the work in his charge and the surrounding section.

Rev. Lastie Hoffpauir, of Oak Grove, La., has been pressing the claims of the Advocate upon his people, with gratifying results. We are grateful to him for remembering the Conference organ among his many other pastoral duties.

After fifteen months of persistent struggling against overwhelming difficulties, Rev. J. W. Booth has started the Algiers Church upward. His congregations are increasing, and interest in every department of the church is manifest.

Dr. T. B. Holloman, of Port Gibson, Miss., spent Sunday, March 10, in Vicksburg, preaching both in the morning and evening at the Washington Street Church. The people gave him a cordial welcome, and were much pleased with his pulpit ministrations.

From Slidell, La., Rev. T. D. Lipscomb writes as follows: "My work seems to be moving forward, but there is much to be done and I am kept busy. Please state my address is Slidell, La., and not Covington, La., as it appears in the Conference Annual."

The Carrollton Avenue Woman's Missionary Society has organized a division of their society at the Cambroune Mission with 12 members. This mission is one of the most thriving in New Orleans and gives promise of becoming a permanent church in the future.

The pastor, Rev. W. L. Stormont, sends us a postal card picture of our new brick church at Shelby, Miss. Evidently it is quite a credit to the town. We congratulate Brother Stormont and his choice flock upon the erection of this beautiful house of worship.

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Sidon, Miss., is preaching to increasing congregations on his charge. He has organized a Junior League and two missionary societies for the young people, and is now planning for a revival campaign. He regards the general outlook as most encouraging.

Rev. F. O. Bell, of Goodwater, Miss., writes: "I wish to say through the Advocate to the pastors of the patronizing Conferences that I would like to correspond with those who want some one to hold revival meetings in the summer. I have had several years of experience in the work."

Bishop Murrah left Jackson, Miss., for Nashville last Saturday; from there he will go to Washington, D. C., where he has an engagement to preach next Sunday. Before returning home he will preside over the Baltimore Conference, which will meet at Roanoke, Va., on March 27.

We extend thanks to the following brethren (acknowledgement not having been made elsewhere) for having sent us three or more subscribers since the last issue of the Advocate: Rev. A. F. Moore, Wall Hill, Miss.; Rev. T. J. Halfacre, Kilmichael, Miss.; Rev. E. B. Powell, Pollock, La.

The situation at Sardis, Miss., is thus summarized by Brother J. S. Carlton, a leading layman of that charge: "The church here is doing well under the pastorate of Rev. R. H. B. Gladney. The salary was increased to $1,500. There is harmony, hopefulness, and a general good feeling among us."

The ladies of the Second Methodist Church served luncheon to a number of the New Orleans pastors one day last week, after which the preachers joined Rev. J. W. Thomas, the pastor, in a house to house canvass among the residents of that part of the city, in the interests of his revival meeting.

The work in the Seashore District is moving along smoothly under the leadership of Rev. W. B. Jones, who is magnifying the office of presiding elder. He is fortunate in having the charges under his supervision well manned, which means that the battle for a successful year is in the outset half won.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, pastor of Washington Street Church, Vicksburg, attended the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Conference Church Extension Board in Jackson, on Wednesday, March 13. He reports an interesting session, and the transaction with dispatch of much important business.

Rev. W. D. Wendel, our stirring pastor at Pontotoc, Miss., has kind things to say of the Advocate, and encloses the names of a number of subscribers. Of his own field, Brother Wendel says: "We are moving along very nicely here. I have found quite an aggressive working force in this church. In fact, there is a virile type of Methodism all over this section of country."

Rev. G. W. Bachman, the faithful colporteur of the Mississippi Conferences, has been kept in doors for the past two weeks by an attack of illness. But he is now convalescent, and hopes soon to be able to get out among the people. There is no occasion, however, for the brethren to refrain from forwarding him their orders at Winona, Miss. They will be filled promptly as usual.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, the field agent, spent the fourth Sunday in February at Okolona, Miss., in the interest of the Memphis Tri-State Hospital. The Sunday school at that place subscribed $150 to the enterprise, and there is talk of the church increasing the amount to $1,000 and taking a room at the Hospital. Let the brethren open their pulpits to Brother Ellis and give him their hearty co-operation in carrying forward this great project.

Dr. J. W. Beeson reports a most gracious revival at the Meridian Male and Female Colleges, conducted by Rev. Will Huff. He says: "No definite count was kept, but there were perhaps between two and three hundred that were converted, reclaimed, and sanctified during the ten days' services. Several young men were called to preach, and a number of young men and young women professed a call to the mission field."

Rev. John W. Chisolm, the pastor of Galloway Chapel at Jackson, Miss., reports his work as moving on nicely. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, the Sunday school attendance is averaging more than 90 per cent of the enrolled members. The congregations at the preaching services are good. Brother Chisolm was booked to conduct services at the county jail last Sunday. He and his flock are wide-awake and aggressive.

"We must get our people to take and read more Methodist literature; a reading people will make an active people." So writes Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of Ackerman, Miss., in forwarding us some additional names for our subscription files. Brother Wyatt is certainly doing his part to extend the circulation of the Conference organ. He has sent us 30 subscriptions from his present charge since the first of January.

We were in error in stating in a recent issue of the Advocate that the pastor's salary at Ruleville, Miss., had this year been raised from $1,200 to $1,500. This enterprising flock paid the latter amount last year, and they have made the same assessment for 1912. Rev. O. L. Savage, who is a tireless worker and good preacher, had charge of this appointment in 1910-11; it is now being served by Rev. J. W. Raper, who is reported to be in high favor with the people.

The Franklin (La.) Church, Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor, has developed a very fine young layman in Brother R. E. Brunby. He is superintendent of a well organized Sunday school, and is planning to start other schools where opportunity invites in adjacent territory. He understands the boy problem, and is a painstaking church official. Brother Wier is preaching to larger congregations than Franklin has had in many years—possibly larger than it has ever had.

The many friends of Mrs. J. E. Rather, of Leland, Miss., who has been at the Touro Infirmary, New Orleans, for about three weeks, will be pleased to know that she is improving, having successfully undergone another serious operation. Though she is now able to sit up some, she is still quite weak and will likely continue to be so for some time yet. Let prayer be made for this elect lady, who is a loyal Methodist and a most faithful servant of the Master.

The problem of how to persuade the Sunday school children, and teachers, too, in many instances, to remain for the 11 o'clock preaching service was discussed by the New Orleans pastors at their last regular meeting. One pastor reported 137 at Sunday school and only 25 at the morning preaching service. An experiment is being planned, to be tried at one church, of adding the sermon to the Sunday school service and making it all one, and dismissing the congregation at 11:30 o'clock.

The date of the Jackson District Conference has been changed from Tuesday, May 21, to Tuesday, May 28. It will meet at Brandon, Miss., and the opening session will be held at 3:30 p.m.

Itta Bena is one of the most progressive towns in the great Mississippi Delta, and in the person of Rev. S. L. Pope, has a pastor whose faithfulness and efficiency are widely known. From this enterprising little city Brother Pope sent us a few days since a round dozen names, with instructions to enroll them on our books. This we have done, and we pray that the Advocate may prove a blessing to each of these readers as it weekly comes to hand.

We regret to announce the serious illness of Miss Christine Vandenberg, daughter of Rev. H. B. Vanlenberg, at Alexandria, La., where she was carried for medical treatment some three weeks ago. After her arrival it was found necessary to have her undergo an operation, which she stood well, but she is now suffering from an attack of malarial fever. Brother Vandenberg requests the prayers of our church people for the recovery of his daughter and for his family in this time of apprehension.

We learn with regret that Rev. T. B. Clifford, our capable and much beloved pastor at Yazoo City, Miss., does not seem to be recovering from the injuries which he sustained a short time since in a railroad wreck, as rapidly as his friends had hoped. He is now back home, after recuperating for a season in Florida, but found himself unequal to the task of preaching on Sunday, March 10. We pray that this willing and efficient worker may soon be entirely well again. We can ill afford to spare him from our active ranks.

Under date of the 13th inst., Rev. O. S. Lewis, writes as follows from Jackson, Miss.: "I have been absent from my work at Brandon for several days waiting on and nursing my father, Rev. H. P. Lewis, who has been quite sick at his home here for a week or more. We are glad to report him now as on the road to recovery. The doctor says by exercising care and prudence he will be out in ten days or two weeks. Father sends his love to all the brethren, both in and out of the ministry, and asks an interest in their prayers, that he may be restored to health, if it is God's will."

In forwarding to the Publisher a fine list of subscribers from West Point, Miss., Rev. E. S. Lewis adds: "Tell Brother Meek that the Advocate now goes into the homes of all our official members, and that the end is not yet. We had 213 at Sunday school last Sunday (March 10) and 75 at prayer meeting last night. The Home Mission Society is painting the parsonage; so we are freshening up." Great is West Point, the Queen City of the Prairies! And of Brother Lewis, we cannot say more than that he is worthy to be pastor of this generous and high-minded people.

Rev. J. E. Cunningham, the popular presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, writes: "It has been hard for the preachers to get much done in the prairies and bottoms of this district. The weather has been against us. Even yet there is little sign of spring. The farmers have done practically nothing toward this year's crop. I have met all appointments, and have found the preachers hard at work and hopeful of a good year. The churches at Amory, Houston, Okolona, and Tupelo are especially active and enthusiastic in all departments. These four preachers certainly married well." The last statement probably accounts in a large measure for the success of these brethren.

Rev. J. G. Johnson has made a favorable beginning on the Toccopalo charge, North Mississippi Conference. He has five churches: three in nice little towns, one good congregation in the country, and one weak afternoon appointment. At the latter place, however, there are some most excellent people, among them Brother P. M. Franklin who is an ardent Methodist and unusually well posted on the doctrines of the Church. This charge has been considerably weakened by deaths and removals, but the pastor is hopeful of a general revival which will raise up other active workers to take the places of those who wrought so well in bygone days. We trust that his hopes may be fully realized.

In a dictated note to the editor, bearing date of the 15th inst., Rev. J. W. Honnoll, whose serious illness at his home in Memphis was announced in last week's Advocate, says: "There is no general change in my condition. I think my symptoms are some better." We are grateful for even this little encouragement as to the condition of this noble veteran. Even in his sickness Brother Honnoll is mindful of every interest of the Church, and his letter brought a list of subscribers to the Advocate, with a remittance to correspond. May the Heavenly Father continue to have this tried and faithful servant in his gracious keeping! (Since writing the above, we have had unfavorable news from Brother Honnoll. His son, Mr. Hodges Honnoll, wrote, under date of the 18th inst., that he was apparently worse, and that the outlook was not encouraging.)

Death recently visited the home of JAMES L. BROWN and called his spirit home. He was born in Pike County, Miss., in 1853; and was married to Miss Lou Nesim in 1882. From this happy union came eight children—five girls and three boys. The oldest and youngest girls had preceded to the Glory Land. He moved to Louisiana in 1883; joined the Pine Grove church in 1885, and lived a devout Christian from then until his death. The writer was his pastor for four years, and no man was more loyal than Brother Brown. All who knew him loved him.

J. S. RUTLEDGE.

F. M. B. SISK was born Feb. 9, 1847; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1872; was married to Miss Susan Harris Nov. 15, 1877, and died at his home in Tupelo, Miss., Jan. 13, 1912. Thus we summarize for posterity the relation of our departed as to time and place, but how little of life does this record really tell! It is as though we regard mortality as all of existence. The story of our sainted dead cannot be told apart from their devotion to our Lord. Brother Sisk's deed and thought were bound together and directed by his religious conviction. Consequently he was singularly free from a time-serving spirit, and from gratuitous reproach of his fellow-man. In the midst of his family he was true to his own devotional spirit. And he ever looked upon his Church as the repository of that which is the God-given and true. A plain, unobtrusive, honest, and patriotic citizen has fallen. A nobleman of the kingdom has gone to his reward. And in his going he leaves no cloud to reproach the living, nor to shadow his future. May the angel of purity and devotion linger in the home from which he is gone until time shall leave only the fragrance of its memory to bless the world.

WM. L. DUREN.

Mrs. H. R. HUTCHISON, daughter of Rev. J. W. and Jane Maxey, was born at Fulton, Miss., Dec. 12, 1846, and died at Pontotoc, Miss., Feb. 18, 1912. Having been reared in a Methodist parsonage, she early imbibed the principles of the Christian religion, and joined the Church during childhood. She lived and died in the Church she loved. For many long years sister Hutchison was an invalid—a constant sufferer a great deal of the time. When she was equal to the occasion, she was always glad to have her pastor or any one read from God's Book and sing and pray at her bedside. She knew Jesus and put her trust in Him daily. The tender ministry of the dear husband and the faithful daughter was a sight that made glad the hearts of all who knew them. We buried the frail body near the old-home place, but God sent a convoy of angels to bear the soul to the abode of light and glory. There are left behind to mourn the loss of this good woman the husband and five daughters—Mrs. James Ballard, Enterprise, Miss.; Mrs. Earl Duncan and Mrs. Otis Caldwell, of Pontotoc, Miss.; Miss Lora, who is teaching at Geneva, Ala.; and Miss Bessie, who is teaching here in the public school. There are no people among us who are more highly respected than Brother Hutchison and his daughters. They have received the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement. May all of them meet her in that bright and happy world where there is no sorrow, no grave, no death!

W. D. WENDEL.

Mrs. MARGARET JANE RHODES, the daughter of John Orman, was born in Alabama, in March, 1832, and was married to Capt. S. D. Rhodes, Nov. 16, 1852. Their home, the most of her life, was in the Shiloh neighborhood in Rankin County, Miss. She was the mother of four children, all of whom preceded her to the other world. One son, the late Dr. John Rhodes, who died in Jackson, Miss., left a son and two daughters, the only living progeny of this elect woman. She died Jan. 20, 1912, lacking only about two months of reaching her eightieth year. Brother Rhodes is lonely and sad, indeed. Sister Rhodes was a member of the Methodist Church from her childhood, and was always faithful as a Christian. No doubt all the pastors at Shiloh for the past forty or more years have pleasant recollections of their good home and kind hospitality. After funeral services by the writer and the pastor, Brother Dickens, the remains were tenderly laid to rest in the cemetery to await a blissful resurrection.

C. McDONALD.

Sister ANNA ELIZABETH ELDER, whose maiden name was Milms, was born near Cockrum, DeSoto County, Miss., April 7, 1847. At the age of fifteen, she joined the M. E. Church, South, and continued a faithful and devoted member until death. She was happily married to A. L. Elder December, 18, 1866. Eleven children were born to bless this union. Nine are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother; two had preceded her to the better land. She passed away after a protracted illness and much suffering November 27, 1911. Her devoted husband, in feebleness and sorrow, lingers awhile on the shores of time, awaiting the summons of union again in the haven of rest. Sister Elder was a remarkable Christian woman. She was endowed with a strong intellect, which was refined by culture, and adorned with all the graces of a Christian character. Her influence for good in the community where she lived can never be told. Her devotion to her Church and its institutions was an inspiration to all with whom she came in contact. She was efficient help in the Sunday school work of the Church. On one occasion, when it became necessary, for three years she occupied the place of superintendent, filling the position with splendid ability and complete success until failing health required that she should relinquish her labor of love. She was esteemed and admired by the entire membership of the Church for whom she thus worked and prayed. No doubt but many now feel the gracious influence of her loyalty to God and devotion to duty. She was the joy and delight of the home circle, and the memory of her anxious solicitude and constant care for the comfort and happiness of those she loved will be a benediction to her children as the years go by. She died in full assurance of a home in heaven, and now rests in the midst of those she loved.

Your Best Helper

YOU work too hard on your farm if you haven't an engine. You can make more money, with much less labor, by using an IHC gasoline engine. Why not profit by the experience of other farmers? Why not let an IHC engine help you, too? Think what it means to you and your family to have the cream separator, churn, pump, feed grinder, fanning mill, thresher, woodsaw, grindstone, washing machine, and many other machines, run by an

IHC Gasoline Engine

Think of the profit you will make by the saving of work and time. Think how much more pleasant, how much more attractive your farm and home will become when the IHC engine does so much of the hard work.

IHC gasoline engines are reliable and durable. They run smoothly, year in and year out. Whatever style and size engine you want is in the IHC line, which includes: Vertical type—2, 3, 25, and 35-horse power; horizontal—1 to 50-horse power; mounted on skids—1 to 8-horse power; portable—1 to 25-horse power; traction—12 to 45-horse power; sawing, pumping, spraying, hoisting, and grinding outfits, etc. Built to operate on gas, gasoline, kerosene, distillate, or alcohol—air-cooled or water-cooled. Tidings From the Field

Opelousas, La.

When the weather and roads permit, our people attend Sunday school and preaching better than they did last year. Especially is this true of the Sunday school attendance. The parsonage has recently been put into direct communication with the city and many parts of the country by the installation of a "phone," paid for by some of these good people—and that for the rest of the year. This is not all they are doing. Every few days, even during the incessant rains and the cold, nice articles for the table were brought in—such as home-raised meat, sausage, a fine large chicken, nut cake, etc. How things would move, if all of our people were like some of them. We have recently organized a Sunday school at Lawtell, a station (a village) on the Frisco Railway, six miles west of this place. We started with some fifteen members, with more to follow. The literature has been ordered for six months. This organization was brought about by the influence of Dr. Foster and family, who live near Lawtell, and who are always ready for "every good word and work."

I. T. REAMES, P. C.

Oak Grove, La.

We have just completed our new parsonage and moved in. We are very well fixed until Conference. We were domiciled temporarily at Floyd during the erection of the parsonage. The welcome that we received from the committee when we arrived made us feel at home among them. By the time we had things shaped up in the house, we heard a knock at the door, and when we answered we found an old-fashioned pounding awaiting us. Among the things brought were a barrel of flour, sugar, coffee, lard, and lots of good things that will last for several weeks. Our first quarterly conference was held Saturday, the 9th inst. with a representative number of the official board present. Dr. Keener, our presiding elder, did not reach us, much to our disappointment, and so we had to act presiding elder for a short time. A liberal assessment was made for the support of the pastor and presiding elder. Among some of the things that we have done since Conference are the erection of a neat new parsonage after our own plan, the procuring of a new range cook stove, the securing of eight subscribers for the Advocate, the marrying of two couples, and the reception of four new members into the Church. Now, we are doing our best to save souls and build up the Church that we love; but, Doctor, it takes lots of grace and praying to keep up your courage after a great long move.

LASTIE N. HOFFPAUIR.

THE WORK AT SECOND CHURCH, BATON ROUGE.

The boys of this church are organizing a ball team to play the boys of the First Church in a match game. It is a wise adult who, in dealing with boys, still remembers the adolescent's ambition for mastery in contest games, and who allows him still to be a boy, and wisely leads him in paths of righteousness along the lines of his own inclinations and of his physical, mental, and spiritual needs.

In a small one-room building this congregation has a Sunday school enrollment of 130, and sometimes an attendance of 115. This crowded condition is forcing a movement for additional room, which no doubt will take definite shape in the near future. Probably the new addition will be an equipment for the Elementary Department.

Mr. Hal O. Cline, the superintendent, has prepared a question box to be kept on the desk at all times, to receive questions concerning such problems as may come before any class, pupil, or teacher, and to be opened and discussed at the Teachers' Council. This same enterprising young superintendent has put on "A Trip to Palestine," a contest designed to bring in new scholars. The school is to be divided into two crews for ocean liners, with captains, mates, stewards, etc., as officers. The two ships are to leave New York for Palestine and return, in a race. One new pupil by either side will move their ship forward 100 miles, and in like proportion for a larger number. When the first ship arrives on return, its work will be commended in a suitable way, and some one who has been to Palestine will be asked to address the school, giving an account of the real trip.

This school has organized an Adult Department, with Mr. S. E. Comeaux as superintendent; an Elementary Department, with Miss Stella Murphy as superintendent, and a Home Department, with Mrs. L. B. Riggs, as superintendent. All of these are faithful and tried workers in the Sunday school and other departments of the Church. Mrs. R. H. Hansy will superintend the Cradle Roll, and assist Miss Murphy generally in the Elementary work.

The young ladies have organized their class, with Miss Georgia White, daughter of the pastor, president; Miss Eula Fridge, vice president, and Mattie Thiel, secretary. They expect to fall in line with the adult class movement in Christian activity for the accomplishment of good.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

Rev. C. F. Reid, D.D.

The interdenominational Convention of men held at Winston-Salem, N. C., last month fully demonstrated that the Laymen's Missionary Movement is by no means a spent force, but, on the contrary, is better prepared than ever for its mission to the churches and the world. Its power to grip the minds of men with its great purpose is not one whit abated, and during its half decade of existence it has constantly grown in influence and has acquired vastly greater skill in conserving the enthusiasm which it creates.

The Convention was set up with great care by L. B. Padgett, State Secretary of the General Movement for North Carolina. The program was unusually strong, presenting nearly a dozen speakers, some of them men of international reputation. Beginning Sunday morning with special services in all the churches of Winston-Salem and closing Tuesday evening with addresses before a great audience by J. Campbell White and Dr. J. O. Reavis, the meetings were well attended from first to last by the flower of Winston-Salem's manhood.

The writer remained during the week for follow-up work among the Methodist churches of the city, and plans were laid for an immediate and thorough Every-member canvass in each.

AN EARNEST EXHORTATION.

(Rev. W. H. Hunter, the presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, has mailed each of his pastors the following letter, which applies equally well to others.)

Dear Brother: Two important notes have been sent you during the past month. One reminded you of action by the last Annual Conference—an order that you collect the pension money for our veterans and the widows and orphans of veterans. The first Sunday in March was appointed for that. Has the order been carried out? Last year a veteran came more than once to learn why his quarterly check was not sent him. A small, but a promised and eagerly expected, check. A debt of $6 was staring him out of countenance. A hopelessly embarrassing account—and a large one. Do we realize what is meant in that? It was a large and embarrassing account.

The financial conditions this year, some are suggesting, will call for the practice of such an economy as was known just after the war. Probably not so bad as that, but, if we postpone this pension collection until fall—why? Will it be easier then?

Let me cheer you with the story of the pastor of Jefferson Street Church, Natchez. He says: "The collection on the first Sunday resulted in my securing the amount assessed to us. It will be sent the treasurer during the week." Score one for Jefferson Street and her pastor, Watkins.

The first Sunday in March! The Conference order was for that Sunday. Will you attend to this, where there are more congregations than one, Sunday by Sunday, until you report, "Paid?"

Another note was from the treasurer of the Mission Board. Do you agree with me that it was a strong letter? Did this phrase attract you? "If this money due our mission workers is held up until fall, interest should be paid on it!" This small sum—it is not a large one—can be collected and remitted by the first of April. The Board of Missions will be saved from entangling alliances through our promptness with our people.

I have asked Bro. Crisler, the treasurer, to publish in an early April number of the Advocate the names of all our district force who have cleared up this important, this imperative matter. If the entire sum is not collected, report it as far as it goes. Shall each of us be upon the printed list?

People are busy: I meet them out after yokes of steers, after staves and hickory timber and dogwood, and after contracts for hauling and building. They have their minds upon the earnings and profits of the year. Rain hinders, but does not stop them.

Spring is opening to this rich district of Christian interests: let us take contracts in lively earnest, for earnings and profits upon our business—the highest service to which men ever are assigned!

There are more than 7,000 members within our district, surrounded by other thousands to recruit from, to increase the army. What material for the drill masters? Old and younger and very young. With equal step, and in alignment, striving together in confirmation and defense of the gospel—idea takes rich shape and color, and victorious movement.

Dear brother, let us position the people, furnish the weapons, procure the uniformity of their march.

Drill Master. Leader, Under Shepherd to the Great Captain and Shepherd, the busiest, most possible year of all your time is upon you and around you.

Back to the notes referred to above. They are: (1) The first Sunday of March shall be devoted to collection of the Conference Claimants' Fund.

(2) Equally, imperiously necessary—that the collection for Home Missions be taken by the end of March.

Let us try the spring campaign—not wait, as of old, upon the winter quarters.

W. H. HUNTLEY.

SHE STAYED IN BED.

Ingram, Texas.—"Ever since I became a woman," writes Mrs. E. M. Evans, of this place, "I suffered from womanly troubles. Last fall, I got so bad I had to stay in bed for nearly a week every month. Since I have taken Cardui, I feel better than I have for years." You can rely on Cardui. It acts on the womanly organs and helps the system to regain its normal state of health, in a natural way. Prepared especially for women, it prevents womanly pains by acting on the cause, and builds up womanly strength in a natural way. Purely vegetable. Mild, but certain in action. Try it.

NOTICE.

Any pastor desiring help in his meetings during the coming summer would do well to confer with Rev. A. R. Beasley, of the Corinth District. He is a young local preacher, very consecrated and full of the Holy Spirit. He prefers to sing, as he has studied music to a considerable degree. He purposes joining the Conference next fall, and he wants to put in his time next summer in preaching and singing, both because of the opportunity to do good and the great value the experience would be to him.

NOTES FROM NEWTON DISTRICT.

March the 2d and 3d, I was with that prince of local preachers, Brother J. C. Long, who is entering upon the last year of his third quadrennium on the Neshoba Circuit, and through whose influence Methodism in Neshoba and adjacent counties, has greatly prospered. The quarterly conference was held at Sand Town, and we were greeted by a large congregation on Saturday. All of the churches on the circuit were officially represented. With some readjustments of the apportionment among the several churches, the assessment for the pastor was fixed at the same amount as last year. Sunday was a rainy day, and but few attended the service of the sanctuary, but the Lord was present with his "little flock," and blessed the service.

Sunday night and Monday morning I was at Philadelphia. A large, appreciative congregation greeted us Sunday night, and Monday morning there was a goodly number present at the conference. Through the activities of the hustling pastor and his faithful official board, a good beginning on the new year's work has been made. The reports of the pastor and the stewards submitted to the quarterly conference were very encouraging.

I was at Waldo, on the Stallo Circuit, March 9th and 10th. I found that Brother Jones, the consecrated pastor, has made a good beginning this (his second) year on the charge. His is a circuit of magnificent distances, but he has heroically stemmed the cold and has met all of his appointments to date but two. He and his family have just moved into the new parsonage at McDonald. The house is incomplete, but it is better to live in an unfinished house than to pay house rent.

This closes my first round of quarterly conferences. Nearly every pastor in the district reports some accessions since the Annual Conference. There is good work being done in the Sunday schools; much local work in the way of church and parsonage building and improvement is also being done. In but one instance has there been any retrenchment in assessment for the pastor's salary, but in several instances there was advance made, and the financial reports for the quarter compare favorably with the reports of any previous year.

MIGHT NOT BE ALIVE.

McMinnville, Tenn.—Mrs. Ocie Jett, of this place, writes: "I don't believe I would be living to-day, if it hadn't been for Cardui. I lay in bed for 27 days, and the doctor came every day, but he did me no good. Finally, he advised an operation, but I would not consent, and instead took Cardui. Now I am going about the house doing my work, and even do my washing. Cardui worked wonders in my case. I am in better health than for five years." Cardui is a strengthening tonic for women. It relieves pain, tones up the nerves, builds strength. Try it. At your druggist's.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Mr. W. S. Holmes, Superintendent of the Sunday School of First Church, Baton Rouge, has a splendid printed program for Easter which is now being arranged for that occasion. It is entitled, "The Cross, the Tomb, the Throne," and is to be rendered by the whole school. The same program was prepared for last year, but was not given on account of the revival in progress at that time.

One teacher in the Intermediate graded literature states that she is anxious to teach over the lessons again, since she feels that she could do so much better the next time. One of the advantages of the Graded Lessons is the specializing of the teacher. Thus when a class is advanced it goes up to another teacher who teaches the same lesson taught her former class; so she becomes an expert in her department.

The Felicity Street Sunday School (New Orleans) has started a campaign to increase punctuality in attendance, and has ordered a red card printed, bearing the words, "I am late." The card is to be about two and a half by three and a half inches and is to be handed every late-comer as he enters the door, who in turn must take the card and lay it on the secretary's desk. At the close of the session these cards are to be held up before the school, the number showing how many were late. Dr. Brown, the teacher of a boy's class, invented this scheme, the efficiency of which is to be tested.

Recently a layman criticized the music of the Sunday school to the writer, saying that the same songs were sung over and over again, probably a dozen being learned in the book and these worn threadbare. We heartily agree with the brother in his criticism. Many song hooks are worn out in our Sunday schools with half of the songs never learned—pure laziness, it seems to us. For a superintendent to loll around until the Sunday school hour has arrived and then come up with no program prepared and call on the children, "to select a song," is inexcusable. We once saw this done, and as the opening hymn they called out, "God be with you till we meet again." At another place for three months every Sunday, without a break, the girl organist sang, "The King's Business." Such a leadership would not be tolerated anywhere else. What do Juniors and Primaries know about arranging programs for public worship? Our righteous soul has been vexed more than once at witnessing such a travesty on propriety and order.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

"No stimulant nor narcotic can ever do more than help us forget time and space and ourselves—all we have worth remembering," says David Starr Jordan.

Carlyle says: "A thinking man is the worst enemy the prince of darkness has." As the order of the day is scrappy reading and very little thinking, one source of danger is most apparent and should be remedied.

A class of busy matrons filled a large Sunday school choir on a Sabbath morning lately and rendered several inspiring numbers. They also organized a Home Department of their own, and mean to double their already fine membership in a few weeks by bringing joy and gladness to the sick and shut-ins.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, Myrtle, is doing a great Sunday school work in his charge. His organized class is called the "Uplifter's Class." They visit the sick and all new-comers, and see that they reach the Sunday school they should attend. He will re-organize his Sunday school at Glenfield, and will do a great work in that receptive field.

Mrs. Nehlett's class made this fine record a very rainy recent Sunday: 87 enrolled, 1 new member, present 27, collection $1.30. This class found a poor, very old man walking a long way to family and friends, paid his hotel and doctor's bill, nursed him themselves, purchased his ticket, and sent him on his way rejoicing. The men sent this word to their teacher: "His poor lonesome plight touched us and what we were privileged to do, did us more good than it did him." This is only one of the many good deeds to this progressive class' account.

A FRUITFUL DECISION DAY.

The First Methodist Church of Baton Rouge observed the first Sunday in March as Decision Day in the Sunday school, and it strikes us that the program used on that occasion might well serve as a model for other places. Beginning just after Conference Rev. W. W. Drake, the pastor, counseled with his workers, and, in a spirit of prayer, they began to draw out the hearts of their pupils to confess Christ openly and begin a life of active church membership. And in addition to this work of the superintendent and teachers, the pastor had the children in a gospel service each day at 4 p. m., for a week before the time appointed for open confession. Then, after prayerful consideration on Decision Day, 21 signed the vow of confession and applied for Church membership. The pastor then saw the parents of the children and secured their consent for them to join the Church; after which, he started them in a course of instruction preparatory to their reception on Easter Sunday. In this class are pupils all the way from the Primary Department to the Philathea Class, and some of them are already causing their parents to hunt up their letters and join with them. They are also exerting a good influence upon the other pupils, and their course is having a wholesome cumulative effect. Some such program should be observed at some time in every Sunday school.

This Will Stop Your Cough in a Hurry

Save $2 by Making This Cough Syrup at Home.

This recipe makes a pint of better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50. A few doses usually conquer the most obstinate cough—stops even whooping cough quickly. Simple as it is, no better remedy can be had at any price.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. It has a pleasant taste and lasts a family a long time. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. Has a good tonic effect, braces up the appetite, and is slightly laxative, too, which is helpful. A handy remedy for hoarseness, croup, bronchitis, asthma and all throat and lung troubles.

The effect of pine on the membranes is well known. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norwegian white pine extract, and is rich in guaiaecol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe has attained great popularity throughout the United States and Canada. It has often been imitated, though never successfully.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Smoke of Herbs Cures Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way and It Costs Nothing to Try.

This preparation of herbs, leaves, flowers and berries (containing no tobacco or habit-forming drugs) is either smoked in an ordinary clean pipe or smoking tube, and by drawing the medicated smoke into the mouth and inhaling into the lungs or sending it out through the nostrils in a perfectly natural way, the worse case of Catarrh can be eradicated.

It is not unpleasant to use, and at the same time it is entirely harmless, and can be used by man, woman or child.

Just as Catarrh is contracted by breathing cold or dust and germ-laden air, just so this balmy antiseptic smoking remedy goes to all the affected parts of the air passages of the head, nose, throat and lungs. It can readily be seen why the ordinary treatments, such as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines fail—they do not and cannot reach all the affected parts.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, choking, stopped-up feeling, colds, catarrhal headaches; if you are given to hawking and spitting, this simple yet scientific treatment should cure you.

An illustrated book which goes thoroughly into the whole question of the cause, cure and prevention of catarrh will, upon request, be sent you by Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

He will, also, mail you five days' free treatment. You will at once see that it is a wonderful remedy, and as it only costs one dollar for the regular treatment, it is within the reach of everyone. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address and the booklet and free trial package will be mailed you immediately.

REV. WILLIAM H. HOLMES.

Rev. William H. Holmes, son of John and Elizabeth Holmes, was born in Williamson County, Tenn., July 29, 1822. In his eighteenth year he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and soon thereafter was licensed to preach, and in this local relation he served the Church faithfully until about fifteen years ago, when his health failed and he was unable to preach regularly. After this, when the weather was favorable and his health would permit, he preached occasionally. In 1846 he came to Carroll County, now Montgomery, near Winona, Miss., where he was still living at his death.

He was married in 1854 to Miss Mary A. Collins, who was a true and faithful helpmeet to the day of her death, which occurred in 1897. After this he was in great loneliness, and often said he was only waiting the Lord's good time. To them were born six children, five of whom are still living, three sons and two daughters. He passed to his final reward on January 22, 1912, in his 90th year, at his old home with his daughter, Mrs. Mortimer. For more than a year before his death he was feeble in body and mind, often not knowing his own children, but at times his mind was as clear as it ever was in the years past, and he had still an abiding faith in his blessed Lord. At the last, just a few hours before his death, he said to his youngest son, "Will, it is about over, but it is all right," and soon passed away.

"Uncle Billie," for so he was called by young and old, was a true, manly man, with a brotherly spirit and a kind heart toward all. He was loved by the children and young people, and, hence, was a welcome visitor in every home he entered. He had decided convictions on religious lines, but was loved and respected by all who knew him, irrespective of social standing or creeds. He was not always understood, except by a few of his most intimate friends.

His positive nature and rough exterior often misrepresented his real feeling and heart. It was impossible for him to tolerate a sham or a religious fad. His convictions were as sacred as life; hence he could not play hide-and-seek with what he believed to be the right and truth. Majorities were as nothing to him unless he believed they were right. He did his own thinking, and did it honestly and sincerely, and lived as he thought. He always had a reason for his thinking.

He was a great reader and a close student of the Word of God. As a preacher, he was earnest, thoughtful, and impressive, developing from his extensive reading of the Word the main body of his sermons, which were instructive, helpful, and sometimes inspiring to his auditors. Neither his life nor his preaching ever lowered the standard of Christian manhood or the great principles of the Gospel. Life and religion to him were one, and he lived what he preached. Back in the eighties, when I was his pastor, he was a faithful and efficient local preacher, going to such places as the brethren thought he was needed most. And, in the revival season, he gave his time for weeks to meetings (often taking time about in the preaching), doing faithful and efficient work for his Lord. I shall never forget a sermon he preached at Mar's Hill, then on the Winona circuit, from the text, 1 Peter, 1:10, 11. He showed conclusively Christ in the prophecies of old. His description of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow was so striking and impressive that the whole congregation was moved to tears, and many came to the altar for prayers. He believed in the gospel as a truth to be believed and accepted, and he lived and preached what he believed. His end was peace. "He was not, for God took him." W. S. LAGRONE.

REV. F. M. WILLIAMS.

The Rev. Francis Marion Williams, of the Mississippi Annual Conference, was born in Robinson County, Tenn., Sept. 15, 1824, and died in Waynesboro, Miss., Feb. 16, 1912, aged 87 years, 4 months and 22 days. He joined the Methodist Church at the age of fourteen years, was licensed to preach in 1846, and joined the Tennessee Conference two years later, at Clarksville. He was transferred to the Mississippi Conference in 1866, and was superannuated in 1906. He was a preacher for 66 years, and in the active work for 60 years.

On April 19, 1852, he was married to Miss Calistia Catherine Hicks, of Hickman County, Tenn. From thence to the close of his eventful life, this faithful and worthy espousal of his youth, walked by his side, cheerfully dividing his trials and partaking of his triumphs, without murmur or the least manifestation of unseemly glorying.

To this happy union of hearts and lives eight children were given, and five survive his going away. These are: Rev. W. M. Williams of this Conference, Mrs. S. P. Grant, Mrs. W. C. Wetherbee, Mrs. J. W. Alexander, and Mrs. A. B. Kling.

As pastor and presiding elder, Brother Williams filed Paul's ideal of the faithful and successful preacher of the Gospel: "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?" Firm as the hills in his convictions, he was tender and gentle in the impression of them and his authority.

To assume he was not perplexed and often sorely tried by the perplexities incident to his high calling, would be to place him out of touch with the Master and with his brethren. And yet he passed to his reward without a festering wound in his own spirit, or a shadowy picture of church life in the minds of his children. For place, and for silver and gold, he substituted in their minds and hearts the hope of the glorious resurrection.

As a preacher of the Gospel he carried the highest qualification in his own mind and heart: supreme love for God and equal love for his brethren with that which he had for himself. And his attachment for God and for man was most sensitive and discriminating; he would not suffer a reflection upon the cause and honor of his Lord, nor brook an injustice to a brother. If at any time righteousness was countered by thought or deed, it was an error of the head and not a prompting of his great heart. And if he ever felt the sting of an injustice done himself, his sturdy manliness, re-inforced by the grace of God, saved him from the sin of retaliation. Like the weather vane, his purposes ever pointed to the recompense of the reward of the faithful, and cross currents only disturbed the even flow of his life for the moment, and the trend reappeared.

For these reasons he has left his brethren at peace with his sacred memory, and lodged in their hearts earnest prayers for those who were so near and dear to him. The elderly people loved and trusted him beyond any demand he ever thought of making upon them, and the children loved and associated with him as a personal friend.

His going away seemed painless. For days his stay on earth was only the mechanical movement of a great constitution, after the reserve had been cut off. He was unconscious of the sorrowing environment, and yet the voice of Sister Williams, whose life had become so much of himself, seemed to touch a conscious cord out of the reach of all others. To those of us who waited by his side he seemed a strange connecting link between time and eternity; still in the body with us, his conversation was with those who had preceded him to that "rest that remaineth to the people of God."

We laid him away in the acre of God at Waynesboro, Miss., a place made sacred to us all by the dust of our own sainted Godfrey and Ware, to sleep until the trump of God shall awake him to glory. Upon his sleeping dust we deposit the flowers of hope, and bedew them with our tears of sorrow. J. M. WEEMS.

A LETTER FROM VANDERBILT.

Dear Brother Week: The Missionary Institute was held here in Wesley Hall, March 13. This is only one of the great gatherings that we have had in Nashville within the past few months. The Men and Religion Forward Movement, held here in the fall, was one of the greatest campaigns I have ever witnessed. We have had the opportunity of hearing great men speak every few days. Already this session, we have had visits from Dr. Wilbur F. Craft, Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Gregory, from Germany, Bishop Quayle, and others.

The theological studies have opened up a new field of thought for me and have deepened my convictions and enlarged my vision. There is a great deal of talk about "higher criticism" and such things, but the work here has given me both a vision of my work and my message to mankind. I feel that my spiritual life has been enriched and my intellectual life broadened. The Professors are men of thought, of learning, but most of all, men of God. They have made the courses hard, but they sympathize with the students and make them feel that their grades do not count for so much after all, but that the great thing is to cultivate a "Master passion for men." Just to associate with them is a great education.

The atmosphere of Wesley Hall is as clean and high toned as any I have ever been in. The personnel of the student body in this department is far above that of any I have ever seen. The men are the pick of Southern Methodism. They came here to prepare for work and a spirit of earnestness and brotherly co-operation prevails.

While I was in school at Millsaps, there were between thirty and fifty men there studying for the ministry. Only two of that number ever came here, and only one of them finished the course. Mississippi is far behind the other States in her representation here, and I feel that she is the loser thereby. I think it is a mistake to rush into the work and not take a theological course. The increased capacity for influencing the thought of men and of impressing them for good, the new ideas, the modern methods, and the catholic spirit taught here, would be worth far more than three, or even ten years' work, without them. More of our preachers would take advantage of this course here if they really knew what it is, I am sure. I am loyal to Mississippi and I want to see her get her share of the advantages that are here for her. I wish every man in Millsaps who intends to preach could take two or three years' work here in Wesley Hall.

•TRIBUTE OF A FRIEND.

In memory of Miss SUE JONES, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ike Jones, Black Hawk, Miss., who died at Carlsbad, Tex., Feb. 26, 1912.

In early womanhood, God has seen fit to call home this beautiful life from among us. Yes, He only loaned her to us for a while, that we might be made better by the noble life that she lived. While her last moments were spent in suffering, she bore it calmly and patiently, without a murmur or complaint. When she saw that her days and hours were few, she willingly submitted to God's will, and sent sweet messages to each of her loved ones at home, assuring them that they had done all for her that they could, and that she would soon be at home with Jesus, where she would always be watching and waiting for each of them to come. Of course, death always seems sad, but doubly so when a bright young life, full of hope, anxious to live a life of usefulness in the world, is suddenly taken away. We cannot understand just why God took her. The finite mind cannot comprehend the providence of God, and only those who have come in close touch with Jesus can really believe that God ever notes the fall of the sparrow.

Miss Sue had almost completed her education. She would have graduated with the 1912 class at the I. I. & C., but had to give up her work about three months before the close of school on account of ill health. She was loved devotedly by the student body. Her room-mate, for four years, said that she never seemed to think of herself, but was a loving Samaritan in the school, comforting and cheering the home-sick girls.

Upon one occasion, which was a red letter day in her life, in Rochester, N. Y., where she was sent as a delegate by the Student Volunteer Band of her college, a devoted mother's prayer was answered. Assembled one morning with a few young ladies in prayer, she yielded to the call of Jesus and then and there pledged herself to become a missionary. Therefore, not only her loved ones and friends, but the Church has sustained a great loss. But Miss Sue was a jewel too rare and a flower too beautiful to remain with us long, so our loving Savior called her home to reign with Him on high. She was always such an obedient daughter, a loving sister and a true friend. May the loved ones left behind so live that they shall meet her in the Father's house of many mansions!

Mrs. J. H. BELL.

MRS. LULA RHEA SHAW.

Whereas, on March 5, 1912, our Heavenly Father called home the spirit of our beloved member and co-laborer, Mrs. Lula Rhea Shaw; and whereas, we, the ladies of the Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, at Robinsonville, Miss., recognized in her life the purity, beauty, and strength of a noble Christian womanhood; therefore be it Resolved:

First—That we hereby express a deep sense of loss to our Society.

Second—That by the example of her Christian life our lives have been enriched, and that, though we shall greatly miss our beloved sister, we bow in submission to the divine will, and rejoice in the hope of meeting her again in heaven.

Third—That we shall ever revere her memory, and we leave this as an expression of our love and esteem.

Fourth—That we offer our sincere sympathy to the bereaved husband, mother, and other loved ones, commending them to the care of the loving Father.

Fifth—That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Auxiliary, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Signed by Miss Julia Jones, Mrs. F. K. Shetford, Mrs. E. T. Woolfolk, Committee.

Let not future things disturb thee, for thou wilt come to them if it shall be necessary, having with thee the same reason which thou now usest for present things.—M. Antonius.
